The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand sufficiently seconded? Apparently it is, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, a point of order—or, rather, I ask for information first, and then I shall make a point of order. Does the Chair rule that there was a sufficient demand for a roll call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so ruled.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am not disposed to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, and so I shall let it go.

The PRESIDNG OFFCER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], but he authorized me to vote without regard to the pair, and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SCHALL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is ill and confined to his home.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is detained from the Senate on official business. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—16

Black	Caraway	Harrison	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Dale	Heflin	Walsh, Mont.
Brookhart	George	Mayfield	Waterman
Bruce	Harris	Nye	Wheeler

NAYS—49

Barkley	Gerry	Moses	Smoot

Deneen	LaFollette	Ransdell	Tyson
Dill	Larrazolo	Reed, Mo.
Gillett	McLean	Robinson, Ark.

So the Senate refused to take a recess.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16878) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know what the bill is. I should like to ascertain.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is House bill 16878, a pension bill.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to have the bill read or to know something about it before we are called upon to act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill can not be read. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BINGHAM. I inquire what is the question upon which we are about to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate insist upon its amendments to House bill 16878, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD'S name was called). I should like to repeat the announcement of the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] on account of illness.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent.

The result was announced—yeas 63, nays none, as follows:

YEAS—63

Barkley	Edwards	McKellar	Sheppard
Bingham	Fess	McMaster	Shortridge
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Blaine	Frazier	Mayfield	Smoot
Blease	George	Moses	Swanson
Bratton	Gerry	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Glass	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Glenn	Nye	Trammell
Bruce	Goff	Oddie	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Overman	Wagner
Caraway	Harrison	Pine	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Dale	Keyes	Sackett	Wheeler
Edge	King	Schall

NOT VOTING—32

Ashurst	Deneen	Greene	Hayden
Bayard	Dill	Harris	Howell
Borah	Gillett	Hastings	Kendrick
Burton	Gould	Hawes	LaFollette

Larrazolo	Phipps	Shipstead	Stephens
McLean	Pittman	Simmons	Tydings
Metcalf	Ransdell	Steck	Tyson
Neely	Reed, Mo.	Steiwer	Walsh, Mass.

So the motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the Senate the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. STECK].

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to reconsider the vote whereby the first committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. To save the time of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a conference report submitted this morning on Senate bill 2366.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If it leads to any debate, I shall have to object. I suspect it might.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2366) to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I object.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest that the Senator move to take it up.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 2366.

Mr. BLACK. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand seconded? [A pause.] Not a sufficient number have seconded the demand.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those opposed to the yeas and nays will raise their hands. [A pause.] The Chair will state that the rules require only one-fifth of the Members present to second the demand for a roll call. That is not necessarily to be determined by a show of the other side. However, the Chair is going to order that the roll be called this time. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There seems to be some confusion about what the vote is on. It is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] to take up the conference report on Senate bill 2366. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The legislative clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is ill, and confined to his home. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—21

Black	Dale	Hawes	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Frazier	Heflin	Wagner
Blease	George	McMaster	Waterman
Brookhart	Glass	Mayfield
Copeland	Harris	Nye

So Mr. BLAINE's motion was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee about the first item in the bill. I have sought information in the hearings, but I do not think the Senate committee had any hearings. Am I right about that?

Mr. WARREN. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. HARRISON. The first item on page 2, Title I—"Legislative, Senate"—where we seek to pay William A. Folger for extra and expert services rendered the Committee on Pensions during the second session of the Seventieth Congress as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, fiscal year 1929, $1,200. I do not think the committee had any hearings.

Mr. WARREN. So far as that is concerned, as the Senator very well knows, for many years we have had a man come from the Pension Office each year to assist the Pensions Committee of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. What does this man, Folger, do? I am trying to get a general idea of the services he performs.

Mr. WARREN. I invite the Senator to attend some of the meetings of the committee, and be really industrious for a time, to acquaint himself with these matters.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to ask the Senator from Utah about this proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I know what the Senator from Mississippi is undertaking to do. I know that he knows just about as much about this amendment as I do.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; the Senator does. I will say to the Senator, however, that this item has been in every appropriation bill for the last 20 years—not for this particular man, but for this particular service. He has furnished the Committee on Pensions with a report upon every pension bill that was referred to it, as found in the Pension Office. He has to collate information on every bill amending the pension laws, stating what it will cost, and why it will cost the amount that he estimates. That is his particular work, and he is an experienced man along that line. The Senator, however, knew all that.

Mr. HARRISON. Why was not this item carried in the House bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Because this is a Senate item. This man has nothing whatever to do with the House.

Mr. HARRISON. How long has he been in the service of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. I think about 30 years.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator recall whether he came from Utah or from Mississippi? [A pause.] I think the Senate is entitled to all the information it can get with reference to these various items. This is an important proposition. We shall have to vote on it. Of course, it may appear to some Senators that $1,200 is not much, but $1,200 is a lot of money.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I hate to accuse the Senator from Utah of anything that smacks of wrongdoing, but it looks to me like he is trying to withhold from this body information that he ought to be required to furnish to it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I have heard it suggested that this gentleman has another job. Has he another job?

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WARREN. What business have we transacted since the last call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No business has been transacted.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, we declined to take up a conference report. Business has been transacted.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McMaster	Shortridge
Barkley	Frazier	Mayfield	Smith
Bingham	George	Moses	Smoot
Black	Glass	Norbeck	Steiwer
Blaine	Glenn	Norris	Swanson
Blease	Goff	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Hale	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Harrison	Overman	Trammell
Capper	Hawes	Pine	Vandenberg
Copeland	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Wagner
Couzens	Heflin	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Curtis	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Dale	Jones	Sackett	Watson
Edge	Keyes	Schall	Wheeler
Fess	King	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that was the first amendment. The next amendment is:

For payment to Guy E. Ives for services rendered the Senate and committees thereof, fiscal year 1929, $600.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that that amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. HARRISON. I know Mr. Ives; I know he is a competent man, as was Mr. Folger, but I am just wondering why Mr. Folger is paid $1,200 and Mr. Ives $600. I want the Senator from Utah, a member of the committee, to explain this discrepancy, if he can, if the committee got any information about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Ives does not give one-half the time Mr. Folger does.

Mr. HARRISON. They both get the same salary per month?

Mr. SMOOT. The services of one are more than those of the other.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator stated that, but I think if he will look he will see that he is wrong in that assertion.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to help the Senator look. He looked at this long enough without my helping him.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator certainly would not make a statement to the Senate that they both got the same salary if they did not. Is the Senator sure they both get the same salary?

Mr. SMOOT (from his seat). I did not say that.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know where we are to get this information.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. COUZENS. Is not the Senator supposed to rise when he is speaking in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is well taken.

Mr. HARRISON. When a point of order such as that is made, and it is held to be well taken, is it not then the duty of the Senator to rise?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When he addresses the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, I will ask the Senator from Utah if the salaries of Mr. Folger and Mr. Ives are the same; that is, if the hearings before the Senate committee disclosed that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. They did not.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator want to have the salaries reapportioned?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I am very well satisfied with the salaries. I did not understand the Senator from Utah in answer to the question.

Mr. President, I am sorry that the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is not in the Chamber; but the Senator from Michigan Mr. [VANDENBERG] is here. We see what we are up against with reference to this legislation. I am hopeful that the steering committee, which has put on the program the reapportionment bill to be taken up as the next order of business, can see the situation we are up against. I dislike to try to find out so much about these many paragraphs, but I state that I am going to find out about them if I possibly can. I dislike to ask the questions of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is always so glad to answer every question, out of consideration for him. I know the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is always glad to answer questions, and consequently I do not have much sympathy for him. But I say that, so far as it is within my power—and I think there are other Senators here who take the same position—in view of the fact that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate did not give the consideration to the reapportionment bill that it deserved, and the time that necessarily should be taken in the discussion of such a question as that, it can not possibly pass during the remaining days of this session.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator really believe that there are Senators enough here to prevent the passage of the reapportionment bill?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Utah, who has been here since a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, really believes that the reapportionment bill, in view of the situation here, has any possible chance of passing at this session, then he has not the judgment I think he has. I ask the Senator if he thinks it possible to pass that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the Senator if he thought it was impossible to pass it.

Mr. HARRISON. I know it is impossible to pass it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator knows that, of course there is no need of my expressing an opinion. I was in hopes it could pass, but if the Senator has even 10 or 12 Senators who feel as he feels, who have made up their minds that they will not allow the bill to be passed, I am quite sure it could not pass.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the Senator would see it in that way, and I had hoped the steering committee would see it that way. I was hopeful that the Senator from Michigan, who has made a great and gallant fight because he believes in this particular reapportionment bill, would see the situation in that light. I know that if he did not regard the bill as he does, he would not be advocating it. He has used every possible effort to bring it before the Senate, but I do not think it is possible for him to do that, and it is just clogging up the wheels here.

I had hoped that the Senator from Michigan might consent to having the bill referred back to the Committee on Commerce, or give us assurance that he would not press for its consideration at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not for a moment think that the Senator from Michigan is asking anything but what he thinks is absolutely fair and right?

Mr. HARRISON. I just said that the Senator from Michigan is sincere and conscientious in his efforts to have the legislation become a law, but it matters not what his efforts may be. We have seen for the last four weeks or more how he has endeavored to get it before the Senate, and because of the condition of the calendar he could not. I hope that the Senator will permit the reapportionment bill to go to the committee, so that we can get along in an orderly way.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi one or two very frank questions?

Mr. HARRISON. I will answer them just as candidly as I know how.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will ask them good-naturedly as well as frankly. But I ask them with great earnestness. Does the Senator mean that it is his purpose to invoke all possible of the technical and dilatory rules of the Senate in order to prevent an expression by roll call on the part of the Senate upon the constitutional question involved in the reapportionment bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely, and there are others who believe as I do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator think that by the invocation of those rules in such obstructive fashion he can prevent the Senate of the United States from reaching an expression upon the reapportionment bill?

Mr. HARRISON. We have before us now the second deficiency appropriation bill of 200 pages which touches every agency of the Government. If an explanation of the innumerable items therein contained is demanded, I think it would take six weeks at least for us to get through with that measure, and we have only three or four days yet remaining; so I am sure the Senator could not possibly get his bill up. Therefore, holding it here as he is attempting to do, he is clogging the wheels of the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield the floor to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the last thing in the world I would be willing to do would be to take the responsibility upon myself for needlessly defeating these great supply bills upon which the uninterrupted maintenance of the Government depends. But apparently the Senator from Mississippi and those who agree with him in their opposition to constitutional reapportionment are quite willing to take the responsibility for defeating the very revenues of the Government in order to protect their unwarranted representation in Congress, although they can not maintain their contention for the representation which they thus protect. It is indeed a sordid contemplation.

I repeat that I would be unwilling to take the responsibility for holding up the supply bills when the only possible net result would be to defeat not only those bills but the reapportionment bill as well, so that at the end of the entire session all that we could have would be a total and complete failure of everything.

Mr. President, in length of service I am a very young Member of the Senate. I am in no position to assess the ability of the Senator from Mississippi and his associates to prolong these operations in the fashion he has so irritatingly exemplified the last few hours. Therefore I have consulted those in whose judgment I have great reliance and I am bound to pay the Senator from Mississippi the compliment of saying to him that there is apparently a unanimous opinion upon this side of the Chamber that he has the fortitude and the genius and the imagination and the perversity which is amply sufficient to accomplish precisely the result he prophesies. Therefore I am bound to consider that the inevitable net result of the proceedings as it now goes on, if uninterrupted, is the defeat, not only of reapportionment but also of other great measures, vital to the Government, which otherwise may carry.

During this afternoon, anticipating precisely the situation which now exists, I made other inquiries. I am not at liberty to indicate their nature in detail, but I am able to say with considerable confidence that, in my judgment, if the reapportionment measure and the census measure are recommitted to the Commerce Committee, they will come back out of the committee early in the special session of the Congress and in a sufficient potentiality and with adequate authority so that inevitably in the special session we shall have this belated acknowledgment of the constitutional rights of 32,000,000 disfranchised Americans.

Mr. President, in proposing a unanimous-consent agreement, which I shall do and which leads to this net result, I express very great regret, I express a very keen disappointment, a certain degree of most unwelcome disillusionment, that it is possible that the first constitutional responsibility in the great charter upon which our representative government is framed and functions not only can be ignored and spurned for eight sterile years but that when at last the Senate of the United States is forced for the first time in 18 years to confront it, there is a convenient maze of Senate rules which can prevent it and there is actually an insufferable failure to look with seriousness upon the thing which I have brought to the bar of the Senate. On the contrary, it is treated with mockery. I do not think the people of the United States will contemplate this ugly spectacle with any enthusiasm or approval. I want the country to understand what is happening to their Constitution in the forum foresworn to its defense. It is entirely possible that the constituents of some of my distinguished friends across the aisle who have led in this aggravated filibuster may be satisfied; but in the long run, Mr. President, I very much doubt whether the American people, regardless of their self-interests and regardless of the State in which they live, will be willing to subordinate this essential representative principle of government which has been outrageously sacrificed for the last eight years and is sacrificed again to-day.

Oh, it is an easy thing, a very, very, easy thing, to contemplate this as a mere matter of casual mathematics and something which has no serious purport in our constitutional scheme of things. But it is vastly more. It involves the very roots of the institutions of the Republic. I wish I had Edwin Markham's poignant poem here describing the fall of the Bell Tower of Venice and indicating with terrible eloquence how a tremendous structure can be eaten away by insignificant insects beneath the ground in the basic timbers, until the work of a thousand years can fall in a single tragic moment. There is this analogy. One can never tell when a breach in the continuity of constitutional warrants will lead to a breach so much broader in the net result that ultimately the entire structure suffers.

If I speak earnestly it is because I feel earnestly.

Mr. President, I believe in the eighteenth amendment and I happen to be one of those who practices what he preaches. I have applauded many a time the devotionals that have been poured out to the eighteenth amendment by some of my friends across the aisle who join to-day in making it impossible to have a roll call upon reapportionment. But I want to say in this testimony to-night that so far as I am concerned we can not approach the Constitution of the United States merely from the back door via only the eighteenth amendment and stopping there. We have got to approach it from the front end too, and when we do we reach Article No. 1, and Article No. 1 insists that the representatives in the Congress of the United States shall be apportioned according to the numbers of the people, and that has not been done for eight years. It is about time we gave our dependable fidelities to the entire document. Anything less is hypocrisy and can not.

There is involved in the decision which we are about to make not only the disfranchised 32,000,000 people who are not represented in this body, but there also is involved the constitutionality of the Electoral College which is equally impaired and outraged. There is involved the fundamental fidelity and validity of the whole theory of American representative Government. It is almost impossible for me to believe my ears when Senators rise and say that they are willing to resort to parliamentary subterfuge in order to prevent a roll call; to prevent the free expression of the American Senate on whether or not it wants representative Government maintained pursuant to the theory of the Constitution.

Taxation without representation is tyranny, it was said when the fathers of the Republic carried forward the vivid, initial adventure of which we are the beneficiaries. Taxation without representation is just as much tyranny to-day as it ever was, and those who are victimized will not forever be satisfied with the answer that the rules of the Senate—rules written in the name of freedom of debate—prevent them from having an opportunity to record the opinion of their Congress as to whether or not their constitutional guaranties shall be preserved. There is something wrong with such rules, and there is particularly something wrong with those short sessions which permit such a checkmate upon Government functions.

In the face of the situation, it may well be imagined with what feeling I make this proposal. I make it in the face of unescapable necessity. I make it acknowledging the baneful power of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and those associated with him to use the rules in order to prevent all legislation unless this is done. I make it with the promise that reapportionment will reappear in the next Congress in the extra session and stay before the bar of the Senate until it is acted upon. I make it with the assurance from others that there will be recruitments and support for the effort which will then be made, and made successfully. I make it in the mature belief that it is the surest way to save these constitutional warrants.

To complete the situation, I submit this unanimous-consent agreement——

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I make just one observation, if the Senator will pardon me? I hope the Senator will not feel it necessary to tie up the census bill with the reapportionment bill. I do not see any necessity for a motion to recommit those bills, and I hope the Senator may not feel it necessary to do that.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator that if my colleague does not do so, I will do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I submit the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. BRUCE. Even the senior Senator from Michigan can not speak for the unanimity of the Senate.

Mr. COUZENS. No; but he can do just as the Senator from Mississippi has done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reapportionment bill and the pending census bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I say again what I said a moment ago. I do not see why the census bill should necessarily be tied up to the reapportionment bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It may come out separately and it may not. I can not permit the reapportionment bill to be set aside in this fashion without also setting aside the census bill, because the census has only one constitutional purpose and that is as a basis for reapportionment. We have had our last anti-constitutional census if I can prevent it.

Mr. BRUCE. But what I mean to say is that the other night, to all appearances, the Senate was ready to pass the census bill in advance of the passage of the reapportionment bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say to the Senator that the census bill could not be passed at this session unless the Senator from Michigan would agree not to offer his bill to it as an amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct. It is impossible to pass it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Nobody would agree to limit the debate on that bill, because if we did so then the Senator from Michigan would offer his amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am in favor of reapportionment, and I think we can get together on it in another session.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his enthusiasm.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not objecting to those States which are entitled to more representation having it, but we differ somewhat on the method as to how the result shall be brought about, as my colleague pointed out the other night.

Mr. BRUCE. I drop the subject, Mr. President.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, after hearing the remarkably patriotic address of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], I am amazed beyond words that he would pull down the flag and surrender as he has. The Senator waited until he saw the whites of the eyes of the enemy, and then he turned around and ran away. I am amazed at the Senator. Of course, we must have reapportionment; it is our constitutional duty to provide it; and if the Senator from Michigan is not willing to have it now, I am going to do my part to have this Congress do its constitutional duty. Therefore I object to the proposal of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am deeply sorry that the Senator from New York objects to that course. I move that the bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress and the census bill (H. R. 393) be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Mississippi is out of order, because the bill to which he refers is not before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. By a majority vote, I suggest it may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the bill should be laid before the Senate by a majority vote, then the Senator's motion will be in order, but the bill is not before the Senate at the present time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has already discussed this proposition. The bills are really under consideration, in a way, and the Senator from Mississippi wants to move to refer them to the committee, in keeping with the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent—and in making this request, of course, I am relying upon the fact that I know the Senator from Michigan and other Senators who have expressed themselves as in favor of sending the bill to the committee will cooperate—that the bill now being considered be temporarily laid aside and that the census bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. WATERMAN. I object.

Mr. HEFLIN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Alabama to withhold his motion just for a few moments.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will withhold the motion for a moment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in view of one or two statements which have been made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and without having any desire or intention of delaying the Senate longer at this time, I wish to say that I feel it necessary to make a statement with reference to my position on reapportionment.

I believe in reapportionment every 10 years. I do not agree with the Senator that the Constitution is mandatory to that effect. It is my judgment that it is not mandatory. The Constitution does not say, as has been suggested here, that there shall be a reapportionment every 10 years. The Senator made the statement that we were objecting to a constitutional reapportionment. I do not object to a constitutional reapportionment, but I object to an unconstitutional reapportionment, and that is what is offered in the bill which has been before the Senate.

I state to the Senator and to the Senate now that after the census shall have been taken I shall join in an effort to bring about a reapportionment according to a fair, equitable, and just method, but not according to the method of major fractions, which is unfair and unjust to the people of the smaller States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. I want to commend the statement that the Senator is now making. It has been sought to create the impression in the country at large that the Senators on this side who are opposing this measure are opposed to reapportionment, when we are opposed only to the method proposed, and believe that it will work an injustice to some of the States that are as heartily in favor of reapportionment as are the other States. Besides that, it involves in it a method of reapportionment that is not contemplated by the Constitution.

Mr. BLACK. Yes, sir. The statement is correct that there has been a deliberate effort made to convince the public that those of us who are opposed to this bill are opposed to reapportionment. There was in the Washington Post to-day an editorial to that effect, which is untrue. I do not oppose reapportionment. I believe that it should occur every 10 years. I am willing to join the Senator from Michigan or the Senators from any other State, after a census shall have been taken, in securing a reapportionment, but I deny that the Constitution requires me to stand up in the Senate and vote for a measure proposing to turn the method of computation over to the Secretary of Commerce. How do we know who the Secretary of Commerce will be? How do we know the method he will adopt? We do know that in the last census the States of Mississippi, New Mexico, Ohio, and Texas lost a Representative each, although they were entitled to that Representative under the system of major fractions. There is exactly the statement that was made by the Assistant Director of the Census.

I simply want to make it clear, so that even the Washington Post can understand me, that I am not opposing reapportionment. The Washington Post selected a part of one sentence of a statement I made last week, and left out the remainder of the sentence, concealing the real view that I entertained. I do not know why the Washington Post should have done that, unless it is in the habit of concealing and aiding others in the concealment of other things; but I do know that in that editorial they concealed my real views by taking a part of the statement I made.

Now I wish to repeat, so that there can be no doubt about it, that I favor the reapportionment every 10 years. I shall vote for a reapportionment after the census shall have been made even if it takes Representatives away from my State. I have no sympathy in the slightest degree with any effort to defeat that which I believe to be implied in the Constitution, a reapportionment every 10 years.

I think it is unjust and wrong to deprive the State of Michigan and the State of Florida and the State of California or any other State of increased representation which they should have, if they have an increase in population; but I think it is just as unfair and unjust to attempt to cram a method down the throats of the people of this country which does not give a just apportionment and at the same time to couple with it an effort to turn it over to the Secretary of Commerce, who will determine the method of computation from a partisan standpoint.

If Congress has become so weak, so ignoble, that it is willing to turn over to a Secretary of Commerce or any other assistant executive or bureau the most sacred right that is given Congress in determining what shall be the proper proportion of representation from a State, then, I think it is time to abolish Congress by an amendment just as Congress is attempting to amend the Constitution by this unjust, unconstitutional measure which has been pending here.

I have made this statement for this reason, and then I shall be through: The intimation has been made that those of us who oppose this measure are opposing obedience to the Constitution. I say that the method which is adopted in the so-called reapportionment bill is unconstitutional and is an absolute robbery of the rights of Congress and the prerogatives which are given to the Congress by the Constitution itself. I do not think that any man can hold up his hand and swear to obey the Constitution and at the same time vote for the pernicious measure which it has been sought to pass through the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am heartily and earnestly in favor of the reapportionment bill, and also in favor of the census bill, but I think I have learned to appreciate a situation in the Senate when it confronts us. I have had some little experience along that line. A few years ago I held out for a bill practically all through the session until a few days before its close, when the situation became very much as it is now.

Then I realized that it was absolutely impossible to secure the passage of that bill, and when I came to that conclusion I was perfectly willing to give it up. In the interest of other legislation it was absolutely necessary to do so.

I am absolutely convinced that it is impossible to pass the reapportionment bill at this session. I have also talked to several Senators and find that they are unwilling to allow the census bill to pass until the reapportionment bill shall be up for consideration with a chance of passage. So, recognizing the situation which confronts us, and that we are going to lose other important legislation without securing the passage of either of these bills, it seems to me that it is wise upon the part of Senators of the United States to recognize the situation and accept it as it is.

I know that the Senator from New York is interested in radio legislation. I am also interested in that legislation. It appears to me that there is much more likelihood of enacting that measure than any other controverted legislation, and if the reapportionment bill and the census bill be kept before the Senate, I can see no possible chance for the radio bill, in which the Senator from New York, as well as other Senators, is so much interested.

As I have said, with these two measures out of the way, it would seem to me that we ought, without very serious trouble, to act upon the other legislation. I appeal to the Senator from New York in the interest of legislation that is essential that he do not object to the proposal that has been submitted to the Senate. I myself think it is wise under all the circumstances, much as I should like to have the reapportionment bill pass. The State of Washington has been deprived of a Representative in Congress, to which it is entitled, for practically 20 years. Of course, I would do nothing that would sacrifice the interests of that State; if I thought that it would promote the State's interests by continuing to urge the attempt to pass the reapportionment bill, I would do that; but I think it is not only useless but it threatens the defeat of other important legislation which otherwise would pass. So I appeal to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado to allow to be taken the action which has been proposed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think perhaps the Senator from Washington is somewhat confused as to my attitude toward the radio bill. I am perfectly willing to have the radio bill passed with certain modifications.

Mr. JONES. That is what the Senator from Washington understood; and he had hoped that possibly the bill could be modified in such a way as to meet the approval of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very glad to hear what suggestions are to be made about modifications.

Mr. JONES. Of course, I do not know. I am not on the committee that has that bill in charge.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not think the impression ought to go out that every Senator who is opposed to this reapportionment bill is opposed to reapportionment. I do not exactly know what effect it will have on my State. I have heard the assertion made that it may deprive Virginia of a Representative. I do not think that is especially important. I am convinced that 9 Representatives from the State of Virginia would be just as competent to take care of the interests of that Commonwealth as 10 Representatives. I think the Congress of the United States should have attended to its constitutional duty and have passed a reapportionment bill at the required time. I think the Congress of the United States ought now to do its constitutional duty in the premises, and not delegate it to some executive department of the Government.

So the assumption of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] or any other Senator that those who are opposed to this particular reapportionment bill are opposed to constitutional reapportionment is an inaccuracy of conclusion. I am in favor of reapportionment, but I am not in favor of abandoning my constitutional privilege or duty to any executive officer of the Government; and I may add that I have not participated in any of these strategic maneuvers here to-night to defer matters. I have voted to go right along with the business of the Senate.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, this matter seems to be presented to the Senate as one of the utmost importance—a matter about which we are to take some position now, or, failing to take that position, we are remiss in our conduct.

Mr. President, this matter is not only not of the slightest importance to the Senate at this time, but it is absolutely impossible for us constitutionally to take any action on it. The only way in which the Senate can act now is to reapportion on the basis of the 1920 census; and before that could be put into effect we would have the 1930 census, and then it would be beyond our action.

No matter what Congress may have done or may have failed to do in the past, I want to say now to my distinguished friend from Michigan that I was very greatly interested in what he said about the sanctity of the Constitution. I consider that he made a very able address. I am not referring to what he said to-night, but to what he said the other day. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Outside of that, it is all right.

Mr. DALE. What he said to-night is all right, too, for that matter. I think he was very able and very courteous, and I commend him for the magnificent address that he made to-night, and I stand just where he stands as to the sanctity of the Constitution. That, however, is in the past——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Eight years past.

Mr. DALE. And we can not remedy that, and that is none of our business. We are asked to come in here and pass a reapportionment bill that has no effect whatsoever. We can not tell the Seventy-first Congress what they are going to do about reapportionment. It is none of our business.

I am, however, considerably interested in what the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. JONES] has said, and what the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is a member of that committee, has said. I have been greatly interested in what the chairman of that committee said years ago about reapportionment. I say this with all due respect to both the Senator from Washington and the Senator from New York: They know that the Commerce Committee did not give one minute's consideration to this bill; and I am going to assume to say, knowing the good judgment of the Senator from Washington and the Senator from New York, that if they would give some consideration to the bill that is before us, if they would study this bill, they would both say it is the worst apology for a reapportionment bill that has been presented to Congress in 140 years.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. DALE. For half a century Congress attempted to pass reapportionment bills without major fractions. They studied the subject, and the ablest men in Congress spoke about the question, not taking into consideration major fractions. Then they changed to major fractions, and for three-quarters of a century they have dealt with major fractions. They have been studying this question for 125 years, and every time they said, "We shall have to take this bill because we can not find anything better"; and yet now, after all that time, when a method is proposed that will solve this perplexing question, a method that anybody, on study of it, will see will solve it perfectly—and it does not make any difference to my State which method you use—now, after 125 years of studying this perplexing question, they come to us with a bill to which they have attached the greatest fault possible.

They have prevented what Daniel Webster said was the only redeeming feature in a major fractions apportionment bill. He said, "The redeeming feature about it"—using the major fractions—"is that you can add to or take from, and therefore, get over this objection." This bill, however, says, "You shall neither add to nor take from; you shall have 435, and not 436 or 434"; and you have put into this bill a mathematical impossibility. You can not do it.

With all this behind us, and with a new method before us, that is perfectly clear, accurate, equal, and free from all these inconsistencies, the Senate and the Commerce Committee say, "You shall not study this new method. We will not give a minute's consideration to this bill, but we are going to put it through, and we are going to tell the next Congress they will have to take it."

That is the reason why I oppose this bill. I am for the Constitution first, last, and always; and I want to commend my friend from Michigan when he says he is for the eighteenth amendment and that he practices it. I am sick and tired of Senators getting up here in the Senate and casting reflections on their colleagues on the ground that they do not practice the eighteenth amendment. I am with you, Senator VANDENBERG. I believe in the eighteenth amendment first, last, and always; and, so help me God, I am going to practice it as long as I live! I feel the same way about this proposal. I am ready to stand behind the Constitution; I believe in its sanctity; and I will put my shoulder to the wheel with you, Senator VANDENBERG, any time that you bring in a bill that I can, by any stretch of the imagination, support; and the fact that I can not do that now is the reason why I am opposing this bill.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I again ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to say just a word.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator object?

Mr. HARRISON. For the present I reserve the right to object.

Mr. President, I shall not be provoked into a discussion of this reapportionment bill by any allusions of the eloquent Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. He and I differ about it. I am following the course that I think is in the interest of the country. The Senator from Michigan seems to think this is the most important measure in all the world, and that we have been most negligent here for eight years in not passing it, and should pass it now.

I hope that before we adjourn a resolution will be passed by the Senate, and by the House, too, for that matter, giving authority to somebody to appoint a commission of a certain number of expert statisticians versed in these matters to study the various plans that have been proposed—the rejected fractions, the major fractions, and all of these plans—and to get up some data as to how each plan will affect every State, the arguments pro and con, and make their report to the next session of the Congress. I think it ought to be done. It will give us something to work upon, and something that we have not now in the measure that we should have.

Mr. President, I am going to accept the statements of the Senators on the other side—the Senator in charge of this bill [Mr. VANDENBERG], his colleague [Mr. COUZENS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], chairman of the Commerce Committee, and other Senators—that even though this bill be on the calendar and not be recommitted to a committee they will vote with those of us who oppose consideration of the reapportionment bill at this session of Congress; and I am going to withdraw any further opposition to this particular measure, assuming that that will be the course that will be pursued by these Senators.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator understands that my agreement in this connection carries with it the census bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Because, if the census bill were brought up, I should have to reserve the right——

Mr. HARRISON. I think we understand that thoroughly. So I have no objection to dispensing with the formal reading of the appropriation bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have made a request for unanimous consent. Does the Senator object to that request?

Mr. BROOKHART. I want to reserve the right to object for a moment. I desire to see if some arrangement can not be made in reference to the amendment I wish to offer, so that I shall not need to object. If the rules have to be suspended, it would have to go over until to-morrow so that I could offer it.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly I can not say beforehand what I will do with a matter that has not yet come up at all.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is the Senator endeavoring to pass this bill to-night?

Mr. WARREN. I do not know exactly what the Senator wishes. If the Senator presents something that is out of order, and some Senator makes a point of order against it——

Mr. BROOKHART. There is a difference of opinion as to whether it would be out of order; but I have given notice of a motion to suspend the rules. That was done to-day, and it would have to go over until to-morrow under the rule. I did not know that there was such urgency to pass this bill to-night.

Mr. WARREN. If we do not pass it to-night, I do not think there will be much chance of the Senator getting anything into the bill or of my getting anything into the bill.

Mr. WATSON. If my friend the Senator from Wyoming will permit a suggestion, he may waive the rule as to the motion to suspend the rules, because when the Senator from Iowa offers his amendment, if it is subject to a point of order, the Senator from Wyoming can make the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I have no desire to be in the Senator's way at all. I make no objection to his application for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BROOKHART. I offered the amendment on the theory that it is regular, but if it is not I want to give notice of a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Wyoming in order to prevent delay that he might agree to this: I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Iowa be permitted to offer his amendment—I suppose the Senator from Wyoming knows what it is; I do not——

Mr. WARREN. I think I do.

Mr. NORRIS. And that there will be no objection made to it on account of its being offered at this time.

Mr. WARREN. I am willing to waive the matter of precedence and let the Senator offer it now, if he desires.

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa what that amendment contains? Did he strike out the last part of it?

Mr. BROOKHART. The amendment I showed the Senator a while ago was one suggested by Mr. LEHLBACH of the House. That is not the amendment I offered. That provision is not in my amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, why could we not proceed with the bill in order, and then, when we reach the amendment, let the Senator offer it?

Mr. BROOKHART. That would be very agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 3, after line 4, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

For payment to Everett Kent for expenses incurred in presenting the case against the right of JAMES M. BECK to a seat in the House of Representatives, as audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 2, $422.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line, 9, to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to make the paragraph read:

The three preceding appropriations shall be disbursed by the Clerk of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 4, after line 19, to insert a new subhead and paragraph, as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Printing and binding: For printing and binding the indexes and digests of State legislation required to be prepared by the act of February 10, 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. I, p. 4, secs. 164, 165), fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 5, after line 13, to insert a subhead and a paragraph, as follows:

EXECUTIVE

Executive Mansion: For the care, maintenance, protection, and repair of the premises known as Mount Weather, in the counties of Loudoun and Clarke, in the State of Virginia, comprising approximately 84.81 acres of land, including buildings and other improvements thereon and all machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used or for use in connection therewith, and including the alteration, refurnishing, improvement, heating, lighting, electric power and fixtures for buildings and grounds, and including traveling expenses, to be expended by contract or otherwise as the President may determine, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $48,000.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, does that relate to a place over here in the mountains of Virginia?

Mr. WARREN. It is a place called Mount Weather.

Mr. BLEASE. I was over there the other day, and I say that if this money were appropriated it would be a waste of money.

Mr. WARREN. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. BLEASE. That place is not fit to be fixed up. That is the reason I objected to the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio for the appointment of a commission to look into the matter of a summer home for the President. I was over at this place in Virginia the other day. The improvements there are old, dilapidated buildings.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator want to have it stricken out?

Mr. BLEASE. Yes; if that is in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is just a question of agreeing to the committee amendment. We can vote it down.

Mr. GLASS. Vote what down?

Mr. BLEASE. This proposed appropriation to fix up dilapidated buildings on a hill over in Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, the President of the United States made the recommendation for this in a special message to Congress, the matter has been considered by the Budget and approved by the Budget, it has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and I do not see why it should be stricken out.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the present occupant of the chair, offered a resolution providing for the creation of a commission to look into the matter of a summer home for the President, to which I objected myself, but after having a conversation with the Senator from Ohio about the resolution, I told him that I would withdraw my objection, which I did. I do not think there should be a cent spent on these buildings until the commission provided for under that resolution shall have been appointed, and has an opportunity to go over there and look at the buildings. I was over there by accident a short time ago, while out driving with some friends, and I will say that, while that location may be all right for a summer home, it will take thousands of dollars to erect a home there. The old buildings can be torn down and new ones erected for less money than it would take to repair the old buildings and put them in proper condition. I think this matter should go over, let the commission be appointed, and when the commission makes its report, then we can decide whether we will spend any more money on these old dilapidated buildings. I hope that this amendment will be rejected.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, this is in accordance with the recommendation of the President of the United States, who is familiar——

Mr. BLEASE. Does the Senator suppose that the President of the United States has ever seen that place?

Mr. GLASS. I imagine that he has.

Mr. BLEASE. I have serious doubts about whether he ever had time to waste going up there.

Mr. GLASS. The buildings are of a very substantial nature. It will require only the modest sum of $48,000 to put them in good working order. Not only does the present incumbent of the White House approve this proposition, but my information is that the incoming President concurs. It has gone through the regular processes of budgetary examination and approval, and I hope the Senate will not reject the amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this is one of the most beautiful sites, I suppose, in the East. There are about 84 acres of land owned by the Government at that place, it is about 1,700 feet high, there are good roads to it, and I do not know a better place in the world for an Executive who lives in Washington to go to spend a week end. This is very little money to put it in good shape. We will save the tremendous expense that would be incurred by commissions going all over the country, creating hopes which would never be realized. There are a good many places in Virginia which want the summer home for the President, but I think the best and most economic way to obtain a good place, a salubrious place, a beautiful place, is to carry out the recommendation made by the President.

This matter was agreed on after a thorough examination, and it went out, I think, on a point of order in the House when it was first suggested, because it had not been estimated for. That objection now has been overcome. It does seem to me, since the Government owns this property—this beautiful place—and that the buildings may need repairs the expense of which has been carefully estimated, it would be wise for the Senate to allow the improvements to me made.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not sure whether this is the place for such a home as is contemplated, but whether it is or not the appropriation will be made available, and we will soon learn whether it is the right place or not.

I appeal to Senators to realize that the President of the United States ought to have some place outside of this city where there is altitude, where he can have fresh and stimulating air. Whether this is the right place or not I am not competent to say, but I do know that for the sake of the welfare of the President and his health there should be a summer home in such a spot. So I am inclined to approve of this appropriation, hoping that if this is not the right place, as has been suggested by the able Senator from South Carolina, we will quickly find out that the money ought to be used somewhere else. At least we will have this much available.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I have not said a word against this location, but I am stating that this money should not be spent on the buildings there now, until the commission proposed to be appointed shall have an opportunity to investigate this matter. I doubt whether there is a man in the Senate outside of myself who has been up there and seen those buildings. I doubt whether there is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, which has made this recommendation, who has ever been to that spot. I would like to know if there is one here, the chairman or anybody else?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLEASE. With pleasure.

Mr. COPELAND. I take it, then, that the Senator from South Carolina is in favor of a summer home for the President——

Mr. BLEASE. Absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. He does not object to this location, but feels that in the interest of economy it would be better to vote more money and put up a new building?

Mr. BLEASE. I suggest that we wait until the commission is appointed for which a resolution was offered, and if they decide that this is the place, then we can spend the money there. Why spend $48,000 there when possibly the proposed commission will report that that is not the proper place?

Mr. GLASS. The possibility is that when the commission comes in with a report, it will cost the Government of the United States four or five million dollars instead of $48,000.

Mr. BLEASE. Well, we give millions away here nearly every day.

Mr. GLASS. This land, 84 acres, is already owned by the Government of the United States. I wish I had the photographs of the place here to show to the Senate. The buildings are of a substantial nature, of such a substantial nature that the President of the United States thinks that the expenditure of $48,000 will put them in complete order for presidential purposes.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I want to ask a question for information. Who is responsible for the selection of this particular site for that particular purpose?

Mr. GLASS. I am not. I have not approached the President of the United States on the subject. The matter was presented to him——

Mr. WATSON. I am not charging that the Senator is responsible. I am asking who is.

Mr. GLASS. I can not say who is.

Mr. COPELAND. The President is, is he not?

Mr. GLASS. The President himself recommended the site.

Mr. WARREN. I did not catch the question, but this property was bought by the Government for purposes of the Weather Bureau many years ago.

Mr. GLASS. It is owned by the Government.

Mr. WARREN. As to who brought this matter up at this time is quite another matter, but I understand that it was put into the House bill and went out on a point of order——

Mr. GLASS. It went out on a point of order because it had not at that time been estimated for.

Mr. WARREN. Someone simply made a point of order against it.

Mr. GLASS. That is the fact.

Mr. WARREN. It is simply a matter of Senators voting for the amendment or against it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us how much it is going to cost to maintain this summer home after we appropriate this $48,000?

Mr. WARREN. I can not tell the Senator that, but I can say that this provision is for an appropriation of $48,000.

Mr. WHEELER. After we appropriate this $48,000, then are we not going to have to maintain a whole retinue of servants to keep up this new summer home?

Mr. WARREN. I have no information on that whatever.

Mr. WHEELER. Before we appropriate to build a summer home, I think the Senate ought to have information as to whether or not we are going to have a whole retinue of servants up there the year around.

Mr. WARREN. My young friend, society gentleman as he is, and well acquainted with the habits of society, knows as much as I can tell him about the White House retinue of servants of all kinds.

Mr. SMITH. May I suggest that when the President moves out there, he could leave a caretaker here at the White House, and take his retinue along with him?

Mr. GLASS. I was going to say that if we give the President of the United States a summer home at all, he will have to have some servants to look after it. As many, perhaps, would not be required at this suggested place, as at some palatial place that a commission going around the country would wind up in recommending.

Mr. BLEASE obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. BLEASE. Just a moment. This is simply indirect legislation, fixing upon this place for a summer home for the President. That is all it means. When this $48,000 is spent it will mean that we will be compelled to go on further and spend more money for the purpose of establishing this summer home. Why not leave this matter out, and let the matter as to where this home shall be be settled by the Senate and the House? This is not a thing but an effort to choke down the throats of the people, through this indirect legislation, this place as a summer home.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLEASE. I do not object to the idea of a summer home for the President. If the proposed commission says that this is the place for it, I will not object to that. But I do object to an attempt to secure an appropriation of $48,000 for the repair of these old dilapidated buildings, and then come back here at the next session and say, "Why, you have already selected this place; $48,000 has already been spent on it."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BLEASE. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I saw a picture of this place in the newspaper the other day. It may be that it was unfortunately taken, but the picture which was published did not show a single tree on the property. Can the Senator tell us whether there are any trees there?

Mr. GLASS. A part of the $48,000 is to be used for transplanting trees. As this is the season for the transplanting of trees, I expect the next President will enjoy it in the approaching summer a little while after he comes into the White House.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There are many places in the Blue Ridge Mountains in Pennsylvania where it would not be necessary to transplant any trees.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and there are plenty of places in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia where we do not need to transplant any trees.

Mr. WHEELER. I assume probably the State of Pennsylvania would be willing to give some land for use as a summer home for the President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, and they would be equally willing and glad in Virginia and in Maryland and in all the other near-by States.

Mr. WHEELER. If you can not find any in Pennsylvania, we will give some in Montana, and not only that, but we will build a home for the President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly. The point I make is that for the Senate to select a summer White House which none of us have ever seen, which admittedly has no trees on it, is a most unintelligent way of going at the business.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, the Senator is mistaken in saying that there are no trees on the property. There is a forest there. There is inadequate shade in the immediate proximity of the building located there now.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is what I mean, and none of the trees in the forest showed in the picture of the property which was published in the paper. The place we are going to make a summer White House looks in its picture as if it was a reform school or some such institution.

Mr. BLEASE. Perhaps that is the reason why they want to send Hoover up there.

Mr. WHEELER. Is not that the reason why they picked it out so they could send the next President up there?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think existing law has required the sale of this property. Congress, as I recall, a number of years ago ordered a sale of the property. The proposed legislation is improper and I am going to make a point of order against it, because it is an attempt to legislate upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, it is not an attempt to legislate on an appropriation bill. It involves an expenditure of $48,000 which has been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, and by the Bureau of the Budget approved and submitted to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia if I understood him correctly to say that the present incumbent of the White House and the incoming President had approved or agreed to the place as being a desirable one for a summer White House?

Mr. GLASS. President Coolidge strongly recommended the selection of this place as a summer White House. I am told that the incoming President assents to the suggestion. I think that would naturally be assumed because it is incredible that President Coolidge, going out of office within a few days, would recommend the selection of a summer White House without the cordial assent of the incoming President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Can the Senator tell us whether either Mr. Coolidge or Mr. Hoover ever saw the place?

Mr. GLASS. No; I can not.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the President does not like it, he could turn it over to the Vice President.

Mr. GLASS. I assume that President Coolidge knew what he was about when he recommended the place.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think a happy solution of the matter has been suggested, that after we try it if it does not suit the President we could turn it over to the genial Vice President.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; if it is not good enough for the President we can turn it over to the Vice President. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. It might be so undesirable that neither one of them would care for it.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I would be very much delighted to see the President, 5 or 10 minutes after noon on the 4th day of March, turn the Presidency over to the Vice President elect, but I know he is not going to do that. God Almighty will have to do it if it is done within four years. I still contend that it is not right indirectly to foist upon the coming Congress the selection of this place by an expenditure of $48,000 to purchase these old sheds.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.
Bingham	Fess	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Black	Fletcher	King	Sheppard
Blaine	Frazier	McKellar	Shortridge
Blease	George	McMaster	Smith
Bratton	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Brookhart	Glenn	Neely	Steiwer
Broussard	Goff	Norbeck	Swanson
Bruce	Hale	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Trammell
Copeland	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Hayden	Overman	Warren
Dale	Heflin	Pine	Watson
Deneen	Johnson	Ransdell	Wheeler
Dill	Jones	Reed, Pa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have here the House hearings on this item, from which it would appear that the property was specially inspected by Colonel Grant at the direction of the President of the United States. It is specifically stated over and over again by Colonel Grant that the buildings on the property are of a very substantial nature; that the main building is of brick and completely fireproofed; that the value of the property is $184,000; that the proposed appropriation of $48,000 would put the buildings not only in thorough repair, but in readjustment to suit the purposes of a President.

Colonel Grant testified that the view in every direction is exceptionally fine, and that the property of 84 acres is heavily wooded in places, but that there are no trees in immediate proximity to the main building, for the reason that the trees there were cut down when the property was used for Weather Bureau purposes.

I may say that I have not interested myself about the matter. I never opened my lips to the President on the subject. It seems from the RECORD that an aide of the President, who very likely concurred in his attitude of economy toward public expenditures, foresaw that it would be much simpler to take an exceptionally fine piece of property of this sort already owned by the Government and devote it to this purpose.

Mr. KING. I raise the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator on the point of order.

Mr. KING. I find that in the House of Representatives when this matter was under consideration, Mr. LAGUARDIA made the point of order on the amendment, declaring—

> It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and there is no authority for the appropriation.
> The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, concede the point of order?
> Mr. WOOD. I do not think there is any doubt that it is subject to the point of order.
> The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WATSON. On what was the point of order based?

Mr. KING. That the amendment was general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. WATSON. Was there anything said at that time in the discussion about the Government having authorized the sale of the property?

Mr. KING. No; that was not stated, but had it been, it would have strengthened the point of order, of course.

Mr. WATSON. I was just wondering as to that.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, when the proposition was offered in the House of Representatives with the approval of the House committee it was conceded that it was legislation on an appropriation bill, because it contained a provision which changed the existing law. In the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, as other members of the committee will attest, I very carefully eliminated everything from the amendment that could be subject to a point of order, so that we are now simply called upon to appropriate $48,000 for the improvement of the buildings and grounds now owned by the Government of the United States, an appropriation which has been estimated for by the Budget Bureau, approved, and sent to the Congress.

Mr. WATSON. If I understand the Senator correctly, then, in the House of Representatives this item carried a provision repealing the act to authorize the sale of the property?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. And that was legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. GLASS. It was legislation. It also contained a provision transferring jurisdiction of the property, which was likewise legislation; but all that has been eliminated from this amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had the floor, but I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Go ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. Was the part of the amendment as proposed in the House, which made it subject to a point of order, the portion repealing the authorization for the sale of property?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and also providing for the transfer of jurisdiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there has been an authorization for the sale of the property and this amendment would change that provision, it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. GLASS. I did not understand the statement of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the authorization for the sale is not repealed, then an appropriation added to the property would be in violation of that authorization.

Mr. GLASS. I do not see how the Chair reaches that remarkable conclusion. We might spend $150,000 on that Government property and yet not repeal the authorization for the sale. The Government could sell the property with the buildings on it, rehabilitated and repaired. Why not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GLASS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. NEELY. I call for a division, Mr. President.

On a division, the question being put,

The decision of the Chair was not sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BLEASE. I call for the yeas and nays on the question of whether or not the Chair should be sustained. Several Senators did not vote on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? On that question the Senator from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GLASS. What is the proposition now being submitted, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GLASS. I make the point that the yeas and nays were not sufficiently seconded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES. I wish to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—18

Blaine	Dill	King	Thomas, Okla.
Blease	Frazier	McMaster	Walsh, Mass.
Bratton	George	Oddie	Waterman
Brookhart	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.
Dale	Keys	Schall

NAYS—33

Bingham	Glenn	Norbeck	Smith
Black	Goff	Norris	Smoot
Broussard	Hale	Nye	Steiwer
Capper	Hawes	Overman	Swanson
Copeland	Hefflin	Pine	Thomas, Idaho
Deneen	Jones	Ransdell	Trammell
Edwards	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.
Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard
Glass	Neely	Shortridge

NOT VOTING—44

Ashurst	Gerry	McLean	Simmons
Barkley	Gillett	McNary	Steck
Bayard	Gould	Mayfield	Stephens
Borah	Greene	Metcalf	Tydings
Bruce	Harris	Moses	Tyson
Burton	Harrison	Phipps	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hastings	Pittman	Wagner
Couzens	Hayden	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Howell	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Edge	La Follette	Sackett	Watson
Fess	Larrazolo	Shipstead	Wheeler

So the Senate refused to sustain the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BINGHAM. May we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

Executive Mansion: For the care, maintenance, protection, and repair of the premises known as Mount Weather, in the counties of Loudoun and Clarke, in the State of Virginia, comprising approximately 84.81 acres of land, including buildings and other improvements thereon and all machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used or for use in connection therewith, and including the alteration, refurnishing, improvement, heating, lighting, electric power and fixtures for buildings and grounds, and including traveling expenses, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $48,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those in favor of the amendment will vote "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will vote "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). The senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate this evening. He is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—39

Ashurst	Fletcher	McKellar	Schall
Bingham	Glass	Neely	Sheppard
Black	Glenn	Norbeck	Smith
Broussard	Hale	Norris	Smoot
Bruce	Harris	Nye	Steiwer
Capper	Harrison	Oddie	Swanson
Copeland	Hawes	Overman	Thomas, Idaho
Curtis	Hayden	Pine	Trammell
Deneen	Heflin	Ransdell	Watson
Edwards	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

NAYS—18

Blaine	Fess	King	Vandenberg
Blease	Frazier	McMaster	Walsh, Mass.
Bratton	George	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Brookhart	Goff	Shortridge
Dill	Johnson	Thomas, Okla.

NOT VOTING—38

Barkley	Gould	Mayfield	Stephens
Bayard	Greene	Metcalf	Tydings
Borah	Hastings	Moses	Tyson
Burton	Howell	Phipps	Wagner
Caraway	Kendrick	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Keyes	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Dale	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Edge	Larrazolo	Sackett
Gerry	McLean	Shipstead
Gillett	McNary	Simmons

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue reading the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the heading "Federal Board for Vocational Education," on page 8, after line 20, to insert:

Cooperative vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia: For personal services, printing and binding, travel and subsistence, and payment of expenses of training, placement, and other phases of rehabilitating disabled residents of the District of Columbia under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia," approved February 23, 1929, fiscal year 1930, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 11, to insert:

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Toward carrying into effect the provisions of the act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, approved February 25, 1929, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $100,000: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission is authorized to incur contractual obligations in an amount not exceeding $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "District of Columbia, General Expenses," on page 14, after line 15, to insert:

Vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents, District of Columbia: To carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 23, 1929, fiscal year 1930, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 17, to insert:

Home for Aged and Infirm: For the preparation of plans, specifications, and estimates for a suitable infirmary and hospital for the Home for Aged and Infirm, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Weather Bureau," on page 26, after line 2, to insert:

The sum of $10,000 of the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Weather Bureau, 1930," contained in the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, is hereby transferred to the appropriation for the Coast Guard "for compensation of civilian employees in the field, etc.," contained in the act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, approved December 20, 1928.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 26, after line 18, to insert:

Dry-Land Field Station, Tucumcari, N. Mex.: For the construction of new buildings and the repair and replacement of existing ones at the United States Dry-Land Field Station at Tucumcari, N. Mex., fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 15, to insert:

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY AND SOILS

Fertilizer investigations: For additional amounts for investigations within the United States of fertilizers and other soil amendments and their suitability for agricultural purposes, including the same objects specified under the respective heads in the agricultural appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act for the development of improved methods of recovering potash from deposits in the United States, approved February 20, 1929, for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1929, $17,000, of which amount not to exceed $7,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia;

For 1930, $25,000, of which amount not to exceed $20,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Biological Survey," on page 29, after line 7, to insert:

Migratory bird conservation act: For carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory-bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and authorizing appropriations for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes," approved February 18, 1929, $75,000, authorized by section 12 of the act, including printing and binding, of which amount not to exceed $13,930 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and in addition thereto $5,000 authorized by section 18 of the act; in all, fiscal year 1930, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 17, to insert:

Seed-grain, feed, and fertilizer loan for crop of 1929: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of farmers in the storm and flood-stricken areas of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama," approved February 25, 1929, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and for the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans made thereunder, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $6,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $11,600 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Commerce, Office of the Secretary," on page 32, after line 18, to insert:

Enforcement of wireless communication laws: For an additional amount to enable the Secretary of Commerce to purchase a site, and construct thereon a building for use as a constant-frequency monitoring radio station, including a roadway, power, and communication facilities, authorized in the act approved February 21, 1929, fiscal year 1929 and 1930, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Lighthouses," on page 34, after line 10, to insert:

Aids to navigation: For an additional amount covering the same objects and purposes specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1930, to carry out the purposes of the act approved February 25, 1929, fiscal year 1930, $190,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 19, to insert:

BUREAU OF MINES

Mining experiment stations: For additional amounts for mining experiment stations, including the same objects specified under this head in the acts making appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930, respectively, to enable the Secretary of Commerce to carry into effect the provisions of the act for the development of approved methods of recovering potash from deposits in the United States, approved February 20, 1929, for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1929, $33,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,700 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia;

For 1930, $25,000, of which amount not to exceed $3,560 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading Interior Department, Office of the Secretary, on page 36, line 20, after the word "in" to insert "Senate Document No. 236 and", and in line 22, to strike out "$67.35" and insert "$1,067.35"; so as to read:

Damage claims: To pay claims for damages to or losses of privately owned property adjusted and determined by the Department of the Interior, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case," approved December 28, 1922 U. S. C. p. 989, secs. 215–217), as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 236 and House Document No. 521, Seventieth Congress, $1,067.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 12, before the words "The unexpended balance," to insert "Lake Andes, S. Dak., spillway and drainage ditch," so as to read:

Lake Andes, S. Dak., spillway and drainage ditch: The unexpended balance of $48,612.76 of the appropriation for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., contained in the act of September 22, 1922 (42 Stat. 1051), and covered into the surplus fund by the act of March 7, 1928 (45 Stat. 215), is hereby reappropriated for the same purposes during the fiscal year 1930: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of South Dakota satisfactory guaranties of the payment by said State of one-half of the cost of the construction of the said spillway and drainage ditch.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 47, to strike out "For per capita payment of $100 to members of the Menominee Tribe of Indians of Wisconsin (tribal funds) to be immediately available, $196,000," and in lieu thereof to insert:

Menominee Indians of Wisconsin: For per capita payment of $100 to members of the Menominee Tribe of Indians of Wisconsin, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $196,000, to be paid from funds held in trust for such Indians.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it proper to submit an amendment at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not unless it is an amendment to the committee amendment will it be in order at this time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Reclamation," on page 48, line 23, after the numerals "$650,000," to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or of the appropriation of $250,000 for the enlargement of the Avalon Reservoir contained in the act of May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 902), shall be available until the Director of the United States Geological Survey shall have reported favorably on the foundation of the Avalon Dam and on the depth to which water may be stored in the proposed enlarged reservoir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Park Service," on page 51, line 21, before the word "For" to insert "Yellowstone National Park, Wyo.," so as to read:

Yellowstone National Park, Wyo.: For the necessary expenses of an examination of the areas involved in the proposed adjustment of the southeast, south, and southwest boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park by a commission to consist of five members to be appointed by the President, and to be known as the Yellowstone National Park Boundary Commission, whose duty it shall be to report to the President its recommendations concerning such adjustment, so much as may be necessary of the appropriations for the Yellowstone National Park for the fiscal year 1930 is hereby made available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Navy Department, office of the Secretary," on page 60, line 20, after the word "in" to insert "Senate Document No. 236 and"; and in line 22, after the word "Congress," to strike out "$14,228.78" and insert "$16,484.78," so as to read:

Claims for damages by naval vessels: To pay claims for damages adjusted and determined by the Secretary of the Navy under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels," approved December 28, 1922 (U. S. C., p. 1127, sec. 599), as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 236 and House Document No. 521, Seventieth Congress, $16,484.78.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 6, after the word "in" to insert "Senate Document No. 236 and"; and in line 8, after the word "Congress," to strike out "$3,995" and insert "$4,253.50," so as to read:

Damage claims, private property: To pay claims for damages to or losses of privately owned property adjusted and determined by the Navy Department, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case," approved December 28, 1922 (U. S. C., p. 989, secs. 215–217), as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 236 and House Documents Nos. 521 and 596, Seventieth Congress, $4,253.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 8, to insert:

Navy pension fund: The Navy pension fund is hereby made available for the payment of the claim of Floyd A. Newell, amounting to $10.61, allowed by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 29, 1918 (40 Stat., p. 499), as set forth in Senate Document No. 232, Seventieth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 62, to insert:

BUREAU OF ENGINEERING

Engineering: Toward equipping submarines with safety devices, fiscal year 1929, to remain available until expended, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 5, to insert:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR

Construction and repair, Bureau of Construction and Repair: Toward equipping submarines with safety devices, fiscal year 1929, to remain available until expended, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 19, to insert:

CORPS OF ENGINEERS

Investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal and investigation and survey of the Panama Canal: For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the investigation and survey to determine the practicability of an interoceanic ship canal over Nicaraguan territory, and the survey and investigation for the purpose of determining the possibilities and cost of enlarging the Panama Canal to the extent which may be necessary to meet the future needs of interoceanic shipping, fiscal year 1929, to remain available until expended, $150,000.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, as I understand it, this is an appropriation for which no authorization has yet passed the House of Representatives. It provides for the expenditure of $150,000. I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it would be in order even if no bill had been passed, because it would carry out the provisions of a treaty. In addition to that, it is clearly in order under Rule XVI, which provides that where a resolution is passed providing for an appropriation at the same session, it is in order.

Mr. DILL. The joint resolution has not passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not have to pass the House in order to make this in order. If it has passed the Senate, the appropriation is in order.

Mr. DILL. If the joint resolution was necessary at all, it certainly would have to become a law before we would be authorized to appropriate money to carry it out.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; in the first place, it is not necessary.

Mr. WARREN. It is entirely all right for us to pass it, under our rules.

Mr. SMOOT. If the joint resolution shall not become a law, the appropriation will never be used.

Mr. JONES. I may say to my colleague that if a bill or joint resolution has passed the Senate during the same session, under our rules an appropriation to carry it out is in order.

Mr. DILL. It would not be in order in the House of Representatives.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is in order under the first paragraph of Rule XVI, found on page 20 of the Rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is correct. In Rule XVI it is stated that "no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill * * * unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."

Mr. DILL. Suppose the House of Representatives does not pass that joint resolution?

Mr. McKELLAR. This would still be in order.

Mr. DILL. Would it be in order to appropriate the money?

Mr. WARREN. That question would be considered in conference, and it could be cut out. We are considering it only in this body so far.

Mr. DILL. The question I ask is this: Suppose, when the conferees meet, and then make their final report, the resolution has not yet passed the House of Representatives and has not finally become a law; would it be in order for us to make this part of this bill to be reported back in the conference report?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is looking ahead quite a little. We are now only considering this in the Senate. It has not yet received attention in the House of Representatives. We go to conference with whatever amendments the Senate has put on the bill, under the order under which we are now working, and the matter will then receive the consideration of the House conferees.

Mr. DILL. If the joint resolution does not pass the House, then what will be the status of this appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. It will not be in order, of course. It will be cut out.

Mr. SMOOT. The House will disagree and the Senate will recede.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, of course, understands that this matter will be within the control of the conferees.

Mr. DILL. It certainly would not be in order to bring this provision back in a conference report if the resolution did not pass the House of Representatives.

Mr. WARREN. Very true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course the conferees can take any position they want to take about it, but it would be in order under Rule XVI. There can be no doubt about that—not a particle.

Mr. DILL. It would be in order to finally pass it?

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be in order, because the Senate has passed the joint resolution and it can put this appropriation into the bill if it desires. I hope the conferees will look at it in that way and keep the provision in the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think it is very bad practice to attempt to rush an appropriation in this way when the joint resolution in the House of Representatives has been referred to the House Committee on Interstate Commerce, and before the resolution has even been considered by the committee this appropriation is brought in here, and the Senate is asked to agree to it, and send it to conference, on the theory that the joint resolution may pass the House of Representatives. I think the only proper way is to reject this amendment, and I hope that the committee will agree to that. If not, I feel that I want to discuss the subject.

I do not see any necessity for appropriating money before the joint resolution has become a law. There is nothing pressing about this Nicaraguan-canal survey. There is no demand anywhere for it. There is no one anywhere asking for it that I know about, except the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], who pressed the resolution through the Senate. With the pressure of business in the House this near the end of the session, it seems to me that there is not much chance that the joint resolution will pass the House of Representatives. Therefore I am going to make a point of no quorum, and press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	Kendrick	Schall
Barkley	Fess	Keyes	Sheppard
Bingham	Fletcher	King	Shortridge
Black	Frazier	McKellar	Smith
Blaine	George	McNary	Smoot
Blease	Glass	Neely	Steiwer
Bratton	Glenn	Norbeck	Swanson
Brookhart	Goff	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Hale	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Bruce	Harris	Overman	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	Pine	Vandenberg
Copeland	Hayden	Pittman	Warren
Curtis	Heflin	Ransdell	Waterman
Deneen	Johnson	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Dill	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I regret very much that the committee should see fit to try to take advantage of the situation by forcing an appropriation into the bill at this time. I regret also that it becomes necessary for me to discuss it, but that I shall certainly do for a little while.

The history of the Nicaraguan trouble dates back over a long period of years. I can not find the reason from anyone anywhere why there should be such an insistent demand that we shall proceed to spend money and that we shall proceed to begin work on the survey of the Nicaraguan canal. As I stated some days ago when the Nicaraguan measure was before the Senate, there is no need for a canal at the present time. There is no demand for an additional canal, except that coming from a few newspaper editors. There is no real reason that anybody has given for rushing the procedure.

The joint resolution providing for the Nicaraguan survey only passed the Senate two or three days ago. It is in the House and I understand was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that there they propose to take out of the measure that part of it which authorizes the Government particularly to negotiate with Costa Rica and other countries that have an interest in the river which would be a part of the canal. The fact of the matter is that our rights in Nicaragua are based upon a treaty with Nicaragua which does not recognize the rights of Costa Rica. I understand that for more than 150 miles the river which would be a part of the canal borders on Costa Rica, and that Costa Rica claims rights which have not been recognized by anybody anywhere, and we are proceeding on the theory that we have the rights to the canal because of a treaty made in 1913 with the Chamorro Government. As I explained the other day, that treaty has a history which certainly does not justify the claim of this Government to any rights in that country.

When the joint resolution was before the Senate it was amended two or three times before it was finally put in the language in which it eventually passed. Then we were told that these rights of Costa Rica would be considered and negotiations would be carried forward in accordance with that provision. In the House of Representatives, I understand, the joint resolution would naturally go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs because of this provision; but in order that it may go to a committee which is favorable to it, it is to be sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is in that committee now, or will be referred to-morrow, if it has not been referred to-day, and some time probably in the next day or two it may be reported out, and it may be possible that in the last moments it might be passed, so that if the President signs the joint resolution in time the $150,000 can go into the conference report.

As I said, nobody has yet given any reason for the urgency with which the matter is being pressed. I do not know who is back of it. I have tried to find a cause for it.

The testimony of the engineers in charge of the Panama Canal shows that we are running 19 ships per day through a canal which has a capacity for 54 ships a day. Not only that, but if the dam which will supply additional water is completed on the Panama Canal, we are told that another lock can be installed, and that it will then be 70 years before there will be any need for additional canal facilities. When we come to build a canal across Nicaragua, nobody knows how many hundreds of millions of dollars it will cost. It has been estimated all the way from $200,000,000 up to $1,000,000,000, and even $1,500,000,000, if it is attempted to build a sea-level canal.

Mr. President, I remind you that the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury recently made were to the effect that there is but a small surplus in the Treasury. As I showed the other day, pending legislation for needed projects in our own country makes demands of $2,500,000,000. Yet with all that situation facing us, we are asked to start work upon the survey of a canal that will not be needed in any event for 30 years, and by a comparatively small additional expenditure it will be 70 years before it will be needed. It is said that it is only $150,000, but that is only the opening wedge; that is but a beginning. I will say frankly, however, much as I am opposed to the proposition, that if the House of Representatives does pass the joint resolution or if it were already the law, then I would withdraw my opposition. But just because the joint resolution has passed one branch of the Congress is no reason, in my judgment, why, in a deficiency bill, we must rush through a provision for the $150,000 to make a survey.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the history of our record in Nicaragua. I read the other day just a few short excerpts from an article in Current History for November, 1928, by Prof. Charles W. Hackett. I am going into that article with a little more detail because it contains some very interesting data in addition to what I quoted the other day. Mr. Charles W. Hackett is the professor of Latin-American history in the University of Texas. He said:

> A survey of relations of the United States with Nicaragua during the last two decades reveals a kaleidoscope of inconsistencies and blunders.

I think it is stating it very kindly to call them merely blunders.

> It is not charged that this was necessarily intentional or deliberate, nevertheless the United States Government has repeatedly blundered from one untenable position with respect to Nicaragua into another.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator a question for information? I do not care to break the continuity of his speech.

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator. There is plenty of time.

Mr. SMITH. I want to know what would be the status of the amendment in the appropriation bill now before us if, when it passes this body and goes to conference, the House shall not have passed the joint resolution to which the Senator is referring? Then it necessarily would go out, would it not?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. But if in the meantime while the conferees are meeting it shall have passed the House it would then be in order.

Mr. DILL. Yes; and the leaders of the House will immediately be urged to lay aside any other kind of business that may be pressing, because the Senate is so anxious to get this appropriation that we could not wait until the bill had passed in the natural way, but in the second deficiency bill carrying millions and millions of dollars we must have this appropriation to begin a survey of the Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask for just one further bit of information? If the item is left out of the bill and the House shall pass the joint resolution providing for a survey, then when would the appropriation be provided for?

Mr. DILL. The appropriation would be provided for in the next annual appropriation bills during the next session. That would be the natural time for them.

Mr. SMITH. So that in case the House does pass the joint resolution we shall have a delay of only one year?

Mr. DILL. Only a delay of one year. I think in the light of our troubles in Nicaragua in the past, in the light of public sentiment in this country for the withdrawal of the marines from Nicaragua, that we could well afford to take a little time before we start new operations down there that are likely to make more trouble in Nicaragua.

Mr. SMITH. The only point I care to make, if the Senator will allow me, is that one year would not carry out the purpose that the Senator has in mind and in which he has the sympathy of others. I take it that what the Senator is hoping to do is to defeat the legislation ultimately.

Mr. DILL. That is certainly what I hope to do.

Mr. SMITH. The Senate has passed the joint resolution providing for a survey. It has gone for the time being beyond our recall. If the House shall pass it, it is then the law of the land, just awaiting the appropriation before becoming effective. If there was any hope in the meantime or as the result of the delay that it might ultimately be defeated or give those opposed to the legislation another chance at its defeat, that would be one thing; but when it shall have been passed by both Houses and nothing remains to be done but to make the appropriation, I do not see exactly what advantage would be gained.

Mr. DILL. There is the advantage, I may say to the Senator, that when the Senate adopts this particular amendment it not merely provides an appropriation, but the bill carries in its wording legislation. The House is then at liberty to adopt the legislation and make both the amendment and the legislation in order. This is a covert way of getting through the House a provision which the House has not yet passed.

Mr. SMITH. Could the House accept this?

Mr. DILL. Why not?

Mr. SMITH. There has been no provision made for it by any action of the House.

Mr. DILL. Yes; but the provision is right in the bill. It is legislation on the bill.

Mr. SMITH. This is only making an appropriation for legislation that has already passed this body, but it is not legislation that could be appropriated for until it shall have gone through its parliamentary stages in this body and in the other body.

Mr. DILL. It is in the same status as any other legislative provision in an appropriation bill passed through one House and accepted by the other. I read to the Senate the provision under the title "Corps of Engineers":

> Investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal and investigation and survey of the Panama Canal: For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the investigation and survey to determine the practicability of an interoceanic ship canal over Nicaraguan territory, and the survey and investigation for the purpose of determining the possibilities and cost of enlarging the Panama Canal to the extent which may be necessary to meet the future needs of interoceanic shipping, fiscal year 1929, to remain available until expended, $150,000.

Mr. SMITH. But that is merely providing for what has been set forth in the text of the joint resolution which we passed the other day. That is not a recital of the bill.

Mr. DILL. But if the House accepts it then it is a part of the bill, and it is perfectly proper to be expended. It is a covert way of compelling the House to do, in a great appropriation bill, what it has not done in a legislative way.

Mr. SMITH. It is then the Senator's opinion that the conferees on the part of the House, before any legislation ever passes the House on the subject at all, may accept this and it then becomes the law.

Mr. DILL. Of course, it does, and the conferees on the part of the House will be at liberty to do it if they so desire.

Mr. SMITH. This certainly is my first experience with that situation in legislative procedure. It was my opinion that legislation of this character would have to pass both bodies before it could be a matter for conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the rules of the House it has to be submitted to the House of Representatives and voted on there before it could become a law.

Mr. DILL. It can be submitted as a part of this report.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has to be voted on separately under their rules, and, of course, if the House passed it, I take it that anyone would say it is entitled to have it.

Mr. SMITH. Now, let us get this clear. Would the House have to vote on the provision as it appears in this bill or on the joint resolution upon which this is predicated?

Mr. DILL. Only on the provision that appears in this bill. They need pay no attention to the joint resolution pending before the House and which has already passed the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. The House would have to vote simply on this amendment in order to make it eligible for conference again?

Mr. DILL. That is all; and when the conferees come in with a report on this great appropriation bill and a separate vote is all that is required, the Senator knows how little chance opposition to the legislative measure will have when it is taken up on the floor of the House.

Mr. SMITH. I understand, of course, how a mere amendment could be the subject of conference, but this is a separate provision which has not been authorized except by the passage by the Senate of the joint resolution.

Mr. DILL. Yes; and the House Members will be in this position: They will be practically bludgeoned, by the force of the fear of losing the remainder of the provisions of the deficiency bill, into accepting what the conferees have brought in.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. There still seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding about the jurisdiction of the two Houses. It is admitted that the House of Representatives shall initiate revenue measures. If there is anything else it alone can initiate, I have not heard of it. We have two bodies of equal jurisdiction and no restrictions. This bill has originated in the other House, we will assume, but it is not binding on us at all. We can strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and insert a new bill. Then, of course, when passed by the Senate, it would go to conference. There is nothing binding on this body by virtue of this bill, as everyone must admit. So there is no use talking about conferences. The question is, What does this body desire to do with this proposed legislation?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I was quoting from the article by Professor Hackett. The statement I had just read was concerning the sending of the Stimson mission to Nicaragua in 1927. I continue quoting from the article:

> The sending of that mission may be characterized as an honest and commendable effort of the President and the Secretary of State, as well as possible, through Colonel Stimson, to extricate the United States Government from the embarrassments resulting from its past relations with Nicaragua.
> To be more specific: In 1907 President Roosevelt induced the five Central American Governments to agree (in Article II of the additional treaty of December 20, 1907) that none of them would "in case of civil war intervene in favor of or against the Government of the country where the struggle takes place." While encouraging the principle of nonintervention among the Central American nations, the United States Government apparently reserved the right of intervention for itself. For in 1909–10, in the words of Chairman BORAH of the present Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the United States Government "indorsed the revolutionists" who were at that time operating against the recognized constitutional Government of Nicaragua and "excited the people to overthrow it."

That recital of the beginning of our relations with Nicaragua, I submit, is enough to show the absolutely unfair attitude which the Government took toward Nicaragua, after having induced her to enter into an agreement with other Central American countries not to interfere in the revolutions which might occur in those countries. I will read on:

> The conservative government that was thereupon set up in place of the liberal one that was overthrown was, according to the contemporary report of the commanding officer of our marines in Nicaragua, "not in power by the will of the people." Nevertheless, the minority conservative régime thus established remained in power, through the protection afforded by the United States marines, until January 1, 1925. Such action in imposing a minority government on a helpless people was in violation of the idealism expressed with specific reference to Latin America by Secretary of State Root when he said: "We consider that the independence and equal rights of the smallest and weakest members of the family of nations deserve as much respect as those of the great empires," and also the idealism expressed by President Wilson when he said that "every people should be left free to determine its own policy, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful."
> Also in 1907 the United States Government induced the Central American governments to agree (in Article I of the additional treaty of December 20, 1907) that none of them would recognize any other government which might "come into power in any of the five republics as a consequence of a coup d'état, or of a revolution against the recognized government, so long as the freely elected representatives of the people thereof have not constitutionally reorganized the country." Three years later the Estrada Government, which had come into power through a revolution "aided and abetted" by the United States consul at Bluefields, was recognized by the United States Government (January 1, 1911) before the freely elected representatives of the people of Nicaragua had constitutionally reorganized their country. Thus the United States Government violated the very principle of nonrecognition to which it had induced the Central American governments to subscribe three years earlier.
> In 1916 the Bryan-Chamorro treaty was negotiated. By it Nicaragua, in return for a paltry but much-needed sum of $3,000,000, gave to the United States "in perpetuity * * * the exclusive proprietary rights necessary and convenient for the construction, operation, and maintenance of an interoceanic canal." With respect to that treaty four serious questions arise, to quote from Elihu Root, "not about the desirableness of the treaty but about the way" in which it was made.

That brief but explicit statement leading up to how we secured the establishment of a government in Nicaragua tells the story, but is very kindly in our favor. The truth of the matter is that that revolution was inspired largely by American interests and that those who were placed in direct control of the government at that time were really our own representatives. Chamorra was but a puppet—if I may use that term—he simply served the purposes of those who were anxious to make a treaty by which they could claim these rights. Basing our rights upon that kind of a treaty, we now find the Senate Committee on Appropriations are so anxious to take advantage of whatever there is to which we are justly entitled, that they come in here with an appropriation authorized by a joint resolution that has not as yet passed the House of Representatives, and are hoping that when the appropriation bill goes through the Senate it will go to the House, and the House then will accept it, and it will be passed as a part of an appropriation bill, when they have not been able to consider the joint resolution in the regular way in the House of Representatives. If the House were in favor of the joint resolution it could have passed it long ago; it did not need to wait until it was passed by the Senate; it did not need to depend upon the Senate to bring it over within the pages of an appropriation bill.

If this appropriation were inserted simply for the purpose of studying the facilities of the Panama Canal, and its enlargement, I would have no serious objection to it, although I think that it would be improper, to say the least; but when it is proposed here, because of a great appropriation bill which is pending, to take advantage of a situation in the closing days of the session, I propose, for one, to protest and to do what I can to prevent it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has several times said something about taking advantage of a situation and about bludgeoning the House.

Mr. DILL. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not the Senator in exactly that sort of a position himself? He is undertaking to bludgeon the Senate. The Senate has passed the joint resolution in regard to the proposed Nicaraguan canal; it has decided against the Senator from Washington on every point; and my recollection is that the Senator did not even ask for a roll call.

Mr. DILL. I did not bother about a roll call.

Mr. McKELLAR. In any event, on whatever roll calls there were, the Senate overwhelmingly turned down the proposal of the Senator from Washington and passed the joint resolution. Now, it seems to me, the Senate having done that, when the Senator assumes the attitude he does toward this appropriation bill, which merely carries out the terms of the joint resolution which has already been adopted, the Senator, and not the committee or the Senate, is taking advantage of the situation, for the Senate would overwhelmingly pass the appropriation bill to-night if the Senator would allow it to come to a vote.

Mr. DILL. The Senator from Tennessee knows very well that many bills pass one body that do not pass the other; many bills pass one House that may not even reach the stage of consideration in the other House. I do not propose, so far as I can prevent it, to permit a bill to be forced upon the House of Representatives that the House has not willingly taken up when it has had all of a year in which to take it up.

I submit that if there was anything urgent about this matter, if there was anything pressing about it, then the Senator's contention might have some weight, but there is not any reason for hurry; there is no reason for rushing it. The Senator can not stand on his feet now and give a single reason why this appropriation is so urgent that it should be rushed through in a deficiency bill, and, in addition to being rushed through in a deficiency bill, being put in that bill when the measure authorizing the appropriation has not even been considered in the House of Representatives.

The Senator says that I am trying to bludgeon the Senate. I am trying, if possible, to call attention to this situation in such a manner that if I am finally forced to let it go through, the Members of the House of Representatives will realize the advantage that is trying to be taken of them by this method.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. DILL. I will permit an interruption.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator made this exact argument, I know, at least half a dozen times during the consideration of the Nicaraguan survey joint resolution.

Mr. DILL. I have never had to make this argument on any bill, so far as I know, since I have been in the Senate, for I do not recall a case where an appropriation for the urgency of which no one can give a good reason, and especially when the authorizing measure has not passed one of the Houses as yet, has been brought in on a great emergency deficiency bill such as this.

What is there about the Nicaraguan canal survey that is so urgent that we must rush it into a deficiency bill, even, and, much more, rush it into a bill before the authorization for the appropriation has passed the House of Representatives? I do not know of any reason at all, except that some men have the idea that the Nicaraguan canal will be built some day, and they seem to want to have some part in it.

I wish to read on about this treaty and how it was obtained.

In the first place, in entering into that treaty the United States Government, instead of practicing its teachings by indorsing and upholding constitutional procedure, encouraged Nicaragua to violate a provision of its own constitution, which prohibits the negotiation of treaties which in any way impair the territorial integrity or the national sovereignty of the country.

If they had had a president of their own choosing, if they had had a president who represented the will of the people, he would not have been willing to enter into a treaty of this kind, but owing to the fact that they had a president who was set up partially at the instigation of American influences, of course, he did their will; he carried out their preferences and their desires.

In the second place, the treaty was negotiated with a puppet government. On that point Elihu Root expressed the opinion, based on official records, that the Nicaraguan Government at that time did not represent "more than a quarter of the people of the country," and was maintained "in power by virtue of the force applied by the United States."

In the third place, the United States Government entered into the treaty with the full knowledge that a provision of the Cañas-Jérez treaty of 1858 between Costa Rica and Nicaragua inhibited the latter country from signing any such treaty as the Bryan-Chamorro treaty. A decision to that effect had even been handed down in 1888 by President Cleveland in arbitrating a dispute concerning the Cañas-Jérez treaty. In that decision President Cleveland said that "Nicaragua remains bound not to make any grants for canal purposes across her territory without first asking the opinion of Costa Rica."

Yet with President Cleveland's admonition back of all of this, with a history such as this, we proceeded to make this treaty; and now, before a resolution has been passed to authorize the expenditure of the money, the committee comes in here and wants to get this appropriation put on an emergency deficiency bill—not a regular bill—with no demand from any part of the country anywhere for any such haste, nor any pressing necessity for activity.

I will read on:

Furthermore, in case the construction of a canal by Nicaragua should involve injury to the natural rights of Costa Rica, as, for example, in the San Juan River, which is part of the international boundary between the two countries, President Cleveland held that in such cases Costa Rica's consent was "necessary." The United States Government knew from the outset that Nicaragua never attempted to secure the consent of Costa Rica, nor even consulted her before signing the Bryan-Chamorro treaty.

Finally, and in the fourth place, in signing the Bryan-Chamorro treaty the United States Government ignored the diplomatic protests of Costa Rica and Salvador to the effect that Nicaragua was incompetent to sign the treaty because of the violation of their rights. Subsequently these protests were upheld in formal decisions of the court, but they were ignored by Nicaragua, who was sustained by the United States in flouting the formal decision of the court. Such action resulted in the dissolution of the court, which under the guiding influence of Elihu Root had been established in 1908 to settle all disputes that might arise between the Central American States.

Thus the court which through the influence of our President had been set up was destroyed by our own disregard of the actions of that court.

In his message to Congress of January 10, 1927, President Coolidge said that one of the three reasons for our recent intervention in Nicaragua was to protect the rights of the United States acquired by the Bryan-Chamorro treaty. Can such rights be held valid, however, when they were acquired in contravention of an earlier sacred treaty, an arbitral ruling of a President of the United States, and a decision of an international tribunal of justice? Can not even the propriety be questioned of sending marines to protect rights acquired in such a manner? Instead of defending it by armed force, would it not be appropriate for the United States to abrogate the treaty—charging the $3,000,000 invested in it to the same fund as the $25,000,000 paid to Colombia a few years ago—and then negotiate a new treaty by legal methods that would offend neither the majority of Nicaragua's citizens nor its neighbors? Nothing short of such action will ever fully atone for the unfortunate moral effect of the Bryan-Chamorro treaty.

Mr. President, I think this amendment ought to be amended, if it is to be considered at all, by striking out all reference to a Nicaraguan canal and providing for the investigation and survey of the Panama Canal, striking out the words "for a Nicaraguan canal and investigation and survey" in line 21, on page 107, and striking out, on line 23, "requisite for and incident to the investigation and survey to determine the practicability of an interoceanic ship canal over Nicaraguan territory."

I move that the amendment be amended by striking out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 107, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "for a Nicaraguan canal and investigation and survey."

In lines 23, 24, and 25 it is proposed to strike out the words "requisite for and incident to the investigation and survey to determine the practicability of an interoceanic ship canal over Nicaraguan territory."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McMaster	Steiwer
Barkley	Frazier	Neely	Stephens
Bingham	George	Norbeck	Swanson
Black	Glass	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Blaine	Glenn	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Goff	Oddie	Trammell
Brookhart	Hale	Pine	Vandenberg
Broussard	Harris	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Bruce	Harrison	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Capper	Hayden	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Copeland	Heflin	Schall	Watson
Curtis	Jones	Sheppard	Wheeler
Deneen	Kendrick	Shortridge
Dill	Keyes	Smith
Fess	McKellar	Smoot

Mr. SMITH. The senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I realize that there is a very notable sporting event about to take place in Florida. A great many Senators would like to listen to the returns from the Florida fight. I should like to listen to them myself; but it happens that I do not feel, in justice to my convictions, that I should permit this sort of legislation to go through without considerable protest, and it may run on for two or three hours at least. So if Senators want to hear the fight returns, probably they will enjoy them more than they will my remarks and my discussion; and I shall not feel at all offended if they want to go and listen to the returns from the fight.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I wonder if he is suggesting that in order to get them out, so that he can make another point of no quorum and adjourn?

Mr. DILL. That would be very satisfactory; but I think they would come back on a roll call.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would not that be bludgeoning?

Mr. DILL. It would not be the kind of bludgeoning that is going on here by this committee in this bill, by the methods that have been used here.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is a great deal worse than that.

Mr. DILL. I know the Senators are not going to leave the Capitol, as far as that goes.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he will give us his personal assurance that he will talk for an hour without interruption and without roll calls or points of no quorum?

Mr. DILL. Well, I do not know; I might want a roll call. I can not tell.

Mr. SMITH. Has the Senator from Indiana any particular object in asking that question?

Mr. WATSON. Why, certainly. The Senator from Washington invited us to go to a certain place with a certain assurance. Now, he withdraws the assurance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Indiana think the fight will last an hour? [Laughter.]

Mr. WATSON. I do not know a thing about it. I want to go and find out.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this article which I have been reading and commenting on really covers this subject better than any speech I can make myself; so I think I shall continue to read from this discussion of the policy in Nicaragua.

Turning to the latest intervention of the United States in Nicaragua, the writer feels that it came in large measure as the result of inconsistent actions of the Department of State—actions which were condoned, but with ever-increasing embarrassments, until the Stimson agreements provided a solution. To be more specific, after 1913, when President Wilson refused to recognize the Mexican usurper, Huerta, the United States Government had frowned on illegally constituted governments in Latin America. It went even further in 1924 than merely frowning on governments; it gave material and moral aid in support of the recognized constitutional government of Obregon in Mexico. Furthermore, one of the heralded accomplishments of the second Central American Conference at Washington in 1922–23 was the drafting and subsequent ratification of a treaty of peace and amity. The object of this treaty, to quote from Secretary Kellogg, was "to promote constitutional government and orderly procedure in Central America," through those Governments agreeing "upon a joint course of action with regard to the nonrecognition of governments coming into office through coup d'état or revolution."

As late as January 22, 1926, Secretary Kellogg stated that the United States had "adopted the principles of that treaty as its policy in the future recognition of Central American governments." That the United States Government failed to uphold, or even recognize, constitutional government early in 1926 and late the same year recognized an unconstitutional one—specifically, the present government headed by Adolfo Diaz—is shown by the following facts:

As the result of "fair and full" elections a coalition government headed by a moderate Conservative, Solorzano, as President, and a Liberal Vice President, Sacasa, was installed at Nicaragua on Jannury 1, 1925; promptly thereafter it was recognized by the Department of State and by the other Central American governments.

Late in 1925, following a successful coup d'état, General Chamorro illegally recognized the Nicaraguan Congress.

I might say that General Chamorro is the same man who was the head of the Nicaraguan Government when this treaty was made. He is the same man who had his brothers and his brothers-in-law and his cousins and his uncles and his nephews in all different offices Nicaragua has for men to hold. He proceeded, with all these men in office, to make this treaty upon which the rights of Nicaragua are based to-day. So he is the man who comes in and sets up the government in defiance of a government that had been legally chosen in Nicaragua.

This unconstitutional Congress on January 12, 1926, decreed the deposition and exile of the recognized constitutional Vice President Sacasa, and elected Chamorro as first designate (an office equivalent to second vice president). Two days later the resignation of the constitutional President, Solorzano, was received. The deposition of Sacasa—an illegal act because of the illegal character of the Congress which decreed it—and the resignation of Solorzano cleared the way for the assumption of executive powers by the dictator Chamorro on January 16. When, on March 14, the resignation of Solorzano was tardily accepted, there was and still is in theory between Vice President Sacasa and the Nicaraguan presidency, only the illegal decree of an illegally constituted Congress.

The United States Government, through its failure to insist upon the constitutional succession of Sacasa, let pass a golden opportunity "to promote constitutional government and orderly procedure in Nicaragua," and thereby paved the way for the unfortunate events which followed. Sacasa, it is admitted, was physically absent from the country, but, since he was absent "by reason of continuing force" and "continuing fraud," he was, in equity, never absent at all. Refusal to recognize the constitutional right of succession of Sacasa was tantamount to the Department of State's recognizing as legal his deposition by an illegal Congress. It constituted also a reversal of the policy pursued toward Mexico in 1924.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask for order. This is a very interesting magazine article.

Mr. DILL. The truth of the matter is that Senators do not care anything about the facts. The truth of the matter is that a Senate that will permit a committee to disregard the ordinary procedure in regard to appropriations will not pay any attention if they hear the facts, and while I appreciate the desire of the Senator from Alabama that they shall hear them, I shall read them into the RECORD, in the hope that in a day of repentance they will look back and see what they failed to attend to when I called it to their attention.

The United States Government contented itself with merely denying recognition to Chamorro, thereby insuring the nonrecognition of his usurping government by the neighboring Central American Republics.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GOFF. Out of order I ask unanimous consent to substitute House bill 16958, for the relief of certain persons who suffered as a result of an airplane accident, for Senate bill 5781. The bills are identical, and the House bill passed the House late last night, providing for the appropriation of $16,000 to take care of the injuries suffered at Langin Field, in the State of West Virginia, when an airplane, under the direction of the United States Government, met with a very serious accident, and injured and killed several people. The Senate bill was introduced in the Senate on the 11th of February, 1929, went to the Committee on Claims, and was reported out by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] on the 15th of February.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I object. I think that the efforts of the Senate ought to be addressed exclusively to bringing to an end this perverse and irrational filibuster.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOFF. I want to say to the Senator from Maryland that there is no desire on my part to filibuster——

Mr. BRUCE. Not in the least.

Mr. GOFF. And the Senator has no right to say that.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not refer to the Senator; that was not——

Mr. GOFF. The remark might be open to that interpretation.

Mr. BRUCE. That was not the import of my words. What I mean to say is that as long as this filibuster lasts, no other business ought to precede, and I think the Senator from West Virginia and every other Senator ought now to devote his efforts exclusively to bringing this filibuster to an end. So I object.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to the comments of the Senator from Maryland. I know his habit of commenting on everything that displeases him, and so I am not even annoyed by it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I think I had better continue to discuss the bill. I am perfectly willing for the Senator from West Virginia to have his measure passed, if somebody else does not object.

Mr. BRUCE. I object. There is nothing personal to the Senator from West Virginia in the objection, it is needless for me to say. I hope the whole Senate will wake up, and that this filibuster may end.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. DILL. Not at this time. Since I have started in to discuss this I want to complete the article, and I hope the Senator will bear with me——

Mr. SWANSON. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DILL. I want to discuss it a little while. I want the Senator from Maryland particularly to get this information.

Mr. BRUCE. One moment, then.

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. Now, that the Senator is in that compliant state of mind, will he allow me to assure the Senator from West Virginia that I did not have the slightest intent of casting any reflection on him whatsoever, and I am astonished that he should have drawn such an inference from my words.

Mr. DILL. I should be very glad to have the Senator from Maryland give all the assurances he desires to the Senator from West Virginia, because I know it is my opposition to the pet hobby of the Senator from Maryland that disturbs him so greatly. He wants to keep an army down in Nicaragua. He wants to keep the boys down there to be shot at, and he knows this gives another excuse for keeping them there, and I am not surprised.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator is right, and I would like to send some Senators down there to be disposed of, too.

Mr. DILL. I have noticed that these Senators who are so anxious to have some one down there never volunteer to go themselves. That is always a very noticeable fact.

Mr. BRUCE. I am beyond the military age.

Mr. DILL. Yes; and that is one of the excuses men always make when they use an argument of that kind to back their position.

Mr. BRUCE. I am still equal, though, to private combat. [Laughter.]

Mr. DILL. I recognize that. Of course, it may be that the Senate would like to take a recess at this time to enjoy the fight returns; I do not know.

Mr. SMITH. No; we are going to have one here.

Mr. DILL. The Senator would not dignify a little difference of opinion with the Senator from Maryland in terms of fight, I hope.

Mr. SMITH. No; there is no danger.

Mr. DILL. In order that if Senators do want to hear the fight returns they may have that opportunity, I move that the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GOFF. Before that motion is put——

Mr. ASHURST. That is not debatable.

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GOFF. I will ask the Senator if he will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. DILL. Yes; I yielded to the Senator a while ago.

Mr. GOFF. I will ask the Senator from Maryland if he will not withdraw his objection——

Mr. BRUCE. I do.

Mr. GOFF. To my request for unanimous consent, inasmuch as it will lead to no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to read the standing rule of the Senate in regard to the question of interrupting Senators, beginning on page 11, the second clause of the rule. I ask that the Chair read it aloud, regarding the interruption of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

Mr. ASHURST. Page 11. It begins with the words "It shall not be in order."

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the rigid enforcement of that rule.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, suppose a Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. Suppose a Senator yields to another, and does not ask for the application of the rule? I ask the Chair then what application the rule has? It is only a rule which the Senator interrupted can resort to as a defensive measure. The Senator from Washington says he is very glad to yield if the matter will call for no debate.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a rule which can not be waived.

Mr. GOFF. The Senator from Maryland has very kindly withdrawn his objection, and the Senator in charge of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], says he has no objection, and I renew my request.

Mr. DILL. I suggest that anything may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, is the bill to which the Senator from West Virginia refers on the calendar, like other bills?

Mr. GOFF. It is.

Mr. SWANSON. Is there any reason why that bill should be passed in preference to other bills on the calendar?

Mr. GOFF. Oh, yes; I think so; because it has been pending for several sessions and the people who would be benefited by the bill are very much in need of the relief.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not willing, having bills on the calendar, to permit the calendar to be called promiscuously and be silent and let my bills on the calendar fail. I think that if we are going to have a call of the calendar to-morrow, as I understand we are if we get this bill through—and if we do not, we can not—it seems to me we had better proceed and let the bills be called in regular order.

Mr. GOFF. If this bill is passed now, will there not be just one less bill to be passed?

Mr. SWANSON. I have one myself I would like to ask unanimous consent to have passed right now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield further?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. I hope the Senator will not object to my request. In view of this very wide discussion, and the generous application of these rules, I ask the Senator kindly to be as considerate as the Senator from Maryland has been and withdraw his objection.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I make the point of order that under the rules of the Senate it is the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule to which I called attention, even though no point of order is made. I regard the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who is now presiding in the Senate, as one of the most skillful, patient, and courteous Senators we have, and I ask him to enforce that rule.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I will yield the floor to the Senator from West Virginia at this moment if he wants to make a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter has gotten to the point now where the Chair probably should enforce the rules rigidly, and any yielding on the part of a Senator who has the floor will mean that he yields the floor.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I can certainly get the floor again, because there is no rule about how often I may be recognized.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 16958.

AIRPLANE ACCIDENT AT LANGIN FIELD, W. VA.

The bill (H. R. 16958) to provide an appropriation for the payment of claims of persons who suffered damages from deaths, personal injuries, or property loss due to an airplane accident at Langin Field, Moundsville, W. Va., July 10, 1921, was read twice by its title, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read at length, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $16,778.57 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Comptroller General of the United States to make payment of claims for property damage, death, or personal injury due to the Army airplane accident at Langin Field, Moundsville, W. Va., July 10, 1921, to the persons entitled thereto and in the amounts as recommended by the Comptroller General of the United States and as fully set forth in House Document No. 562, Seventieth Congress, second session, pursuant to the act of March 5, 1928. (45 Stat., pt. 2, 7.)

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 5781 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the conferees on the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions have agreed, and I ask that the conference report be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. I object.

The Chair laid before the Senate the conference report on Senate bill 2366.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the report?

Mr. BRUCE. I object.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think it is only fair to inform the Senator from Washington that under the rules he is only permitted to speak twice on the bill to-day.

Mr. DILL. Oh, well——

Mr. CURTIS. Just a moment, please. But no notice having been given I do not think advantage ought to be taken of the rule. I do not think the Senator can yield again unless he wishes to have the rule enforced.

Mr. DILL. Of course the Senator from Kansas recognizes that I have the right to speak twice on any amendment also and I shall, if necessary, offer an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. The rule is perfectly plain as set forth on page 23, that "no Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate, which shall be determined without debate." The Senator made a speech and then yielded the floor by suggesting the absence of a quorum. The last time he yielded the floor a second time.

Mr. DILL. Then I will offer an amendment, if the Senator wants to invoke the rule. I move to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 108, line 5, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington. Those in favor of the amendment——

Mr. DILL. Just a moment Mr. President, I have not concluded my discussion of the subject yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. DILL. I want to continue to read from this article:

The United States Government——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it in order for the Senator to read from a book? I remember some time ago that exact point of order was made.

Mr. DILL. I might remind the Senator that I am not reading from a book. I am reading from an article.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but a magazine article is the same thing. I know it has been held previously to be out of order. I remember several debates in which I participated myself, and it was held by the Chair, Mr. Coolidge being in the chair at the time, that a Senator could not read from a book or pamphlet unless it was written by himself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the rule to be that if the book were sent to the clerk's desk with the request that it be read, it could not be read, if anyone objected to it, without leave of the Senate, but the Chair does not understand that the rule applies to a Senator himself reading from a book.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I recall one night when the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] was reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read at length, and he was stopped. I think Mr. Coolidge was in the chair at the time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope there will be no effort to take the Senator from the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all.

Mr. DILL. I may have to recite it from memory, but I am not sure that I could recite it accurately.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has read it so often that he ought to be able to recite it from memory.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator may not read at length from any periodical, but he may read briefly from it and comment as he goes along.

Mr. DILL. I have been doing that quite continuously, I think.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think the Senator is discussing a question upon which he has very definite views. The Senate does not agree with him. I am not of a turn of mind to hammer down and beat down a man just because he does not happen to agree with the Senate. The fact that the Senator is alone, or is practically alone, ought to inspire our respect rather than our ridicule. I hope no effort will be made to take the Senator from the floor.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I appreciate the good will of the Senator. I have said before and I say again that if the joint resolution had been passed by both Houses and the appropriation for carrying out the will expressed by the Congress were before us, I might have something to say against it, but I would not attempt to delay action and discuss it as I have discussed the amendment here to-night. But I object to this covert method being used to put an appropriation into a great bill, as is being done here, and I have my right to protest against it.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the able Senator in his intense feeling really does the Senate an injustice when he charges it is a covert attempt. I do not think it is that.

Mr. DILL. I do not know what else to call the action on the part of the Appropriations Committee, because it is something that could not be done otherwise. It could not be done on a separate bill, but it has been brought in as a part of a great emergency measure. It is just exactly that and nothing else.

Mr. ASHURST. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. DILL. No; because a rule has been adopted that permits this sort of thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. When the Senate overwhelmingly adopted the proposal, it can not be said that it was covertly done. I think that is an expression in violation of the rule.

Mr. DILL. I will say improper. I have no dictionary here and so I will not argue with Senators about the meaning of terms. The Senator understands what I am talking about. He understands the injustice and the unfairness of the methods being used in this matter.

When Senators say that I am alone in my opposition to this measure I want to remind them that I may be alone in this body, but I am not alone in the great masses of the American people who are disgusted and tired of having boys, who have taken the oath of allegiance to the flag to protect it, sent down to a foreign country to give their lifeblood, if need be, to protect the investments of Wall Street investors who can not collect their money unless they have somebody down there to help collect the government revenues.

To me it is a serious proposition when young men go into the Army or the marines or the Navy of this country and swear allegiance to the flag and to protect this Government and to protect its rights, and then those young men are sent into a foreign country to carry out orders which I believe are illegal and not authorized under the Constitution of the United States. I do not believe a single marine is legally in Nicaragua to-day. A year ago when this question was before the Senate we were told that they must be kept there because foreign negotiations had been made whereby an agreement had been given to factions in Nicaragua that an honest election would be held. Now that election has been over for four months and still the marines are kept there and still boys are shot every day and boys die there.

Only yesterday I received a letter from a woman in New York City who said her boy had been killed in Nicaragua and she asked if I would not help to get his body brought back that he might be buried at home. In that letter she said that she was willing that her boy should go, if need be, and die for his country, but she was unwilling that he should go and give his lifeblood that a few men might collect on investments that have been made down there for speculative purposes.

Owing to the fact that she was from another State I referred her letter to one of the Senators from New York, but I do not entirely sympathize with the viewpoint of those who would override and disregard the sentiment and the demand of the great masses of the American people, as I believe it to be, that young men who go into the marines or the Army or the Navy to protect our country and our flag should be used for the sinister purpose of maintaining order so that speculators who have invested their money can collect profits on those investments.

I repeat that the record of this Government in Nicaragua, the record we have made in our activities in that little country, will not bear the light of day without any American who has any regard for his country's record blushing with shame.

If there was any real need for this canal, if there was any pressing demand for it, if our commerce on the seas to-day were unable to get through the Panama Canal, then I could understand why Senators would come here and make demand that we rush the appropriation into this bill. But when there is no such demand, as I said before, and when the average number of ships going through the canal is only 19 per day and the capacity of the canal is 54, it certainly will be many years before the capacity of the canal will be exhausted. When I call attention further to the fact that by this new dam that will supply water and another lock that could be constructed it will be 40 years after the facilities of the present canal are exhausted before we need another canal across the Isthmus, I say that there is no reason from a commercial standpoint for pressing action for the Nicaraguan route at this time.

The truth of the matter is that anybody who dares to suggest that the Constitution be obeyed or that the rights of the private men in the marines shall be considered is ridiculed and laughed at and told that he is in the minority. It does not worry me very much to be in the minority, thank God. I have been in the minority a good many times and I have never hesitated to be in the minority when I thought I was right. If ever the time comes when I hesitate to be in the minority simply because I am in the minority, then I hope I shall be retired from this or any other public body where I am supposed to be a representative of the people of this country.

In the article which I was attempting to read, and which seems to have disturbed some of those who are trying to rush this appropriation through without the legislation having been passed, the writer said further:

Finally, late in 1926, after Chamorro had resigned, an opportunity was given for the Nicaraguan Congress again to be legally constituted on November 10. By this Congress Adolfo Diaz, in place of Chamorro, was elected first designate, and on November 14, as such, he assumed executive powers. In his message of January 10, 1927, President Coolidge declared that the acts of the reconstituted Congress may be considered legal, hence, he argues, the constitutionality of Diaz's government.

The writer believes, however, even in case the Congress which elected Diaz was legally constituted, it was incompetent to elect anyone as the successor to a recognized constitutional Vice President who had only been illegally deprived of his office by an illegally constituted Congress. Certainly, when Sacasa landed on the Nicaraguan coast on December 1, 1926, he rightfully claimed that he was the constitutional President of Nicaragua. Nevertheless, Diaz was accorded recognition by the United States Government one week after his assumption of powers.

Thus I say this Government has continually interfered in the constitutional Government of Nicaragua, and it has interfered by the force of power which it has exerted there in the form of its armed forces—the marines.

Aside from the above opinion concerning the constitutionality of the succession of Diaz to the Presidency, he is ineligible on still another count. Article 2 of the general Central American treaty of 1923, which was inspired by Secretary Hughes, prohibits the recognition of any person as President who had been a "leader" or one of the leaders of a [successful] coup d'état, or revolution.

On the basis of evidence laid before the United States Senate on January 13, 1927, Chairman BORAH, of the Foreign Relations Committee, affirmed that Diaz was "as much a part of that coup d'état as Chamorro," hence was equally as ineligible for succession to the Presidency as the latter had been held to be by the United States Government.

That recital of facts only bears out the contention made in the former parts of the article as to how the Government disregards entirely the people of Nicaragua, the will of the people there, and proceeds to support the official whom they desire.

Now, that there has been an election and the new officials are in charge there, we are told that they must train a skeleton army of some kind or a national guard of some kind, and we are to keep 3,500 marines down there to train the national guard. It would only take a few officers to do that. There is no excuse or reason for keeping any great body of marines down there now, but if this appropriation can be put through and we can get some engineers down there and get some stations established, then there will be a new reason for keeping them there to protect Americans who are there surveying the canal. If we stand here in the Senate, then, and attempt to urge that the marines be brought out, we will be told that we are not willing to use the forces of the American Government to protect American rights and American interests in the Canal Zone.

LANDING OF AMERICAN MARINES

The election of Diaz inspired the outraged Liberal revolutionists to renewed efforts, and these in turn inspired Diaz repeatedly to solicit the support of the United States. Finally, on December 23, 1926, American marines were landed for the avowed purpose "of protecting American and foreign lives and property." The validity of such an excuse has been frequently questioned in the United States Congress; Senator BORAH, on February 23, 1927, inquired: "What foreign lives have been lost or threatened? What property of foreigners destroyed?" A second excuse given for the intervention was that it was necessary in order to uphold the Monroe doctrine. Such an allegation provokes academic controversy, but it may undeniably be affirmed that the latest intervention in Nicaragua was not necessary in order to uphold and defend the Monroe doctrine as it was interpreted and applied prior to 1902.

Now, of course, they do not even claim that the Monroe doctrine has anything to do with it. The only excuse they have left now is that they want to train the national guard of Nicaragua. That is a pretty flimsy and weak excuse, and so they are getting ready to have a new reason by rushing this appropriation through in the deficiency bill.

Mr. President, I had intended a while ago to make a motion, but was interrupted by the Senator from West Virginia. I had intended then to make a motion that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and I make that motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. DILL. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dill	Keyes	Smith
Barkley	Edge	King	Smoot
Bingham	Fess	McKellar	Steiwer
Black	Fletcher	Neely	Swanson
Blaine	Frazier	Norris	Trammell
Bratton	Glass	Oddie	Vandenberg
Brookhart	Glenn	Pine	Walsh, Mont.
Broussard	Goff	Pittman	Warren
Bruce	Hale	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Capper	Heflin	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Copeland	Jones	Schall
Curtis	Kendrick	Sheppard

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I understand that the Senate is without a quorum. I move that the Sergeant at Arms——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No announcement has as yet been made.

Mr. NEELY. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the names of the absent Senators, and was interrupted by—

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I make the point of order that there is no provision in the rules and there is no authority for having the roll called the second time. I therefore, following the rules, move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to do just what the rules require, and that is to request and, if necessary, to compel the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the roll is now being called for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NEELY. I make the point of order that there is no authority under the rules for a second roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has followed the custom of the Senate in ordering the clerk to call the names of the absent Senators. What is the motion the Senator makes?

Mr. NEELY. The motion I make is in conformity with what the rules require in the circumstances that now exist in the Senate, that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request and, if necessary, to compel the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the practice of the Senate ever since I have been here has been to call the roll for a second time in order to demonstrate whether or not there is a quorum present. During the second call Senators may come in and answer to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair has ordered to be done. The clerk will complete the call of the absentees.

The Chief Clerk resumed calling the names of the absent Senators, and was interrupted by—

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is a motion pending, is there not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put that motion after the call of the absent Senators is completed. The clerk will continue the call of the absent Senators.

The Chief Clerk resumed calling the names of the absent Senators, and was interrupted by—

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Presiding Officer, I made a parliamentary inquiry as to what disposition was made of the motion of the Senator from West Virginia. He moved——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion was made while the clerk was calling the roll. When the roll call shall have been completed, the Chair will put the motion. The clerk will resume calling the names of the absentees.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded calling the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. NYE answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate adjourn. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. DILL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Chair instruct the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. NEELY. One moment before that motion is voted on, Mr. President. I desire to amend the Senator's motion by having the Chair instruct the Sergeant at Arms in the language of the rule; that is, to request and, if necessary, compel their attendance. They can ascertain the result of the Stribling-Sharkey fight to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is that the Sergeant at Arms request and, if necessary, compel the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will request and, if necessary, compel the attendance of absent Members.

Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. DENEEN, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present; and, without objection, further proceedings under the rule are dispensed with.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this is a bill containing something over 200 pages. I had no idea that this item was included in this deficiency bill. I did not suppose that the Appropriations Committee would put in an item of this kind prior to the time that the so-called Nicaraguan survey bill became a law. The only reason why this item is in this bill, and the only reason under the rules by which it could be sustained as a practical proposition, is because the Nicaraguan survey bill has passed this body during this session of Congress. It has not passed the House of Representatives, and, of course, has not been signed by the President of the United States.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator is aware that an estimate covering this sum of money for a survey was transmitted to Congress by the President from the Budget Bureau?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have been informed that that is true. I am not arguing that the amendment is out of order, although I think a good argument could be made along that line; but I am not making that claim at all. I am stating the facts. If I misstate them, I should be very glad to have any Senator correct me.

The Nicaraguan bill has passed the Senate. It has not passed the House of Representatives. It has not been signed by the President. It is not a law. It may not pass the House of Representatives. It may not be signed by the President of the United States. It may never become a law; and still we are appropriating public money in this bill to make that survey.

I can not understand the haste. I can not understand, except for reasons that I am going to give later, why Senators are so anxious that before the ink is dry on the record by which the survey bill passed this body we are called upon to appropriate $150,000 to make this survey.

I do not see, on the face of things, why we should be so expeditious. Senators are complaining of the time that has been taken. They have been censuring the Senator from Washington. In the colloquy to which I listened a little while ago it was stated several times by Senators interrupting him that he was the only Member of the Senate who was opposed to this provision in the bill, or words to that effect. Mr. President, I want to say that there is at least one other Member of the Senate who is opposed to this provision in the bill, and since I found out an hour or so ago that this thing was in the bill I have heard expressions from at least seven or eight Senators against this particular provision; and I have heard several Senators who are going to vote to keep it in the bill say that they think it was a mistake to put it in this bill at this time.

Why the haste? Nicaragua will still be there after the 4th of March. The river and the lake and the place where we are going to dig the ditch and make the survey will still be there next year. We shall not need another canal, if we ever need it, for the next 15 years. There is not any reason, on the face of things, why we should all madly rush forward now and demand that a survey be made of this proposed canal. The probabilities are that we never will build it, at least not within the lifetime of many of those who are now Members of this body.

Why the haste? Why take up the valuable time of the Senate just before the 4th of March, when other important bills are crowding at our doors for consideration, and yell against those who are opposed to any amendment of this kind, "You shall not open your mouths, you shall not say a word, or we will charge you with filibustering?" Why this attempt to put through this item under the spur and the lash, and cry out against any man who dares to raise his voice against it that he is a filibusterer?

It is the same old story; but there is another reason in this as I see it. It is the same old story that every two years, in the short session of Congress, we must submit to what we believe to be wrong, to what we believe to be a sin against the taxpayers of the United States, if we dare to raise our voices in criticism or in objection.

I do not want this bill to fail. I have cooperated to the best of my ability to see that it does not fail. I said before that I was surprised when I found that this item was contained in it; and yet, even at the risk of being classed as one who is trying to filibuster, I want to raise my weak voice against this particular item of appropriation. I think it is wrong; and, after all is said and done, I believe that it is a peg that is put in this bill for the purpose of hanging on to the peg the right to maintain an Army in Nicaragua, the right to continue our marines in that country, to give an excuse to the President of the United States to keep our soldier boys down in that country.

It would not seem that way if it were not for the fact that we had the promise, really, at the last session of Congress, from those who were representing the administration, that when the election was held our boys would be brought home. We had the promise on that score even by those who believed that keeping our soldiers in Nicaragua was unconstitutional, that it was done without any authority of law, either the law of our country or international law. But they said, "We have made an agreement, illegal though it is, wrong though it may be, we have made an agreement to hold an election. As a result of the agreement, the arms of the insurgents and the regular soldiers there have been surrendered to our country. After we have disarmed them, after we have made this agreement, even though it was made without authority, even though there is no legal right for our soldiers to be there, it seems best that we should carry out the agreement. Otherwise, it might be charged that we were acting in bad faith."

So the proposal to bring the boys home was rejected by this body. Then the other day, when the matter came up, the Senate upon a roll-call vote decided that we ought to keep that agreement, that we ought to bring the soldiers home, that the election had been held, that peace prevailed in Nicaragua, that the new officials had been installed in office, and that there was no further reason on any ground why our soldiers should be kept there.

So we adopted a provision that in effect meant that they should be brought home. It is true that the next day, when the administration rounded up its forces, it convinced some of the Senators that they were wrong, and that they ought to change their votes. It brought in the absentees. Some who voted to bring the marines home the day before were absent the next day, and the administration had enough votes to reverse the judgment of the Senate taken on the preceding day. But outside of all that there would certainly come a time, approaching every day, when the sentiment of the country would crystallize around the proposition that we are keeping our soldiers there without any reason given by those who are holding them there, by an administration that does not even pretend to give officially to this body any reason why they should be held there longer.

Now, we are in all haste rushing, tumbling over each other, we are bringing in an appropriation item here to provide for a survey down in Nicaragua, to appropriate money for something that has not yet been enacted into law. We must do it now, so that those in charge of the Army will be able to say, "We have engineers there, we have our supplies there, we are in possession down there, making a survey for a new canal that we do not expect to build, and, if we do, it will not be in this generation, but we have our men there. Therefore we must keep our soldiers there."

It looks to me as though the Senator from Washington is right, that, after all, behind this is the fact that we want some excuse to continue in Nicaragua with a standing American Army.

Why, some might ask, are we wasting valuable time, the precious moments between now and the 4th of March, in discussing this? We must either discuss it or swallow the dose silently without saying a word. We put aside the reapportionment bill; we have practically put aside the radio bill; we have put aside dozens of bills in which the country is greatly interested and which most of the people, I believe, would like to see enacted into law. We put them aside because we are wasting time trying to get enacted into law another peg upon which can be hung the claim to keep an army of American soldiers on foreign soil.

Mr. President, it seems to me that even though under our rules we have a technical right to put this in the bill, there is no reason for it; there is no hurry for it, when we were trying a little while ago to follow a leader whose principal cry, almost his only cry, was "Economy! Economy! Economy! Do not spend the public money." Here, when he is about to lose his power and his influence, we are rushing forth, spending $150,000 for an entirely useless purpose.

It was said in the debate on the joint resolution providing for a Nicaraguan canal survey that we had surveyed that route once, that we had all the details of it, and in answer to that the cry came that that was a long time ago, that we ought to do it over, that "It has been so long ago that we ought to resurvey it, perhaps." But now we are going to resurvey it, and I do not believe there is a Senator here who believes but that before we actually build the canal, if we ever do, we will have to resurvey it again. The people who survey it now will be dead and buried long before we will commence to build the canal, if we ever commence to build it, and those who follow us, if they believe, as we apparently do, that we need another canal, and start to build it, will have to survey it over again. There will be just as much improvement in the next 10 years, I presume, in engineering as there has been in the last 10 years. So the survey we will make now will not be of any value as a practical proposition when we come to dig the canal. It will have accomplished one purpose, however, if by means of it we are able to keep in Nicaragua an encampment of United States soldiers.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator realizes that this very appropriation will be another excuse for keeping the marines there?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. As I said a while ago, it begins now to look to me as though that is the real object of this appropriation. That is the only object that is going to be accomplished by it, in my humble judgment.

It is true, we have passed a joint resolution through the Senate providing for another survey in Nicaragua. If that passes the House, if it becomes a law, then it will become our duty to make an appropriation to carry it out. In the meantime we can bring our soldier boys home at least long enough to let them get acquainted with the folks at home. We can bring them back for a little while, and get them out of the marshes and the tropical climate in which they must live there, and let the people of Nicaragua for a few months, perhaps for a year, live their own lives without the coercion of foreign soldiers to tell them what to do, or to even hold their elections.

Mr. President, without regard to any technicality, without regard to the technical right to put this particular amendment on the bill, it seems to me under these circumstances it ought to be taken out. It seems to me that we are going far afield when we undertake at this stage of the proceedings to provide for the expenditure of the vast sum of money contemplated by this appropriation.

Mr. President, I have just been interrupted by Senators talking to me about the boxing contest held to-night in Florida. It was suggested that since the Chair is separated from his fellows by such a distance, and is undoubtedly very much interested, having the floor, I was deputized by my fellow Senators to announce to the Chair that Sharkey won the fight. [Laughter.] He won on points, however, there being no knockout. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in other words, he won in the same manner the marines have won in Nicaragua so far.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say one more word to the Senators here about the time that has been taken up on this bill. If it was not for the fact that the 4th of March is just ahead of us, nobody would have thought, so far as anything I have heard is concerned, since the agreement early in the evening was made, that anything that has been said was in the nature even of a filibuster. After the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] decided practically to withdraw any further attempt to get up the reapportionment bill, I think the debate has been perfectly proper and very instructive. I have listened to what the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] has said since I came into the Chamber, since I found out about this item being in this bill, with a great deal of interest.

I do not believe that there is any Senator here who can answer the argument he has made. I do not believe it is answerable. I do not believe, when we come right down to logic and facts, there is any way satisfactorily to explain why this item should be in this bill at this time.

Those Senators who want to do the business we are called upon to do before the 4th of March, and who are leaders here, who have charge of these great committees, who control the Committee on Appropriations, those Senators who have controlled this bill and have framed it and have brought it in to the Senate, knew when they brought it in that the 4th of March was only a few days ahead. They knew that if orderly debate took place on one-half of the items which are susceptible of debate in the consideration of a bill of this kind we could not even finish the consideration of the bill before the 4th of March.

Why did they put in such an item? Was it because they thought Senators would not dare to debate it for fear they might be charged with filibustering? Was it because they thought that if there were an opportunity for full debate and consideration the Senate would take this item out, and they would take advantage of the fact that only a few days remained, and they could put in an item here that we would have to swallow just because it was near the end of the session, when we all know everything not passed will be dead? It seems they are to blame if delay has taken place on account of this bill.

I want to say, as far as I am concerned, I do not want this bill to fail, I want it to pass, but my anxiety to see it passed is not so great that I must close my mouth and remain silent here while Senators try to put through, under the whip and spur of the few days only that are left, an item which to me seems so objectionable, an item which, after we have simmered it all down, has nothing, in my judgment, in reality to sustain it except that somebody wants an excuse to keep our soldiers in a foreign land.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that often we pass bills in both Houses providing authorizations for expenditures, but because we can not get the Bureau of the Budget to submit an estimate, we can not get the items considered in the Senate. But in this case, when only one House has passed a measure, the Bureau of the Budget submits an item and the Committee on Appropriations puts it in the bill, and if the House accepts it, they will never need to pass the joint resolution pending over there, because this is in effect the same thing in the way of legislation as the joint resolution in the House which has not yet passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, Mr. President, if we wanted an estimate to help agriculture, to help the farmers of America to build a road or to do something of that kind, we probably could not get it, but if we want an estimate upon which to hang the right to pass an appropriation item to keep our soldiers in Nicaragua, or to give an excuse for keeping them there, it is not difficult to get.

It seems to me that if our Panama Canal were clogged with traffic, if we were not able to get a ship through, there might be some reason for this haste. I would not object seriously to a survey if Senators wanted to make it, or if officials of the Government wanted to make it, but I would not want to commence to-night. It seems to me that it is not something that is as urgent as many other things we ought to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator inform us when the Budget Bureau sent this estimate down?

Mr. NORRIS. I am not informed as to that. I did not know until to-night that there had been such an estimate made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it conceded that the Bureau of the Budget actually sent an estimate in?

Mr McKELLAR. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it was an item from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget with the approval of the Budget.

Mr. NORRIS. The question is, When was it sent here?

Mr. SMOOT. It was sent to the committee at the time we considered the bill. It was before the committee when the item was put into the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was it before or since the passage of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was after the passage of the joint resolution by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the important part. The estimate was sent by the Budget soon after the passage through the Senate of the Nicaraguan survey joint resolution, but, of course, the estimate comes before the joint resolution has passed the House. The estimate comes before the joint resolution has become a law. That only strengthens my idea that the administration is in terrible straits to give some reason to the people of the United States why we are keeping our marines in Nicaragua.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator inform me and others here under what rule of the Senate or what law the Bureau of the Budget has the authority to submit an estimate for an expenditure that has not been authorized under the law, when the Senate itself which helped to create the Bureau of the Budget can not consider the item unless it has been authorized by statute?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not the statute before me. The estimate, however, is here.

Mr. McKELLAR. The rule of the Senate authorized it.

Mr. BARKLEY. How can the rule of the Senate authorize the Bureau of the Budget to send down an estimate when the Senate itself can not consider the item?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will read to the Senator the rule that permits it:

All general appropriations shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution passed by the Senate during that session.

The authorization having passed the Senate at this session made the item in order under the rule. That is Rule XVI.

Mr. DILL. But that does not answer the question of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we are all familiar with the rule.

Mr. SWANSON. I did not say anything about the right of the Budget to send the estimate.

Mr. NORRIS. But that was the question of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SWANSON. The second part of the rule gives the authority for the Senate's action.

Mr. NORRIS. The question asked by the Senator from Kentucky that I am unable to answer was whether the Budget had authority of law to make an estimate when the provision for it had not yet been made by law.

Mr. SWANSON. I understood the final part of the Senator's question was, What right has the Senate to consider the amendment when the Budget itself had no right to send down the estimate, and consequently the Senate could not consider it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator construe the rule to mean that the joint resolution, which must be acted on by both Houses, is included in this rule, or simply a resolution of the Senate which requires no action on the part of the House?

Mr. SWANSON. The rule has always been that if we pass a resolution through the Senate authorizing an appropriation it is not objectionable under the rule of the Senate, paragraph 1 of Rule XVI.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, without extending the argument, I go even a step further——

Mr. NORRIS. Before this proceeds further, as the Chair has announced a while ago that he was going to enforce the rule strictly——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield with the understanding that the rule will not be enforced so strictly as to take me from the floor. I think it is quite apparent to the Chair that there is no filibuster going on now at least. Senators are asking perfectly proper questions, and I would like to yield to them. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. While I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has made it very clear that the estimate was made within an absolutely clear interpretation of the rule if the Senate had passed such a resolution, I call attention to the particular line in Rule XVI which states "or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation."

It particularizes the term "treaty stipulation." As a matter of fact, we have had a treaty stipulation with Nicaragua for 15 years, ratified by the Senate of the United States. We authorized the expenditure of $3,000,000 under that treaty stipulation. There is no question in the world that we enacted legislation so far as Panama is concerned time after time and appropriated every year for Panama. Now, in my judgment, a strict interpretation of the rule would permit an appropriation carrying out a treaty stipulation with Nicaragua and the next step would be a survey even if we never had introduced a resolution. I believe that under a strict interpretation of Rule XVI the Budget Bureau and the President could send an estimate here carrying out the treaty stipulation, asking the Senate to include in an appropriate appropriation bill a sufficient sum to carry out the next step after we had purchased the right of way, which would naturally be a survey. I am not a lawyer, but that sounds to me perfectly logical as an interpretation of Rule XVI even if we had not passed the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me remind my genial friend from New Jersey again, as I did in the beginning, that I have not made a point of order against the amendment. I said that while I thought a good argument could be made, I distinctly disavowed any intention of bringing up the question. So, if time is the essence of everything here, I would feel constrained to say that the friends of the appropriation are consuming unnecessary time talking about an irrelevant proposition which I am not even urging. If I was inclined to be critical, I might even suggest that the Senator from New Jersey was engaged in a mild sort of filibuster against his own proposition.

Mr. EDGE. I have taken two minutes to interpret the rule.

Mr. NORRIS. Two minutes are precious. They are so precious that while those two minutes were in operation there was not anything else in the way of time that was in operation. Time is so precious that we always consume one minute before God gives us the next one.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Not with any purpose to discuss the Nicaraguan problem, I would like the Senator to tell me what restraint of the law would prevent the Budget from sending an estimate to Congress whether either House had passed a resolution or a bill? That is what the Budget is there for, to merely estimate expenditures, and the fact that the Budget does estimate does not at all oblige either House to accept those estimates. But I did not know there was anything to prevent the Budget from sending up its estimates.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think there is. I do not know of anything.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. As a matter of fact it is the second estimate that has been sent up for this very matter. The President sent it on May 23, 1928.

Mr. NORRIS. What was that for?

Mr. McKELLAR. To carry out this very matter. If the Senator will permit me I will read just a portion of the message of February 25, 1929, as follows:

On August 5, 1914, a convention was concluded with the Government of Nicaragua, proclaimed June 24, 1916, by which the Government of Nicaragua granted in perpetuity to the Government of the United States, forever free from all taxation or other public charge, the exclusive proprietary rights necessary and convenient for the construction, operation, and maintenance of an interoceanic canal by way of the San Juan River and the great Lake of Nicaragua or by way of any route over Nicaraguan territory, the details of the terms upon which such canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained to be agreed to by the two Governments whenever the Government of the United States shall notify the Government of Nicaragua of its desire or intention to construct such canal.

The purpose of the estimate of appropriation herewith submitted is to enable the Secretary of War to commence an investigation and survey to determine the practicability of an interoceanic ship canal over Nicaraguan territory, and, in connection therewith, to also commence an investigation and survey to determine the possibilities and cost of enlarging the Panama Canal to the extent which may be necessary to meet the future needs of interoceanic shipping.

The accompanying estimate is submitted as a substitute for one of equal amount transmitted by you to the Congress on May 23, 1928 (S. Doc. No. 145, 70th Cong., 1st sess.), which provided only for an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

The above estimate of appropriation is to provide for a contingency which has arisen since the transmission of the Budgets for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930. I recommend that it be transmitted to Congress.

Very respectfully,

H. M. LORD,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

The President sent it here in accordance with that message. This is the second Budget estimate that has been made.

Mr. NORRIS. All of which is valuable information, but it does not have anything more to do with the subject of my remarks than the flowers that bloom in the springtime. I would like again to announce that I am not making a point of order. For the sake of my argument or anything that I shall say it is conceded that the amendment is in order. I have been trying to impress that upon Senators. But notwithstanding the fact that I concede it is in order it does not follow that I ought to favor the appropriation. I seem to have been unable to draw the minds of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Tennessee away from this fact that this is legal. They say: "Here is an item of appropriation. It is perfectly legal under the law and under the rule. Therefore pass it. Here is an appropriation which we have a right to bring in here. Therefore pass it. You have not any right to oppose it if we have a right to bring it in here."

That is the contention which they seem to be making here, one to which, of course, I can not agree. Notwithstanding the amendment is in order, under all of the circumstances, a part of which I have tried in my weak way to relate to the Senate, it still ought to be taken out of the bill. I would like to say to those Senators who so often reminded the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] that he stood alone that when the roll is called on this particular item they will find there are at least a few other Senators besides the two who have spoken against the item who are opposed to it and who will be recorded as voting against it.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. DILL. Does my colleague desire the floor?

Mr. JONES. I did not intend to consume any time if we were about ready to take a vote and I waited until I saw my colleague rise. I thought I could use two or three minutes, possibly.

Mr. DILL. The Senator can take all the time he wants.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I am sure of that. I just want to say a few words, however. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I must say that I did not know this item was in the bill. I was engaged in conferences a good part of the time, so I was not able to be with the Appropriations Committee all of the time after the subcommittee reported the bill to it. Therefore, as I said, I did not know this item was in the bill.

I can hardly believe that the committee, however, was actuated by any of the motives that seem to be ascribed to it. It has been suggested that the item was put in the bill, which must be disposed of, of course, within a few days, in order to force Senators to accept it whether they might desire to do so or not, in order to have the bill passed.

I can hardly believe, Mr. President, that any Senator on the Committee on Appropriations had any such idea in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. McKELLAR. In order that I may state in that connection that I have always at all time been in favor of bringing the marines out of Nicaragua. I voted for doing so the other day on the first vote, when it carried. When the question came up a second time, I again voted to withdraw the marines. I am very much in favor of bringing the marines back from Nicaragua, and yet I am also very much in favor of this appropriation, because I think the Nicaraguan canal ought to be started as soon as possible.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I was just going to come to that. It has been suggested that the purpose of the proposed survey in Nicaragua, and possibly the purpose of the construction of the proposed Nicaraguan canal, is to keep our marines in Nicaragua.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be, Mr. President—I have forgotten now—that in my remarks I ascribed to the members of the committee something that I did not intend to ascribe. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I certainly have had no thought that any member of the committee or any Member of the Senate has wanted to do or has tried to do anything that is in any way dishonorable or wrong. They are acting from conviction. I meant to outline, if I did not, what I believed the effect would be, and if I have gone any further than that, I desire to say most explicitly that I had no intention of casting any reflection upon any member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the Senator from Nebraska did not intend to do that, but I got that impression from his remarks.

Then it has been intimated—and I refer now to what the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has said—or, at least, I got that impression, that the proposed survey is being urged in order that our marines may be kept in Nicaragua. I believe that any Senator who may have any such idea, upon reflection, will conclude that it is not the case. I do not believe there is any Senator on this floor who is pressing this legislation in the hope or in the belief or with the purpose of keeping our marines in Nicaragua. I do not believe that there is a Senator here who does not desire to see our marines withdrawn from Nicaragua just as soon as possible.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the new President will bring them back.

Mr. JONES. I hope so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think he will and I think he ought to. I, myself, think he ought to do so by all means, but I can not see any connection between the building of the Nicaraguan Canal and the keeping of our marines in Nicaragua.

Mr. EDGE. If we can believe the ruling powers in Nicaragua at the present time, it is their judgment that the easiest way to get the marines out of Nicaragua is to start the survey.

Mr. JONES. I am not questioning any Senator's honesty or his belief as to what the result may be; and if I thought this provision was being urged by anybody for the purpose or with the intent of keeping our marines in Nicaragua, I would do everything that I possibly could to prevent it; but I can not ascribe any such motive to any Senator in this body.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that I introduced a resolution, which has been pending here quite a while, calling on the President to withdraw our marines from Nicaragua, and I voted the other day for the amendment on the naval bill requiring that they be withdrawn. I am heartily in favor of getting the marines out of Nicaragua as soon as possible. I think they will be brought out in a year. I am, however, also heartily in favor of the joint resolution of the Senator from New Jersey. I do not think that question is at all involved in the pending proposition. It shows wisdom on the part of Congress to push this undertaking and go ahead and have the survey made, because we are going to need that canal one of these days, and it is not going to be very long, in my judgment, before we shall need it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a word further. This, in my judgment, is the reason why the committee put this item into the bill, and I think it is the sole reason: The committee knew that the Senate had passed the joint resolution providing for the survey. This is the last appropriation bill that will come before Congress at this session. If no provision should be put into this bill appropriating the money to make the survey, and the joint resolution should pass the House and go to the President and become, in fact, a law, then, there would be no money available until next winter, when we should pass an appropriation bill providing for it. In my judgment, that is the reason why the committee put in the provision. I have not any doubt whatever that if the joint resolution shall not pass the House, this item will be left out in conference.

I will say for myself that I do not think we would suffer greatly if we did not have the money for the survey before next winter, but I can not see how we would suffer any, if it is desired to expedite the survey, by putting this item in the bill in the Senate, with the knowledge that if the joint resolution providing for the Nicaraguan Canal survey shall not have passed the House before the conference report shall come back, the item will be left out of the appropriation bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, is not the Senator willing for us to have a vote on this item now?

Mr. JONES. Yes; if I thought we could have had a vote, I would not have said anything, but when my colleague rose I knew he would be glad to yield to me for a few minutes.

Let me say a word further, which I intended to say. I do not question the motives of my colleague in any way. I am satisfied that he is simply doing what he thinks ought to be done and what he thinks is justified under the circumstances, and I have nothing but admiration for his standing by his belief.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have listened with deep interest and some amusement to my colleagues on this floor who protest their great desire to bring the marines out of Nicaragua and almost in the same breath say they are in favor of this appropriation, which will afford one of the biggest excuses that Congress could provide to continue to keep the marines in Nicaragua. There is more than merely the fact that a number of American boys are being kept in Nicaragua, as I believe, in violation of the Constitution as well as of the law. There is being established by this act a precedent that will come back in future years to plague us in another day probably, when under other circumstances it will be used to justify action even more objectionable than that now proposed.

It is a significant fact that until very recent years in our dealings with Central America no President has even attempted to use armed forces outside of this country except for the immediate protection of life and property.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that seven members of the Appropriations Committee who voted to report out this bill voted to recall the marines from Nicaragua.

Mr. DILL. That is just what I said. Senators stand here and tell how anxious they are to have the marines brought back from Nicaragua and then they propose to vote for an appropriation which will afford the biggest reason and excuse for keeping them there in the future.

Mr. McKELLAR. We do not agree as to that at all. I think it is just the other way.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator mean to say that if our engineers were down in Nicaragua working on a canal survey and some kind of trouble should break out down there that he would not be in favor of having marines go down there to protect them?

Mr. McKELLAR. If our engineers and their employees shall be sent to Nicaragua, it will be found that we will have no further use for any marines down there at all, in my judgment. There is a difference of opinion as to that.

Mr. DILL. The Senator does not answer my question. The question I asked the Senator was whether or not if the engineers were there and revolutionary trouble or other trouble should break out in Nicaragua he would object to the President sending marines there to protect our own engineers?

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the contingency mentioned it might be necessary to do that.

Mr. DILL. Yes; but is not the Senator then helping——

Mr. McKELLAR. But why should we conjure up such a condition, when we would be in Nicaragua on a peaceful, friendly mission under contractual relations? In my judgment, the best way in the world to get the marines out of Nicaragua is to carry out the provisions of the treaty with Nicaragua.

Mr. DILL. The Senator asks me a question and then proceeds himself to answer it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that, although I voted twice to bring the marines out of Nicaragua, if we send our engineers down there and they are threatened with extermination, I would vote as quick as lightning to send them back there.

Mr. DILL. Of course the Senator would.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I would.

Mr. DILL. And, much as I am opposed to keeping the marines in Nicaragua, if we should send engineers down there to make this survey under the law and their lives were in danger, of course, I would be in favor of sending troops there to protect them. But the Senator from Tennessee says that if the engineers are sent to Nicaragua there will be no trouble.

The Senator is sufficiently familiar with the history of this country's relations with Nicaragua, I think, to know that when any American capitalists of importance, with any considerable investment, want trouble in Nicaragua they always see to it that trouble is started. Make no mistake about it, the interests that made the trouble at Bluefields and forced the marines down there in the past, will make trouble whenever it is necessary to take them back into Nicaragua.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Why does not the Senator use as illustration a case that is parallel? We built a canal in Panama. Formerly we had all kinds of trouble with both Panama and Colombia, but from the day we sent our engineers and construction force to the Isthmus of Panama we had nothing but good feeling; there was no difficulty in the world that could not be settled by ordinary diplomatic adjustment, and everybody down there is prosperous and happy. Why is there going to be any different result in the case of Nicaragua from American enterprise?

Mr. DILL. Then, I take it that the Senator's argument is that we are going to take over Nicaragua and control it just as we took over and controlled the Canal Zone.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator may term it "control," but what we have done there has been with the acquiescence and the absolute desire of the Panamanian people. So far as Nicaragua is concerned, the heads of both political parties have time after time invited us to make use of the right of way by constructing a canal. So, why should the Senator assume, without anything more than imagination and suspicion, that the result in Nicaragua will be different from that in Panama? He is simply using it as a matter of argument without it being based on any facts whatever. Thank the Lord, I can face a big economic problem from an American standpoint, without suspecting all the time that it means something hidden or something sinister or something that is not on the surface.

Mr. DILL. I am glad the Senator has such a wonderfully clear and pure mind on these subjects; but the Senator's whole argument illustrates that he expects to see in Nicaragua exactly what happened in Panama, namely, that the American Government will take over that country. The Senator himself is not appalled at the idea that we should take over all of Central America, if it is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not mean to say that the United States has taken over all of Panama?

Mr. DILL. It has taken over the Canal Zone in Panama, and it will take over the canal zone in Nicaragua.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course; but that is a very different thing from taking over Panama. The American Government has not taken over Panama. It will not take over Nicaragua. Of course, it has bought and paid for, by agreement, a canal zone in Panama, and it has taken that over. It has bought and paid for a canal zone in Nicaragua, and when it is surveyed we are going to take that over, too. We are entitled to take it over.

Mr. DILL. We have not bought anything in Nicaragua except a right. We have not bought the property at all. I want to ask the Senator a question. The Senator will not deny the fact that we have troops at the Canal Zone?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course we have.

Mr. DILL. And because of those troops being there, there is not going to be any trouble around the Canal Zone.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know about that. We are not in the slightest degree governing Panama. We have relations of the most friendly kind with Panama. It is a separate government entirely. We are not governing it in any way.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that we are governing Haiti?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is another thing. We are governing down there, and I am in just exactly the same position that the Senator is about our marines in Nicaragua and in Haiti. I think they ought to be brought out. I have voted every time to bring them out; but that has nothing to do with the building of a great canal that will mean the upbuilding and the benefit of all the world when we build it.

Mr. DILL. The Senator now falls back on the assumption that we must build this canal in the near future, when the Senator knows that there is not any need for it now, and that there will not be any need for it for many years to come.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know any such thing. I think there is a need for it. I think before we get it built the other canal will be clogged with business.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, does not the argument of the Senator from Washington resolve itself into the proposition that when it may become desirable and essential to build that canal we should not do it, for fear that if we do it we may have to send some marines down there to protect the lives of the people in charge of it?

Mr. DILL. No; the argument of the Senator from Washington means that it probably will be necessary to send troops there and keep them there when we decide to build the canal, but we have no need of the canal now, and will not have any need of it for many, many years to come; and what I object to is using this engineering survey as an excuse for keeping marines down there in Nicaragua when they ought to be withdrawn. That is what I am objecting to. If the time had come when we needed another canal, or when there was any showing that there was going to be any such need within this generation, the situation would be entirely different.

Mr. GLASS. Nobody who voted to report the bill concedes the premises of the Senator that it is made an excuse for that. I do not think it is made an excuse. I voted twice to bring out the marines.

Mr. McKELLAR. So did I.

Mr. GLASS. And I did not vote for this proposition as an excuse to keep them there.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all.

Mr. DILL. I do not think the Senators voted for this appropriation in order to keep the marines there; but the inevitable result of placing the engineers there will be to take the marines and keep them there. That is what will be the result.

Mr. EDGE. Has that been the result in Panama?

Mr. DILL. Why, we have troops in Panama, and we always will have as long as we have the Canal Zone.

Mr. EDGE. Because it is one of our naval stations.

Mr. DILL. Oh, the Senator talks as though nobody knew anything about the history of our going down to Panama. The Senator knows there was an American-inspired revolution in Panama, as a result of which we got a government satisfactory to this country.

Mr. EDGE. And as soon as we got started there the revolution stopped, and from that time on the country has been peaceful.

Mr. DILL. Of course, because the government was satisfactory to the American officials.

Now, I want to call attention to a summary of the reasons or claims as to why the marines are being kept in Nicaragua. This is a summary made by an organization here in Washington that has made a great study of the reports on the subject.

The marines are being kept in Nicaragua—

First. Because Americans have obtained concessions, some of them by devious means.

That is a very important part of this whole situation—that many of the concessions which the marines are there to protect, many of the loans that they are there to help collect, many of the actions that they enforce againgst the Nicaraguan Government, especially in the collection of revenues, are to uphold these concessions secured by means that can not be justified.

Second. American financiers know that Nicaraguan investments are profitable.

If these Nicaraguan investments were not profitable, if they did not hold possibilities and probabilities of great returns, we would not find American financiers making the demands that they do make for keeping the marines in Nicaragua.

Third. We hold a title to the Canal Zone obtained by questionable methods.

That is one of the arguments that I have made from the beginning of this discussion. Our rights in Nicaragua, whatever they may be, were secured by making a treaty with a government that did not represent the Nicaraguan people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point? As I pointed out the other day, when the Senator makes that statement he challenges the good faith of Woodrow Wilson, the then President of the United States, and Hon. W. J. Bryan, the then Secretary of State. In my judgment, there never were two purer or better men, there never were two men who would scorn more than they to have anything to do with any fraudulent transaction or any overreaching of any other nation. Their whole lives proved it; and I think the Senator ought not to attack those two great men who were then the representatives of our Government.

Mr. DILL. I am not going to indulge in a discussion with the Senator of Woodrow Wilson and W. J. Bryan, but I repeat that the facts show—and I use as an authority not my own opinion but the opinion of no less a man than Elihu Root—that the government under Chamorro was not a government representative of the people of Nicaragua; and I make the further statement on his authority, for he was then in a position to know, that only one-third of the $3,000,000 that was paid for canal rights in Nicaragua ever went to Nicaragua, the rest of it going to American firms that had claims there, and the very forces who were responsible for inspiring the revolution that put in power the Chamorro government with whom the treaty was made. I am not charging anything against Mr. Bryan or Mr. Wilson, and I am not going to.

Mr. McKELLAR. They made this treaty.

Mr. DILL. I do, however, state these facts; and the Senator from Tennessee has never disputed them, because he can not dispute them and stay within the truth.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that neither Mr. Wilson nor Mr. Bryan entered into any transaction that was shady in the slightest way, manner, form, or degree whatsoever.

Mr. DILL. I have not charged that they did.

Mr. McKELLAR. If what the Senator says about this treaty is correct, then they must have done it. It could not have been done in any other way.

Mr. DILL. Oh, no; the revolution was instigated entirely by private citizens, and the government was set up and maintained largely through the intervention of American capital, and most of it was done before Mr. Wilson took charge of the American Government.

Mr. President, the fourth reason in this particular statement is:

We have countenanced revolutions to afford a semblance of justice for our intervention.

That is only a part of the record that is untenable and indefensible on the part of this Government in its dealings with Nicaragua.

Fifth. Europeans have investments there; and we fear, if we get our forces out, that they will seek control.

That is another reason that has been put forward—that if we do not keep our marines in Nicaragua, England or France or Spain or some other country will come over and place their armed forces in Nicaragua, and therefore we must keep ours down there to keep them from sending theirs into Nicaragua.

Sixth. We used election supervision to end opposition to intervention.

Now they have had the election. Nobody complains of the returns of the election, and the new government is running smoothly, and yet 3,500 American marines are still in Nicaragua.

Mr. WHEELER. And is it not a fact that we were told here upon the floor of the Senate by the administration leaders that just as soon as the election was over the marines would be withdrawn?

Mr. DILL. Oh, yes; that was the statement here. There is not any doubt about that. We were assured of that by the Secretary of State; and the fact of the matter is that the reasons for keeping the marines there to-day are growing so weak that the State Department has hardly the face to say it will keep them there, and this appropriation is put in here, and the result of it will be to give a new reason for keeping the marines down there.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr DILL. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JONES. I make the point of order that no business has been transacted since the last quorum call.

Mr. DILL (at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m. Wednesday). Then I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his point of no quorum?

Mr. DILL. The Senator from Washington said it was out of order, and I then moved that the Senate take a recess.

Mr HEFLIN. I want to ask the Senator from Washington if he will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. DILL. No, Mr. President; I have moved that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will not the Senator agree to let us vote on this item?

Mr. DILL. No; we are not going to vote for a while.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. President, I suggest that we remain in session the remainder of the night, and that we have another session to-morrow night, if necessary, to complete the work of this session.

Mr. DILL. I have a motion pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow. [Putttng the question.] The noes have it.

Mr. DILL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NEELY. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I am authorized by the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to vote regardless of our general pair, and I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). The senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND (when Mr. WAGNER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—12

Black	Copeland	King	Nye
Blaine	Dill	Neely	Walsh, Mont.
Brookhart	Frazier	Norris	Wheeler

NAYS—40

Ashurst	Edwards	Keyes	Shortridge
Barkley	Fess	McKellar	Smith
Bingham	Glass	Oddie	Smoot
Bratton	Glenn	Pine	Steiwer
Broussard	Goff	Pittman	Swanson
Bruce	Hale	Reed, Pa.	Thomas, Idaho
Capper	Hayden	Robinson, Ind.	Thomas, Okla.
Curtis	Heflin	Sackett	Trammell
Deneen	Jones	Schall	Vandenberg
Edge	Kendrick	Sheppard	Watson

NOT VOTING—43

Bayard	Gould	McMaster	Shipstead
Blease	Greene	McNary	Simmons
Borah	Harris	Mayfield	Steck
Burton	Harrison	Metcalf	Stephens
Caraway	Hastings	Moses	Tydings
Couzens	Hawes	Norbeck	Tyson
Dale	Howell	Overman	Wagner
Fletcher	Johnson	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
George	La Follette	Ransdell	Warren
Gerry	Larrazolo	Reed, Mo.	Waterman
Gillett	McLean	Robinson, Ark.

So the Senate refused to take a recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I had not intended to interrupt for a quorum. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] wanted to raise that question. I was in the midst of enumerating——

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. EDGE. This is the third time, according to my recollection, the Senator has taken the floor.

Mr. DILL. Then I will ask action on the amendment I have pending, if the Senator wants to press that point.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us vote on the amendment to the committee amendment then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DILL. I offer another amendment, to strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000."

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. DILL. If some Senator would rather do the talking than myself, I shall wait until Senators are quiet.

I was attempting to enumerate the reasons why the marines were in Nicaragua when I was interrupted by the Senator from West Virginia, and I had pointed out that we had repeatedly used the armed forces of the United States for the purpose of supervising elections. It is said that we want to save our face in dealing with other Latin American countries. I think that has been a very moving force with the officials of the Government. They have felt it was necessary to make and maintain a show of force in Nicaragua in order to impress other Latin American countries with what would happen to them if they did not accede to the demands and the requests of this Government.

Along with that is a summary of reasons as to why the marines should be brought out of Nicaragua, and I want to enumerate those:

1. It is unethical to coerce by selfish force, under the most wrested interpretation of the Monroe doctrine.

There is not any suggestion under the Monroe doctrine for keeping the marines in Nicaragua after peace has been established there and a government set up that represents the will of the people as expressed at an election held under the direction and guidance of the marines.

2. Any supervision of elections and control of a backward country should be by cooperative action of American states and not by a single nation under any ethical concept of the Monroe doctrine.

The fact of the matter is that our actions in Nicaragua are causing more injury to American influence and to the needs of this country than any other one thing that is happening in the Western Hemisphere, and the longer we keep the marines there, the longer we maintain the armed forces of this country in Central America, the greater will be the damage and injury such as I have just mentioned.

3. Our relations with all Latin-American countries are endangered by our Nicaraguan policy.

There is no part of the world in which we should be desirous of building up a friendly influence more than in Central American countries, and the fact that we keep the marines there instead of building up a friendly influence only makes conditions worse, only arouses antagonism to our efforts to develop good will. It hurts not only the good will of the people toward us as a nation but it makes them less willing to trade with our own business interests, and to that extent it strikes at the very heart of our industries and our prosperity.

4. The possible advantages of our ratification of the multilateral treaty are diminished by our Nicaraguan policy.

We have just ratified a treaty in which we declare that we will not use force against any country for the settlement of our disputes, that we will seek peaceful means, and yet we maintain the marines in Nicaragua, without regard to what the desires of the Nicaraguans may be or what their needs may be. We keep them there because we have enough strength and power to be able to maintain them under the circumstances.

5. Our present and prospective trade with Latin-American countries is endangered by our Nicaraguan policy.

6. Withdrawal of the marines will compel us to adopt a constructive policy in Nicaragua.

That, of course, is something that the administration has not even yet attempted to do, namely, to form a constructive policy toward Nicaragua. We have used our marines there, and because of the force they represent we have followed out a policy of doing our sweet will, without regard to what the desires or the interests of the people may really be.

7. The presence of the marines in Nicaragua for conducting military operations without action by Congress is a usurpation of the rights of Congress and in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

If there was any authority for keeping the marines there as a result of the Stimson agreement to hold an election, then that authority and right have died, because the election has been held. There is no claim made by anyone in our own State Department now that there is any condition in Nicaragua that demands retaining 3,500 American boys in that part of the world.

American marines were sent into Nicaragua for the last time on July 23, 1926, and by February of last year there were 5,000 marines in the country. There were neutral zones established in 8 out of 10 important districts.

President Coolidge, in his special message on Nicaragua on January 10, 1927, stated:

The proprietary rights of the United States in the Nicaraguan canal route, with the necessary implications growing out of it affecting the Panama Canal, together with the obligations flowing from the investments of all classes of our citizens in Nicaragua place us in a position of peculiar responsibility.

Thus, the very reason given by the President is to be made more emphatic and more important by this appropriation, which will result in our sending engineers down there to survey these routes, and instead of removing the causes for keeping marines there, we propose now to create new reasons for their staying there.

Then the message goes on to say:

Consequently I have deemed it my duty to use the powers committed to me to insure the adequate protection of all American interests in Nicaragua, whether they be endangered by internal strife or by outside interference in the affairs of that Republic.

I call attention to the platform of the Republican Party as adopted in the Kansas City convention. The platform reads:

We approve the foreign policies of the administration of President Coolidge.

Specifically:

The marines now in Nicaragua are there to protect American lives and property and to aid in carrying out an agreement whereby we have undertaken to do what we can to restore and maintain order and to insure a fair and free election.

There is only one implication that can be drawn from such a statement in a platform, and that is that when the purposes for which they have been sent there have been attained, the marines will be withdrawn. Nobody claims to-day that they are needed any longer for the election purposes. Nobody even suggests that they are needed for purposes of protecting American property or American life.

Now I want to call attention to the methods used to secure these concessions, to secure these American interests in Nicaragua, which the marines have been kept there to protect and which they will be sent back to protect whenever it becomes necessary.

President Chamorro in his address to the Nicaraguan Congress in 1922 charged that one company represented by the American, Dietrick, was given a concession for exploiting the mines of Cape Gracias à Dios, Malagalpa, and Nueva Segovia, a third party of the Republic. Dietrick, he states, also acquired the exclusive privilege for 20 years of denouncing mines in a vast region of the Republic 7,000 square miles in area. President Chamorro commented:

"What causes the far graver and more important aspect is the fact that the concessions referred to embrace in themselves other privileges which put into the hands of those foreign companies the administration and, one might say, the dominion and supreme control over that enormous region, thus creating a real peril for the integrity of the Republic.

"Those concessions," he said, "were granted chiefly to American companies." He speaks of them as "those immense concessions of land made by geographic degrees at ridiculous prices for private gain."

The State Department in its booklet Relations Between United States and Nicaragua admits "there is no accurate estimate of the value of American and other foreign investments in Nicaragua," but enumerated "four American fruit companies stated to hold some 475,000 acres of land undergoing development," "about 10 American companies are engaged in mining and exploration work," 2 being incorporated for $1,000,000 or more, 1 of which is stated to have its capital fully paid up.

Various American firms are engaged in lumbering operations, their investments at times running into several millions of dollars. The total of American investments in Nicaragua is estimated at about $20,000,000, compared with $3,000,000 in 1912—an increase of 566 per cent in 16 years.

That is a tremendous increase of American interests in that country, and it explains to a large degree, I believe, why so many marines have been kept there almost continuously since 1907. American interests invest their money there and then they ask for American boys, paid out of the Treasury of the United States, to be kept there to maintain order so that they can exploit the resources into which their money has been invested, under the protection of the forces of the American Government. Why do they not take their chances in that part of the world as investors in other countries must take chances where they invest their money? They invest in this particular part of the world with the expectation of making enormous profits, and then depend upon the boys of this country who have enlisted to defend this country, its flag, and the Government, and use those boys for the paltry purpose of enabling them to collect the profits which they had hoped to gain when they made their investments.

American financiers know that investments in Nicaragua are profitable, and they know that as long as they can keep some kind of trouble stirred up down there the marines will be kept there. Reasonable security for the payment of loans and interest thereon is necessary, and some of the loans made by American bankers are so flagrant that they should not expect the Government to protect them. The fact of the matter is that, so far as I can learn, Nicaragua has only once defaulted in paying her debts.

On June 6, 1911, the Knox-Castrillo treaty providing for help in securing a loan of $15,000,000 to the Nicaraguan Government by American bankers was signed. The proceeds were to be used in paying claims against the Government, in consolidating the debt, and stabilizing the currency, and in building a railroad to the eastern coast. During the continuance of the debt the customs were to be in charge of a collector general appointed by the Nicaraguan executive on the nomination of bankers making the loan and subject to the approval of the State Department.

This was rejected three times by the United States Senate, but nothing daunted the Government of Nicaragua on September 1, 1911, signed contracts with Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman, of New York, for a loan of $15,000,000. A 10 per cent advance loan of $1,500,000 was made under the so-called Dawson agreement, secured as the projected large loan by the customs revenues. As a further security the majority stock of the Nicaraguan National Bank and the National Railway were pledged.

In addition to that the Nicaraguan Government made a pledge that it would not alter its customs laws and would not change its internal taxes unless the American Government officials consented to it and so by keeping our marines there we have enabled those bankers, those men who exploit the country, not only to make these loans at high rates of interest, but to insure their collection by a government that pledges itself to nothing not satisfactory to American Government officials.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER rapped for order.

Mr. DILL. I do not expect Senators to listen to what I am saying. I know they have not any interest in these facts, but just the same I want to place them in the RECORD.

Nicaragua pledged itself not to alter its customs laws and internal taxes without the consent of the American creditors. An agreement was made establishing the right of "protection" and creating the United States or its Secretary of State a final arbiter—virtually placing Nicaragua under control of American interests.

A high commission to supervise Nicaragua's finances was created consisting of one Nicaraguan and two Americans appointed by the Secretary of State who were to receive no salary but to have their expenses paid.

I submit that nowhere in the history of the dealings of one country with another has there been exacted such exorbitant terms of a people or a government by those who make personal loans to that people or to that government.

Mr. President, there is much disorder in the Chamber. I wish Senators would either depart from the Chamber or, if they want the floor, I will take my seat provided it will not be counted against me as having occupied the floor another time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington indicate to us, it now being after 12 o'clock midnight and he having occupied the floor for three hours, when he will permit us to vote on the amendment?

Mr. DILL. I have not occupied the floor more than an hour. Other Senators have occupied the floor. I think we will have plenty of time to vote later in the day. We have just started on a new day and I think we can stay a while yet before we vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. No doubt we can stay, but the Senator is not accomplishing anything, because the Senate is not going to change that amendment. If the Senator persists in going on with this discussion, I am going to discuss it somewhat myself. Senator Morgan had a hard time in combating the influences that sought to prevent the building of the Nicaraguan canal. Some friendly corporations were interested and some railroads were interested, too. I have had those records looked up and I shall discuss that matter here at another time. I voted to bring the marines out of Nicaragua and I want to bring them out, but this is a different proposition that we now have before us. The Government wants to have the survey made; we are interested in it, and we are going to need that canal some day. There are a lot of interests that do not want the canal built, of course.

Mr. DILL. The Senator mentioned Senator Morgan. The fact remains that after all the great work of Senator Morgan and all the things he did and all the evidence he brought forward, the Government decided on the Panama Canal.

Mr. HEFLIN. I know that, but they made a mistake in doing it.

Mr. DILL. The Senator can say that now, but the wisdom of a majority here, after very thorough and careful surveys and investigations on three different occasions, brought about the conclusion that the Panama Canal was preferable. But, waving all that aside, I come back to the fact that there is so much greater need of internal developments and so little need for a new canal that I do not see how the Senator can justify starting upon a program looking to the building of another canal across the Isthmus at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Washington knows, of course, that we could benefit the people of the country and benefit the people of Alabama more by widening and deepening the Missouri River and the tributaries of the Mississippi River than we could by building the Nicaraguan canal at this time.

Mr. DILL. Yes. As I said the other day, there are pressing for attention a large number of great projects in the country that will cost literally hundreds of millions of dollars. We people who live west of the Great Lakes have great need for the development of the St. Lawrence canal. I am told if that canal is built by using the St. Lawrence River it will cost about $450,000,000, and if the canal is built through the State of New York as an all-American canal it will cost about $600,000,000. There is a great demand on the part of the farmers of the Middle West for a Gulf-to-Lakes waterway connecting through the Mississippi River and through Illinois, which will cost no one knows how many hundreds of millions of dollars. We have authorized already $325,000,000 to be expended on flood control on the Mississippi River, and the estimates are that it will take $500,000,000 more at least to complete that work.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to ask the Senator why it is that he is so persistent now in fighting this proposition when he permitted the joint resolution to pass without a roll call?

Mr. DILL. I was not particular about a roll call. I would not object now if the joint resolution had passed the House of Representatives. What I object to is that there is an attempt to put into this bill a matter of legislation that can not be gotten unless it is worked by this method.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator has seen that a majority of the Senate is determined to keep it in the bill, too.

Mr. DILL. That may be.

Mr. HEFLIN. Having permitted it to pass without a roll call, it looks rather strange that the Senator should become so enthusiastic here at midnight.

Mr. DILL. In the first place there was not any particular need of a roll call because a great majority of the Senators were in favor of the joint resolution. I know there were not very many opposed to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. And a majority of the Senators are in favor of the amendment now before us.

Mr. DILL. I think that is probably true, but I do not think that it is proper for me to permit a vote on this proposition if I can prevent it, at lease for a while, until I have placed my views in the RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. In other words, the Senator would like to keep his colleagues up until 1 or 2 o'clock to enable him to test his lung power.

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing to recess until 11 o'clock a. m.; in fact I have voted to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to agree to take a vote on this amendment by 11 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. DILL. I will not agree to vote, but I think we will get a vote in a very short time thereafter.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator would fix a time we might agree with him. Would the Senator be willing to vote at 11.30 a. m.?

Mr. DILL. I do not care to make any agreement as to when we shall vote. I shall not take any great amount of time upon the reconvening of the Senate. I think that probably after 30 minutes' discussion I shall be willing to permit a vote, if I have time to organize my argument in a little better shape.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is the Senator willing to vote at 2 o'clock this morning?

Mr. DILL. No; I am not going to agree to fixing a time to vote this morning.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, I ask unanimous consent, in accordance with the Senator's statement, that a vote be taken at 11.30 o'clock a. m. to-day.

Mr. DILL. Of course, it would require a quorum before such an agreement could be made under the rules.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then let us agree to limit debate under the 5-minute rule after 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. DILL. That also would require a quorum.

Mr. McKELLAR. The limitation would apply to the amendment to the bill; it does not require a roll call to vote on an amendment at 11.30 o'clock in the morning. Will the Senator agree to vote on it at that time?

Mr. DILL. I am not going to consent to any agreement at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I understood the Senator to say a while ago that if the House had passed the joint resolution he would not resist the incorporation of the amendment in the bill.

Mr. DILL. I think that if the House should pass the joint resolution the amendment would be properly in this bill.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator knew that in case the House should not pass the joint resolution the Senate conferees would recede from the amendment, would that do any good?

Mr. DILL. The trouble with that proposal is that as soon as this bill goes through, then those who are pressing for the joint resolution—and they are extremely active, or else the amendment would not be in this bill, being out of order—will immediately go to the leaders of the House and say, "We must have action on the joint resolution; those in charge of the deficiency bill have promised that they will not allow this amendment to stay in the bill unless the House shall pass the joint resolution, and we must have action now." Then everything else would be pushed aside, for they would have to have action immediately.

Mr. SMOOT. The Members of the House already know that; that would make no difference.

Mr. DILL. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Members of the House already know that, and if they were going to do what the Senator says they would do, they would have done it to-day; indeed, they would have started yesterday on it. So there is no excuse for any such thing as that, so far as that is concerned. As I said in the beginning, I think I can promise the Senator that if the joint resolution shall not be passed by the House and become a law the amendment will go out of this bill.

Mr. DILL. But the very fact that such an agreement has been made here will be used as an argument to induce the House to act more quickly on the joint resolution than it otherwise would act.

Mr. SMOOT. That never was thought of by the committee at all. The amendment was not put in at the request of the House, and was not put in with any such idea in view.

Mr. DILL. It will be thought of, however, immediately by those who are so active in getting this appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. They have never suggested it as yet.

Mr. DILL. Somebody has been very active to get this amendment in before the joint resolution was passed by the House, but I do not know who it is.

Mr. BINGHAM. As a member of the committee, may I say to the Senator it was distinctly stated to the committee if the joint resolution should not become a law before the amendment was considered in conference that the amendment would be withdrawn by the conferees and they would not press it?

Mr. EDGE. Is not that the usual method with any legislation that has passed one House?

Mr. DILL. I wish the Senator from New Jersey would tell me why this provision must be placed in a deficiency bill, which is an emergency measure? Why can it not wait and take its natural course?

Mr. EDGE. I have just said that it is my understanding that this is the usual course.

Mr. DILL. It is not the usual course, and the Senator knows it is not the usual course.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator has asked me a question, and if he wishes me to answer it I will be glad to do so. So far as the Senator from New Jersey is concerned, he did not even know that the Appropriations Committee had added the item to the bill until a member of the Appropriations Committee came to the floor after the committee had met and acted on a number of estimates and told me that among the estimates presented and adopted by the committee was this estimate. The information was given to me by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. President, debate having exhausted itself, can we not agree on a vote?

Mr. DILL. The trouble is that other Senators take up the time; I am not able to present the argument which I wish to present in this matter.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope other Senators will let the Senator from Washington proceed without interruption. He is very anxious to do so; he is filled with a speech that is very illuminating; and I do think Senators are treating him with great disrespect in not letting him speak.

Mr. DILL. I appreciate the courtesy and interest of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I want the Senate to listen to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I appreciate it very much, because I really have some information here that bears directly on this subject.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will not be interrupted. He is entitled to deliver his remarks.

Mr. DILL. I appreciate the assistance of my friend the Senator from Virginia, but I was explaining the unusual and, I think, indefensible agreement made by the bankers of this country with the Government of Nicaragua as to the funds of that country and how that agreement was maintained through the force of the American marines. This bank not only had the right to have Government funds deposited in it without any interest being paid but—

It was given the right to issue Government money with or without guaranty and to "introduce and maintain a monetary system." By fixing the value of pesos in circulation and by changing the unit of currency from pesos to cordobas with a supposed dollar backing—the bankers succeeded in raising the circulation of cordobas to 4,000,000, nearly a third of which has no guaranty back of it, while Nicaragua, having spent $2,000,000, has the same amount of paper money as before!

The bankers first took an option on 51 per cent of the stock of the National Railway—and later purchased this stock outright for $1,000,000—and controlled 51 per cent of the stock of the national bank. The foreign debt was refunded and its annual interest charge reduced from 6 to 5 per cent.

(b) In 1913, while the Bryan-Chamorro treaty regarding the Nicaraguan canal was under consideration, the Nicaraguan Government, through its Washington legation, listed its indebtedness, aggregating over $14,100,000, which it wished refunded, including $3,405,000 advanced chiefly by Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co. Nothing was done until December, 1916, when at a meeting of the interested parties in Washington it was determined on the bankers' insistence to pay $2,000,000 of the bonded loan of $6,200,000 issued by the Ethelburga Syndicate of England from the $3,000,000 to be paid for the Nicaraguan canal zone.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I insist that the Senator from Washington must speak publicly. He is holding the floor for the purpose of speaking.

Mr. DILL. There is so much conversation being carried on by other Senators that I thought I might be interrupting them.

Mr. SWANSON. I am very anxious to hear the Senator, and he ought to speak publicly and not privately.

Mr. DILL. I was just pointing out that of this $3,000,000 that was paid for rights in Nicaragua, $2,000,000 of it went to American interests.

Our Department of State agreed to ask the Council of Foreign Bondholders to postpone demand for interest and sinking fund charges for three years and consented to carrying out of the contract between the New York bankers and the Nicaraguan Government to permit payment of temporary loans, and on funding all the country's indebtedness, by further bond issues, to be secured by a second lien on the customs and a first lien on 49 per cent of the stock of the national railway and of the national bank.

(c) By 1920 a new loan was needed by Nicaragua to retire the 1909 bonds and to complete the national railway. The Pacific Railway was to be sold to the Nicaraguan Government, the sale price for 51 per cent of the stock for which the bankers had a few years before paid $1,000,000, being $1,750,000! The bankers in another burst of generosity underwrote a bond issue for Nicaragua of $1,450,000 to enable the Government to complete payment for the 51 per cent of the railway shares.

(d) By the middle of 1924 the Nicaraguan Government had redeemed treasury bills issued to buy back the Pacific Railway, and the Government started to purchase the stock of the national bank, which the

New York bankers still controlled, and in order to do this it had to acquire the Mercantile Overseas Co., a liquidating concern owned by a New York corporation that controlled the stock of the national bank.

I submit that never in the history of the dealing of citizens with a government were such terms exacted of that Government and then backed and supported by the armed forces of the United States. I now want to read what Prof. Isaac J. Cox says about this transaction. He states:

In order to complete the double purchase the Government had to use up its surplus and special dividends, draw on the school fund, and even pledge the capital and surplus of the national bank itself. * * * The railroad to the eastern coast was still unbuilt, the system of public instruction inadequate, and the teachers both underpaid and often unpaid, and numerous public improvements were held up in order to meet fiscal demands.

Thus the power of the armed forces of the United States was used to compel a contract that actually oppressed the people of Nicaragua and interfered with the education of their children.

In 1927 Nicaragua wanted a new loan. Its currency had been stabilized, its fiscal policy changed, it had been supervised and controlled by the best fiscal minds that the New York bankers could suggest, and it seemed to be surviving our State Department's intervention and the bankers' interposition admirably, the net result of its response to undeserved foreign help being a public debt March 31, 1927, of $10,183,010.

It contracted in March, 1927, for a $1,000,000 credit with J. & W. Seligman & Co. and the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York for one year at a 7 per cent cost to Nicaragua.

As security the bankers asked a mortgage on the new taxes levied January 21, 1927, a mortgage on 50 per cent of the surplus over and above the budgeted appropriations, and a mortgage on all dividends from the national bank and the national railway, and on all stock of both corporations! The contract expired March, 1928—but Nicaragua survived to have us supervise its election with one marine to every 15 or 16 voters!

Five thousand marines down there! It took that many, under the theory of the State Department, to hold this election.

In November, 1927, the Department of State selected and paid the salary and expenses of Dr. William W. Cumberland, former financial advisor to Haiti, at the suggestion of the Nicaraguan Government and of both parties, to investigate whether Nicaragua, with its valuable resources, was good, after 18 years of our benign fiscal tutelage, for a loan of $12,000,000. Doctor Cumberland reported in April, 1928.

The State Department did not publish this document until recently. I have the document here. It is a book of something like 178 pages, and it covers in great detail all of the economic and financial problems of Nicaragua. It is a very complete survey, and, if necessary, I may want to discuss it in some detail later in the day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Would not the Senator like to print all that he has there, and let us vote?

Mr. DILL. No; I fear that if I do that nobody will ever pay any attention to it. While not very many pay attention now, the fact that I take the time to read it and discuss it does secure a little more attention for it than it would receive otherwise.

Mr. HEFLIN. But those who are paying attention to it are not enjoying it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DILL. I rather think that may be true. It is not often that unpleasant facts are enjoyable to those who listen.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. This seems to be a very instructive booklet. It would seem to me that the Senator should give us the benefit of it.

Mr. DILL. Oh, I think later on in the day I shall want to discuss it somewhat at length.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to suggest that the Senator ask the clerk to read it.

Mr. DILL. I fear somebody might object to that, and I am in very good condition to read it and discuss it myself, at least for a while.

This report by Doctor Cumberland was hidden away for a considerable time, and it was impossible to get a copy of it. In fact, it was not until the latter part of 1928 that we were able to get it. I have gone through it with some care, and I find that it has in it a great many interesting facts and details that throw more light upon the situation in Nicaragua than any publication I have seen in my study of this subject.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we surely should have the benefit of this.

Mr. DILL. If the Senator will possess himself in patience, I shall try to see that he gets that benefit later.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama said that those who were listening to the Senator's speech did not enjoy it. Let me suggest to the Senator from Alabama that, notwithstanding the fact that it is half past 12 o'clock in the morning, there are more people listening to the Senator from Washington at the present time than the Senator from Alabama frequently has listening to him when he is speaking in the afternoon. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. That is very true, because when I am speaking for the American flag Senators like the Senator from Montana do not want to stand up and vote in the open, and they go to the cloakroom. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I am one of the few Senators who heard his speech on the flag, and I should like to hear it again. In fact, I should like to hear it right now.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am going to give the Senator a chance to vote on it again.

Mr. WHEELER. That is fine. I never hesitate to vote.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in order that we may keep the peace, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dill	Keyes	Smith
Barkley	Edge	King	Smoot
Bingham	Edwards	McKellar	Steiwer
Blaine	Fess	Oddie	Swanson
Bratton	Glenn	Pine	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Goff	Pittman	Thomas, Okla.
Bruce	Hale	Reed, Pa.	Trammell
Capper	Hayden	Robinson, Ind.	Vandenberg
Copeland	Heflin	Sackett	Warren
Curtis	Jones	Sheppard	Watson
Deneen	Kendrick	Shortridge	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No Senators having answered to the second call, there still is no quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request and if necessary compel the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. SMITH. Let that cover all. Let all who are in the city who are not ill be brought in.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that all who are not ill should be brought in. Let us go through with this. These gentlemen have started this a little too early. This is Wednesday. If they had waited until Friday night, there might have been a different story.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, do I understand that the Sergeant at Arms has been authorized to request absent Senators to come in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. "To request and if necessary compel." That was the wording of the order.

Mr. WATSON. It means, then, that he is to issue warrants and bring them in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request and if necessary compel the attendance of absent Senators.

After a little delay Mr. FRAZIER, Mr. GLASS, Mr. NYE, and Mr. STECK entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am glad that we still have enough Senators here to continue the session. I do not want to spend the night without being able to make use of the time.

I had just reached that part of the discussion of what had developed in Nicaragua where I had called attention to a document entitled "Nicaragua, an Economic and Financial Survey," by Dr. W. W. Cumberland, which was printed after much delay and at a little later period in my speech I want to discuss that at some length. I want now to continue to read and comment on the outline of the history of Nicaragua. I have here a discussion of the treaty by which these rights were acquired and while it is similar to some data which I have already presented, and some things which I have already said, yet it presents them at just a little different angle.

This treaty violated Nicaragua's constitution prohibiting the impairment of her territorial integrity or the national sovereignty of the nation.

There is no one thing that this country should regard with more care than the constitutions of the nations with which it has dealings, and when it sets up a government by its own efforts and its own will with which it then attempts to negotiate, it seems to me it is under a double duty to use great care not to violate the terms of the constitution of the country whose government is under its control.

This treaty was negotiated with a puppet government, which, under the agreement we induced Central American governments to make in 1907, not to recognize governments which came into power as a result of revolutions of coup d'état we had no right to recognize.

This government was not only a puppet government, it was not only a government brought into being by American influences but it was kept in power almost entirely by virtue of force applied there by the United States Government in the form of keeping the marines in Nicaragua.

The third thing about the treaty is that it violated the treaty between Costa Rica and Nicaragua. It seems that Costa Rica and Nicaragua had made a treaty that neither of them would grant canal rights without the consent of the other, yet this treaty with the Chamorro government did not even recognize the Costa Rica Government at all.

I understand that the joint resolution which passed the Senate the other day and which is now pending in the House has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House rather than to the Committee on Foreign Relations for the reason that if it went to the Committee on Foreign Relations it would be killed and would not be reported out. That committee is not favorable to it. It will be or has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and it is the purpose of the majority of that committee to take out of the joint resolution passed here all of the authority to negotiate treaties with Costa Rica and other countries that are interested in the canal rights.

It is worth noting that this treaty was protested by Costa Rica and Salvador. These protests were upheld by the Central American court which we had helped to found, and we disregarded the protests and as a result the court went out of existence. As I pointed out earlier in the evening, of the $3,000,000 that were paid Nicaragua for the right to construct this canal, $2,000,000 of it was paid to our own American bankers.

Another reason why it seems to me we should be especially careful about the use of marines in Nicaragua is the fact that we have so often not only countenanced but assisted the revolutions which have been existing in Nicaragua and have come about there. Now that we have peace there, now that an election has been held and officials of the Government have been chosen by the will of the voters, we should remove our military forces and permit the officials who have been elected by the votes of the people to run the Government of their own choosing.

I want to review just for a moment the history of how we have interfered and brought about and assisted in those revolutions. I say "we." I mean American influences. I do not mean the American Government, but the people living in this country or whose citizenship was in this country.

A young leader of the Liberals, Jose Santos Zelaya, became President in 1893 and remained in office for 16 years, when a revolution favored by our Government was started. Secretary Knox stated:

"The Government of the United States is convinced that the revolution represents the ideals and will of a majority of the Nicaraguan people more faithfully than does the Government of President Zelaya."

This revolution was financed to the tune of $600,000 by Adolfo Diaz, at the time a $1,000-a-year clerk in the American Mining Corporation, La Luz and Los Angeles. When he attained the Presidency he took it back.

When Dr. Jose Madriz was selected to succeed Zelaya, who resigned, American forces helped the revolutionists to throw Madriz out, and under the terms of the Dawson pact Estrada and Adolfo Diaz were elected President and Vice President.

Much has been said about European investments. Nobody has been able to determine the exact amount of those investments in Nicaragua. It is probable that the British investments are large. When we were trying to negotiate the loans in Nicaragua there was a great deal of difficulty encountered with the British consul of foreign bondholders in connection with defaulted payments on loans. It is worth noting that in 1926 and early in 1927 the British made repeated representations to our Government regarding conditions in Nicaragua, and in February, 1927, dispatched a cruiser to the west coast, which remained about a fortnight, but did not land any marines. The Italian Government filed protests.

Great difficulty was encountered with the British council of foreign bondholders in connection with the defaulted payments on the Ethelburga loan.

In 1926 and early in 1927 the British made repeated representations to our Government regarding conditions in Nicaragua, and in 1927 dispatched a cruiser to Corinto, on the west coast, which remained about a fortnight, but did not land any marines. The Italian Government filed protests.

The total value of the foreign trade in 1926 was $23,283,000, the second largest in the history of the country. It has been reported that General Sandino agreed to lay down his arms as suggested by Colonel Stimson in a letter which he wrote in 1927. It has been questioned whether that letter was a forgery and the State Department refused to submit the letter to handwriting experts for examination.

Col. Clifford D. Ham, for many years collector general of customs in Nicaragua, stated of the Bryan-Chamorro treaty:

"It is an important link in the chain which we are attempting to forge of preparedness and national offense and the protection of our investments in the Panama Canal."

That treaty in addition to giving the United States the right to construct a canal across Nicaragua gave us—

(a) A 99-year lease of Great Corn and Little Corn Islands off the Nicaragua coast in the Caribbean Sea for a naval base and an option to renew.

(b) The right to establish a naval base on the west coast in Fonseca Bay.

Our policy in Latin America has been vacillating between Christian cupidity and strategic scruples.

We conquered Cuba, Haiti, San Salvador, and the Dominican Republic, to say nothing of the Philippines, almost before the American people knew these places were in existence. Mexico challenged our superiority complex, well oiled and bonded, and Nicaragua, encouraged by Mexico's espousal of the principle of "self-determination," dared question her duty to submit to political extinction by the United States.

Hon. Henry L. Stimson, President Coolidge's special envoy to Nicaragua, states in his book, American Policy in Nicaragua:

"To a certain extent at least, we must assume the attitude of seeing that American countries within the Caribbean zone fulfill their obligations as independent nations to the outside world."

Much is heard regarding the Monroe doctrine, but as the years go by, and the facts become more clear to all, there is less and less attempt to justify our policy of financial dictatorship by the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not true that if President Monroe should come back upon this earth to-night he would not recognize what we now call the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. DILL. No; he would not and he never, in his wildest dreams, ever supposed it could be twisted into such meanings as have been given to it as justification for using the armed forces of the United States for purposes of collecting money and for insuring investments of American financiers.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly. At any time bankers in this country want to exploit some little country in the Caribbean Sea and the people of that country protest, we hear an appeal to the Monroe doctrine, which really has not any application whatsoever to the facts in the case.

Mr. DILL. Absolutely. Not only that but they can twist the Monroe doctrine to mean anything that they want it to mean, to serve the purpose that they have in hand at the time when they propose to intervene or do intervene in the internal affairs of any of the countries of Central or South America.

United States investments in Latin-American countries are about five and a half billion dollars, and our trade with Latin-American countries last year amounted to nearly two billion dollars. The present administration has tried to keep peace in Nicaragua largely by shooting those who oppose our control in their country. Now when there is no longer an excuse for shooting anybody, and the conditions are such that we are no longer justified in keeping the marines there, this amendment to this bill providing $150,000 is brought in here, and it is proposed to send some engineers down to the Nicaragua canal area, to have them establish stations, and then any American interest that may have investments there can easily start some shooting. We will necessarily keep 4,000 or 5,000 marines in Nicaragua permanently. I think it is agreed by everybody who has any sense of the ethics that should obtain between sovereign and independent nations that to coerce a smaller country into signing agreements in a financial way and compelling it to turn over to the citizens of another country almost complete control of its finances by the aid of armed forces is not in harmony with the spirit of modern civilization, and least of all with the boasted purpose of this great Republic in dealing with various nations of the world.

PROPOSED EMBARGO ON ARMS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on February 11 I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 215, relating to an embargo on arms and munitions from this country to any signatory nation violating its solemn obligations under the multilateral treaty. The resolution, as I stated at the time, was introduced mainly for the purpose of starting a general discussion and study of the important questions involved, so as to form a background for intelligent handling of the question by Congress next winter.

That purpose seems to be on the way toward accomplishment. Public attention has been focused. General discussion has been started. The widespread and intelligent and sincere interest taken is evidenced by the editorial comments in the American press of the entire country.

To assist in intelligent discussion of this tremendously important proposal and to inform the country of the views and opinions expressed by newspaper editorials from all sections of the country I ask unanimous consent that the following editorials on the subject be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, leave is granted.

Mr. DILL. Let me ask the Senator this question: If the embargo resolution which he has introduced were adopted and Nicaragua attempted to resist the continuance of our marines down there, does the Senator think we would be bound to shut off the shipment of arms to them?

Mr. CAPPER. I doubt very much whether that question will arise very soon.

Mr. DILL. In other words, the Senator prefers to dodge the question. I am not surprised that he does. I want to say, however, that I have great admiration for the Senator's persistence in trying to get some action which will make the multilateral peace pact more effective, and I have great sympathy with his efforts, even though I can not agree with all that he proposes.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Detroit News]

IT CAN BE THE BIGGEST STEP FOR PEACE

It will be of high consequence both to the world and the United States if Congress should adopt the resolution of Senator CAPPER that in the event a nation goes to war in violation of the Kellogg pact, this country shall embargo the export of war materials to the offending nation and withdraw protection of Americans giving aid and comfort to the offender.

There are plenty of reasons, all of them as strong as Holy Writ, why Congress should take early and unanimous action on the Capper resolution. In the first place, it would be an effective discourager of the martial spirit of some leading European governments, none of which could expect to carry on an expensive war—and even the smallest and shortest of modern wars are horribly expensive—without drawing on the material and financial resources of the United States; and, in the second place, it would be a practically certain preventative of this country's entrance into a foreign war.

There are comparatively few Americans to-day who do not know that it was the tremendous commitments of our great banking and munitions-making interests on the side of the Allies that was the most potent factor in hurling this country into the World War. "We were in the war from the outset and without us the war would not have lasted until 1917," says Prof. Roland G. Usher in The Story of the War. It is certain that the magnitude of our assistance can not be exaggerated. While we had the undoubted legal right to furnish the Allies supplies of food and manufactured goods, we had no right to become an arsenal and a recruiting station for them, much less to advance them billions of money to carry on the vast slaughtering game.

In this connection it will be recalled that when, late in 1914, one belligerent floated a small loan in New York and J. P. Morgan & Co. proposed to invite subscriptions to a French loan of $500,000,000, the Wilson administration discountenanced it, and the proposal was withdrawn. Secretary of State Bryan rightfully boasted that Wilson's action had "blazed a new way" in international dealings, and he justified it in the following memorable words:

"It is inconsistent with the spirit of neutrality for a neutral nation to make loans to belligerent nations, for money is the worst of contrabands—it commands all other things * * *. The Government withdraws the protection of citizenship from those who enlist under other flags—why should it give protection to money when it enters into foreign military service? There is no answer."

This was almost universally conceded at the time to be an unanswerable argument against the flotation of the proposed loan, and when a year later the Wilson administration reversed itself and permitted the placing of "the biggest issue of international bonds ever made," even such a pronounced sympathizer with the allied cause as Col. George Harvey, editor of the North American Review, protested against it on the ground that it made us "an ally of the Allies." He significantly pointed out that the loan was intended to liquidate sums "already loaned to England by the bankers which, for patriotic reasons, they were asking the people take off their hands through the purchase of these bonds."

The plain truth is that as a consequence of our open and persistent violation of "the spirit of neutrality" we entered the war in 1917 not in a blaze of patriotism but in a wallow of profiteering, and just at the moment when this pleasant national diversion was menaced by the imminent financial and physical exhaustion of the Allies. We went in because there seemed to be no other way to save our colossal profits from the exportation of money and materials to our warring European customers. Only Uncle Sam's joining the Allies and underwriting their indebtedness could accomplish that grand "idealistic" result.

It is difficult in the light of this irrefutable chapter of history to understand how any Congressman can fail to give his vote for the Capper resolution. Its passage will mark the greatest and most decisive step that any nation has yet taken to advance the cause of permanent peace—provided, of course, the United States will faithfully live up to it and not be swerved from this duty by the chance to pouch some more billions of war profits by catering to the necessities of war-crazed nations, as we did from 1914 to 1917. And the measure should only be amended to cover the loaning of money under the embargo.

BOYCOTT FOR PEACE

Senator CAPPER has offered a splendid contribution to the cause of peace in his resolution to authorize use of an economic boycott on war supplies, the action to be employed against countries that violate the multilateral treaty disavowing war as an instrument of national policy.

There is no expectation that the Capper resolution will be voted upon until after the 4th of March, as the present session is congested. However, it will be well to have this far-reaching proposal sink into the minds of those who are serious in their efforts to minimize the possibility of war in the future. The more people think about the Capper resolution the more are they likely to appreciate its value.

From Geneva it is observed that the passage of the resolution will give new force to Article XVI of the league covenant, which provides an economic blockade against a nation that declines to stand by the provision in Article XIII requiring that disputes be settled by arbitration. In a sense the ratification of the Kellogg pact has already put the United States into the league as far as Article XIII is concerned.

The comment pouring in from many countries hails the new proposal as a great constructive step. The world seems to be ready for it, and hopes that the United States will find itself of the same mind.

The most important feature of what Mr. CAPPER has offered is the request to the President that he enter into negotiations with other governments to obtain similar action by them in regard to their own nationals, who may be disposed to give aid and comfort to a nation that has committed a breach of the multilateral treaty.

The boycott is a weapon effective only when used by a large group. If it can be established as the way in which governments are brought to terms, the world will have moved a long way on the road toward peace.

War is a matter of factory production as well as of men. If the resolution is extended as widely as the treaty renouncing war, all of the industrial nations will be inside it.

[From the Boston (Mass.) Christian Science Monitor]

THE INEVITABLE QUESTION

Senator CAPPER has asked the inevitable question, What policy should the United States pursue in the event a nation violates its multilateral treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy? This question raises an issue of far-reaching consequences. It is a question which could be delayed until a violation was actually committed, but faced it must eventually be, and the Kansas Senator has chosen the wiser course. It is well that such a policy should be thoroughly probed and carefully developed, and the time for discussion and development of policy is not under the strain of emergency but during the clear-sighted days of peace, such as have already brought to fruition the pact of Paris.

In the resolution which he has just presented to Congress Senator CAPPER offers one answer to this vital question. His answer is best summarized in the two salient sections of his resolution, which read:

"SECTION 1. Be it resolved that whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues.

"SEC. 2. It is declared to be the policy of the United States that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty."

At the present moment the specific details of Senator CAPPER'S proposal are not as important as the fundamental premise on which it rests. This is that it is in line with the best interests of the United States and with the maintenance of an enduring peace that the United States, being tangibly concerned with any menace to peace, however remote geographically, should do everything compatible with its own security to avert or minimize war wherever it may arise. The rapid spread of American foreign trade to the farthest reaches of the globe and the extent of its vast loans to the principal countries of the world make the preservation of peace a practical necessity to the United States, if not a moral responsibility. The condition which makes possible the stability and expansion of American foreign commerce and which lends security to the billions of dollars of American loans is a condition of peace throughout the world. The question—a question of enlightened self-interest as well as practical idealism—is not whether the United States should take an active part in preserving this condition of peace throughout the world, but how best the United States can exert its pacific influence.

Senator CAPPER'S answer to this question is a logical consequence growing out of the pact of Paris. This treaty provides that all disputes between the signatories must be settled by pacific means only, and it also stipulates that any nation violating its terms shall be deprived of the benefits of the treaty. The pact of Paris ends at this point, and at this point Senator CAPPER takes up the discussion and advances the proposal that the United States should make it unlawful to ship armaments or other implements of war to a violator of the pact. Such a policy would mean, in other words, that the United States would refuse to aid, to the extent of withholding military supplies, any nation which has set about to promote its national interests by resort to war. The United States, vitally concerned for its own welfare in minimizing any menace to its commerce, can do no less. The same awakened public opinion which gave such overwhelming impetus to the pact of Paris should give equal thought to the Capper proposal or whatever modification or amplification of it may seem advisable.

[From the Duluth (Minn.) Herald]

SENATOR CAPPER'S GOOD IDEA

Senator CAPPER is offering a resolution which is a natural and logical sequence to the Kellogg treaty outlawing war.

This resolution provides an embargo against selling war-making materials to any nation that violates the spirit of the Kellogg treaty. When the President proclaims that any nation has gone to war in violation of this treaty, it will become unlawful "to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

Moreover, the resolution provides that any American found giving aid and comfort to the lawbreaking nation shall be denied the customary protection of the American Government. The President is asked to invite other nations that have signed or will sign the Kellogg treaty to adopt a similar practice.

A nation that goes to war wantonly, as nations have gone in the past, will be a violator of the Kellogg treaty. That treaty, when it is adopted by the nations, will be as nearly an international law as any that exists. Its violator, therefore, will be an international criminal. It will be no more right to sell arms to such a criminal nation than it would to sell a jimmy to a burglar.

Only the possible profit in selling to a criminal nation the implements to practice its crime stands in the way of the unanimous adoption of the Capper resolution. And that profit, which would be criminal, ought not to influence a single vote.

[From the New York Telegram]

PEACE—THE NEXT STEP

The most promising aspect of the Capper Senate resolution to authorize munitions and economic boycott against any nation violating the Kellogg antiwar pact is the public attention it is receiving. Last year a similar Burton resolution aimed at warring nations was almost completely ignored. Here is quick proof that the Kellogg treaty discussion and ratification have stimulated America's sense of responsibility for world peace.

We are in sympathy with the purpose of the Capper resolution.

We believe that the moral weight of the United States should be thrown against nations which break the peace. This is the intent of the Kellogg pact. But America's moral influence in such a crisis would be nullified if that outlawed foreign war were fought with American munitions and supplies. And this is the missing link in the American outlawry-of-war chain which the Capper resolution aims to supply.

The actual text of the Capper resolution seems to us unclear on some points and evasive on others. But that is not important at the moment, because CAPPER'S idea now is simply to start a general discussion as a background for intelligent handling of the question by Congress next winter.

Opposition of the BORAH isolationist group on the one side and of the militarists on the other has been accorded similar proposals in the past, and doubtless will be concentrated against the new resolution.

There probably will be a hue and cry that the proposed move would "take us into the League of Nations through the back door." That is nonsense.

Soon or late the United States must face the facts of modern warfare—that there can be no war without affecting this country's world interests, that old concepts of neutrality are meaningless in an age which necessarily distinguishes between "private" and "public wars," and that traditional definitions of contraband can not apply to modern wars which involve civilian populations and which are determined mainly by economic weapons.

The Capper resolution is evidence that America is beginning belatedly to face this problem which other nations, through the League of Nations, have been facing for a decade. But the League of Nations is not the cause of that problem. Neither is the League of Nations the American solution proposed by CAPPER. His resolution would empower the President, unless otherwise provided by Congress, to determine the violator of the Kellogg pact and to apply an American boycott against the offender. Certainly this is quite different from allowing the league or the league council to determine American action.

A second important difference between this American proposal and the league and Locarno provisions for so-called sanctions against an offender is that the latter include use of military and naval force.

The present international situation is paradoxical and dangerous because the United States, which on paper has outlawed aggressive war, is in a position to prevent league nations from suppressing an aggressive war. Indeed, we are in a position now to furnish the arms and supplies to a nation violating our Kellogg treaty and then go to war ourselves against league nations whose blockade against the aggressor interferes with our "freedom" to aid the outlaw. Here is one cause of the Anglo-American disagreement over sea law and the new cruiser rivalry.

This issue is fundamental. It will not be settled in a day. The solution probably will not be in the exact form of the Capper Senate resolution or of the similar Porter resolution introduced in the House yesterday. But that the solution will be along the general line of these resolutions we do not doubt.

Meanwhile this issue deserves the best thought of the American people.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer]

TEETH FOR TREATY

The resolution which Senator CAPPER offers would put teeth in the Kellogg treaties. It is based on the assumption that the purpose of the treaties is actually to outlaw war. We shall now see how much power the munition makers wield in Congress.

By agreement ratified by the American Senate less than a month ago, the United States binds itself in partnership with near a score of other nations never to engage in war as an instrument of public policy. The treaty carries no formal reservations, though it is understood that other signatories will insist on their own "interpretations."

Now the Kansas Senator, member of the Foreign Relations Committee, proposes his resolution as the logical next step. In a sense, it carries an American interpretation of the treaty; it tells the world that when we renounce war we renounce it; and that any power which, after renouncing war, nevertheless engages in war, shall labor under the handicap of America's supreme displeasure.

Munition making has long been a great industry in this country. The United States, most peaceful of powers, has thus more than once contributed for profit to the wars of other people. It is not a creditable rôle. The Kellogg treaties offer an opportunity to abandon a policy which has seemed to many out of harmony with our own pretensions.

The principle behind the Capper resolution is identical with that of the League of Nations provision that when a league member violates its obligations under the covenant other members shall take appropriate measures to compel obedience. CAPPER is more specific; he sets up the exact measure of compulsion.

A resolution, of course, merely expresses an opinion. It lays down no law. In this case it declares that "whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated" the Kellogg treaty, it "shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President to export" munitions to such country.

Our hope is that the resolution is adopted. Selling death for private profit is not a business for Uncle Sam to engage in or to sanction.

PROFITS IN WAR

Senator CAPPER has offered a resolution, which he says he does not expect a vote upon at this session, which would declare the policy of the United States to be the declaration of an embargo on armaments against any nation breaking the Kellogg peace pact.

Part of his argument for the resolution is that if it were known that a nation violating the pact would be unable to buy war supplies from us it might avert war.

That is sound enough, but not one-tenth so important as the other part of the argument, which has to do with the effect not on others but on ourselves. If all our own people know that the outbreak of war between two or more other nations is not going to create a beautifully profitable trade with the belligerents for us, there will be considerably less sympathy with nations that go to war.

Unless the United States does clarify its attitude and policy in this matter of trade with a treaty-evading nation that goes to war, how easily we could get into a position, with our factories booming, to supply the belligerents, and with the most tremendous howl about "freedom of the seas" the moment any international pressure was applied to the aggressor in the war.

Taking the profits out of war, whether it be a war including us or a war between nations in the far corners of the world, will always be found a tremendous stimulus to peaceful notions. Senator CAPPER'S resolution has its merit in that, while it goes only a short distance and in a test might not go even that far, it does approach war and peace from the standpoint of profits.

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

A spectacular piece of legislation has been placed before the country by Senator CAPPER in the hope that it will arouse a wide interest and full discussion, even though no action will probably be taken during the present session of Congress. The resolution in effect provides that the United States shall not export arms or munitions to any country which definitely breaks its obligation under the Kellogg pact to refrain from aggressive war. The responsibility under the resolution rests with the President to determine what nation may be the aggressor in any given case.

This project is complemented by the Porter resolution, which makes a similar embargo possible against any nation where domestic outbreak is threatening or existent. The two together are a significant step in the new foreign policy of the United States. It is worth noting that the Capper resolution has met with warm support from such public figures as Nicholas Murray Butler, George Wickersham, and President Angell, of Yale University. These men are outstanding liberals, who are looking forward to a time when the United States will take a much more active part in world political affairs than is now the case.

On the other hand, the general temper of Congress appears to be somewhere between lukewarm and definitely opposed. The commonest attitude among legislative leaders is that of waiting until popular sentiment has had an opportunity to express itself. This is eminently desirable. The Capper proposal contemplates a complete change of front in our foreign policy, and so requires careful analysis before action is taken. It proposes in substance to wield the enormous economic power of the United States in the interest of peace between nations by means of the economic blockade of an aggressor state.

In view of its profound implications for the future policy of the United States toward foreign affairs, the proposal of Senator CAPPER merits neither instant approbation nor yet condemnation. It is a proper subject for thorough study in the light of our changing national policies and shifting position in the sphere of world politics. It is to be hoped that the discussion of the project may be free from bitter recriminations of die-hards and extremists, for it is a serious proposal to make effective the now feeble Paris pact, and as such is worthy of adequate consideration.

THE NEXT MOVE

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, has introduced into Congress a measure which will prohibit America selling arms or munitions to any country which is adjudged a violator of the Kellogg pact outlawing war. If the world court or any tribunal names a nation as the aggressor nation in any war, all the nations signatory to the pact would outlaw the offending nation by refusing it credit and munitions of war.

That action would stop that war.

Slowly we shall move toward world peace. We may break peace time and again. But in the end peace must come as men think more and more of justice. It is fine to remember that Kansas has a Senator who stands in the forefront of those world statesmen who are striving for peace.

Senator CAPPER represents all that is fine in this State, its loftiest aspirations, its most practical common sense.

[From the Washington Star]

BACKING THE KELLOGG TREATY

The Kellogg multilateral treaty renouncing war has been described in certain quarters—particularly those not responsible for its negotiation—as a mere gesture; indeed, an empty gesture. Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, who has been a strong supporter of the treaty, now comes forward with a proposal which, if adopted, may put a very different aspect upon the situation. What the Kansas Senator proposes is that the United States and other nations signatory to the Kellogg treaty shall pledge themselves not to sell arms, munitions, and other materials needed for carrying on war to any nation which violates the Kellogg treaty.

Few nations that go to war are able to furnish all the arms, munitions, and other materials essential to carrying on war. They must rely on neutrals for these munitions. For example, had the belligerents, soon after the war broke in 1914 in Europe, been unable to obtain from the United States vast quantities of war supplies, the effect would have been serious for some of the nations involved, if not all of them.

A resolution introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator CAPPER authorizes the President of the United States, by proclamation, to declare whenever any nation has violated the Kellogg treaty. After the President shall have issued his proclamation, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress, to export to the nation violating the treaty any arms, munitions, etc. Further, the resolution declares that nationals of the United States who undertake to send such supplies to that nation or nations shall not have the protection of the United States.

In order to convince other nations of the advisability of enacting similar laws relating to the export of arms and munitions to a nation violating the Kellogg treaty, the Capper resolution provides that the strictures against the export of arms and munitions from the United States shall apply only in case of a breach of the treaty by war "against a government which has declared its adherence to a similar policy."

The Capper resolution and the course it proposes is a logical sequence of the ratification of the Kellogg treaty. How ridiculous it would be for the United States—or any other nation—having solemnly declared its adherence to a treaty renouncing war as a means of settling international disputes, to assist a nation which violates this pledge to carry on a war through the sale to it of much-needed munitions!

The proposed embargo on the export of arms and munitions would lie against the nation waging an aggressive war. It would become the duty of the President of the United States to determine, in the event of hostilities, which nation was the aggressor before he issued a proclamation laying such an embargo. He might determine that both nations were equally guilty of violating the Kellogg treaty. From a reading of the resolution it appears that Congress would have the power, however, to override the President's decision in this matter by enacting a law or laws contrary to the President's determination of the guilt of the party or parties involved.

Despite the difficulties which may lie in the path of the Capper resolution and the adoption of a similar program in other countries, certainly it appears that the Kansas Senator has laid a finger on a very practical method of aiding the fulfillment of the pledge contained in the Kellogg treaty.

[From the Lincoln (Nebr.) State Journal]

Many friends of the Kellogg peace pact will favor the resolution Senator CAPPER has introduced in the Senate which would tend to give the pact more force. The Kansas Senator wants to make it unlawful to export munitions, implements of war, or other articles of war to countries which have violated the Kellogg pact from the time the President shall declare they have committed such a violation until the time he shall declare the violation no longer continues. If all the signers of the pact would back up their signatures with a similar enactment, and enforce it, there is little doubt but what war would be effectively outlawed.

[From the Saginaw (Mich.) News]

ARMS EMBARGO TO HELP PEACE

Senator CAPPER introduces a resolution authorizing the President to place an embargo on supplies of arms, munitions, or "other articles for use in war," against any nation violating the multilateral treaty recently ratified by the Senate. Though the resolution if adopted could apply only to the United States, there is a provision which requests the Chief Executive to negotiate with other signers of the multilateral treaty to have them take similar and concurrent action. It is a proposal that if made effective would unquestionably strengthen the peace treaty.

Keeping in view the extreme difficulty exercised in bringing about domestic disarmament to the extent of preventing easy access to deadly weapons by the criminal classes, it may be expected the resolution will meet with opposition that may not appear on the surface. Senator CAPPER probably had this in view when he said:

"It should be impressed that war will not be a means of carrying on a profitable trade with the belligerent nations, a profitable trade that in the end will cost the lives of our own youth and saddle another tremendous war debt upon the surviving people of the earth. * * * Rather it should be impressed upon the consciousness of every citizen that the effect of the pact will be to diminish or cut off that trade so that it will no longer be in the interest of armament makers or the private traffickers in blood money to connive with a government which in defiance of its obligations lets loose upon the world the pestilence of war."

In the main the resolution is new and invigorating testimony to the fact that civilization nowadays favors but one form of warfare, that which is directed to prevent wars of bloodshed. Mutual and general agreement to avoid war, as is found in the multilateral treaty, would, of course, be vastly strengthened by such embargoes as Senator CAPPER proposes. And knowledge that practical methods exist to make such embargoes effective would undoubtedly act as a further curb upon the war virus everywhere.

It logically follows that the more embarrassments, the more difficulties there can be imposed upon the making of war, the less likelihood there is of its being resorted to; the more probability the nations will incline to adjust their disagreements by the peaceful processes of reason. Broadly speaking, this resolution of Senator CAPPER'S would impose an economic boycott upon the offending and belligerent nation, for about every commodity of account nowadays enters into the making of war; which is likely to be even more true in future wars.

In any event, the proposal is bound to stir up an interesting discussion, and this itself should prove of value. It will be found impossible to ignore the resolution or its meaning. It must and will be given consideration, and is of a nature that makes it fully worth all the attention that can be given it.

CAPPER SETS TEST

The Capper resolution carries assurance that the league can count on us to cooperate in restraining an aggressor. It shows what could have been done if the Republicans had undertaken to develop and improve the peace arrangements worked out after the war instead of bedeviling them. If they had taken a helpful instead of an obstructive attitude, there would be no need now to wriggle out of the mess created by the reservations and bitter-enders.

Another question answered is whether we are going to stand behind our own Kellogg treaty. The resolution gives that treaty a vitality of which it was nearly stripped by the Senate debate. In order to get the votes needed for its ratification, administration spokesmen took the position that it was not much more than a moral gesture. The psychological effect of the debate has been bad. The Capper resolution, if adopted, will overcome this and show the world that this country takes the Kellogg pact at its full face value and means to make it an effective preventive of war. The resolution proposed by Representative PORTER in the House goes even further.

[From the Sioux City (Iowa) Journal]

TREATY ENFORCEMENT

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, an ardent supporter of the Kellogg multilateral treaty designed to outlaw war, believes there is a way to enforce the pact. There is no provision in the covenant, signed or adhered to by nearly 60 governments, for its enforcement. So far the civilized world has accepted the pact as morally binding upon all the nations included as signatories or adherents.

A Senate resolution offered by Senator CAPPER would definitely put the United States in a position to contribute to the pact's enforcement. An economic boycott is the weapon Senator CAPPER has in mind. This would be aimed at any nation that, in this Nation's judgment, had violated the terms of the treaty to start an aggressive conflict. The Capper resolution would give the President authority to issue a proclamation forbidding exports, particularly munitions of war, to any government violating the pact. This is provided in a paragraph that reads as follows:

"That whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

If this resolution succeeded, it would mean that the Federal Government would be empowered to institute a complete boycott against an offending country. "Or other articles for use in war" covers all manner of supplies, food, clothing, building materials, practically everything in trade.

Alone, the United States probably could not thus prevent war through discouraging another country by threatening a boycott. This country could do more in that respect than any other single power, because of the wealth of resources here, but the value of the Capper resolution lies in the probability of it being adopted elsewhere if given indorsement in this country.

It may be taken for granted that the world powers and various other progressive nations are sincere in their desire to establish and maintain world peace. If it be true that they desire it greatly, then it is logical for them to adopt some method whereunder the pact could be rigidly enforced. The boycott, if decided upon by the powerful governments in the pact, could not fail to achieve the result desired.

[From the Augusta (Me.) Kennebec Journal]

WORTH THINKING ABOUT

Occasionally some one rises to remark that it is wicked to permit guns and munitions to be sold to those engaged in warfare, or who are likely to be, and then some one who has meanwhile been doing a little thinking is convinced that our own land of the free would probably be a British possession had not our forefathers been able to buy guns and munitions.

Senator CAPPER has said something which will bear thinking about. He has introduced a resolution which would provide "that whenever the President determines, and by proclamation declares, that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by an act of Congress or by proclamation by the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

[From the Press, Pontiac, Mich.]

A PROPER LIMITATION

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER'S bill in the matter of an armament embargo has much to commend it. Under its terms the President would have the necessary power in his hands to prevent the shipment of "arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war" to nations which had violated the Kellogg peace pact.

We shall hear a great complaint from the munition makers and all and sundry who profit by war. The jingoes and the superpatriotic gentry who want to keep the world perpetually tuned up for immediate conflict when slight differences occur will scent a tragic handicap. This class, which believes "in principle" in movements intended to bring about world peace will find this particular bit of legislation a dangerous curtailment. In the abstract, all of these ideas looking to perpetual peace are commendable, but not one of them ever is safe or workable in the minds of gentlemen of the Lodge school of international relationships.

The Capper bill does not make it mandatory on the President. Its purpose is to give that official authority to stop the shipment of all forms of mechanism intended for mass murder, if he shall deem it expedient.

Of course, this trade is profitable. It makes a great showing on the balance sheet as well as in the cemetery. Someone's sons must shoulder a musket, march off to war, and come home in a rough box or be dumped out at sea or buried somewhere among the millions of "unknown."

The Capper bill intends to serve notice on the world that the United States believes in peace.

The Kansas man says he intends to cut down the activities of the "private traffickers in blood." He thinks that governments which, in defiance of their obligations, "let loose upon the world the pestilence of war" should be denied the help and assistance of other nations which honestly believe in peace. He seeks the mighty influence of American disapproval of this form of international trade.

The Capper bill would serve notice on the world that our approval of the Kellogg pact was not merely lip service. It would emphasize the fact that we are prepared to sacrifice profits to peace. It would show that we honestly believe that men are of more account than dollars. And some of the world does not believe that of us at present.

This Capper limitation is what the peace movement needs. There should be much in the way of collateral action of this character. It is needed in America and everywhere throughout the world if peace finally is to become the accepted program of civilization.

[From the Paterson (N. J.) Press-Guardian]

ANOTHER STEP PROPOSED

The resolution which Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has introduced in the Senate, if passed, will provide another advance toward settlements of international disputes through mediation and arbitration, now declared to be the policy of practically all nations in accordance with provisions of the Kellogg pact.

What Senator CAPPER seeks in his resolution is to empower the President to proclaim and forbid the export of arms, munitions, implements, or other articles for use in war to any country which, in his opinion, has violated the agreement of this Kellogg pact. Thus, in full effect, his resolution would declare a boycott on the part of this country against any country which had gone contrary to the Kellogg pact, renouncing war as a means of settlement of international dispute.

It can not be expected that the resolution will be adopted at the present session of Congress, which has only about three weeks to run. Nor is it probable that the special session will reach a decision upon it. There will be serious opposition to its adoption, and it will become one of the major themes for argument for a number of months. Perhaps in the end it may fail, for it will be held on the part of many that such a resolution will have the effect of too great participation on the part of this country in the affairs of other nations.

At first glance, however, the resolution seems most important and one to which the country may in safety and with tremendous effect give its adherence.

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch]

MR. CAPPER'S ARMS EMBARGO

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, wants the United States to refuse to sell arms or ammunition to any country that violates the Kellogg peace pact. He has introduced a resolution to that effect which also authorizes the President to negotiate with other signatory nations to join in the boycott.

Immediate action is not looked for, but the proposal, Mr. CAPPER hopes, will stimulate public discussion. That hope is likely to be realized. Public opinion will, we believe, be disposed to abolish "a profitable trade that in the end will cost the lives of our own youth and saddle another tremendous war debt on the people of the earth."

Depriving the neutral nations of any opportunity for profit ought to help to unpopularize war universally.

The provision empowering the President to persuade other nations to adopt this policy seems superfluous. The other nations, with few exceptions, are members of the League of Nations and as such are obligated to suspend all commercial relations with any nation waging an aggressive war. But the moral of this provision can not sincerely be ignored. It emphasizes anew the truth that international cooperation is necessary to outlaw war and achieve the great end of abiding peace. The experience of the World War has taught that lesson just as impressively as it exposed the danger and ultimate cost of "a profitable trade" in munitions.

[From the Douglas (Kans.) Tribune]

Senator CAPPER has introduced a resolution in Congress, and is pressing its passage, pledging the United States, in case of another war, not to permit its citizens to furnish fighting supplies to either side. That is really the only way to maintain neutrality. If two men were fighting or going into a fight, could a man be classed neutral who passed to one of them a club? If in the World War the United States had prohibited its citizens selling munitions of war to either side it would, of course, have prevented American firms from making billions, but it would have "kept us out of war." And the United States had to loan these purchasing nations the money to pay for their supplies, and our people are now being taxed to pay the debts these foreign nations are not paying.

[From the Winsted (Conn.) Citizen]

TEETH FOR PEACE PACT

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, complicates the armament issue a bit. He has introduced a measure which would forbid the sale of American arms and munitions to any nation going to war in violation of the Kellogg treaty, and urges other nations to adopt the same policy.

This resolution, he believes, would "give teeth to the Kellogg pact, which as it now stands depends for its effectiveness only on the conscience of the signatory nations."

It would, indeed, if adopted and followed by the big industrial nations in the spirit and letter.

Modern warfare, as the World War proved, depends on enormous quantities of machine-made supplies. If the industrial nations will not sell them, most of the nations can not fight, and even the other industrial nations will be handicapped.

Manufacturers of armament and war materials will oppose this measure, of course. Some governments will oppose it for the sake of the profit they may make out of other people's wars, or from a desire to keep up their munitions industries for their own self-defense. But the American public might approve such a pacifist measure.

Suppose it were adopted generally, as some such measure probably will be some time—for the peace spirit grows. There would still be one serious little joker. Who would decide what wars were "in violation of the Kellogg treaty"? The League of Nations might assume that task. But would the United States or Russia agree?

[From the Elmira (N. Y.) Star-Gazette]

TEETH FOR KELLOGG PACT IN CAPPER'S RESOLUTION

With the frankly expressed intention of putting a set of good, capable teeth in the Kellogg multilateral peace pact, Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, on Monday introduced in the Senate a resolution, the chief provision of which was granting authority to the President of the United States to declare an arms embargo against any nation which he should declare to be a violator of the pact.

Wide discussion of CAPPER'S resolution was immediate and the views expressed concerning it naturally differed. Generally it was lauded as an intelligent attempt to supply a method of making the Kellogg pact effective against violators, since that instrument contains no provisions for its own enforcement.

However, objections were lodged against it on the ground that in the first place it placed too great a responsibility upon the President, who would be compelled, to make its terms effective, to declare which of two nations was the aggressor in war, and secondly, that it was "entering the league by the back door."

[From the News, Rockville Center, N. Y.]

CAPPER AND THE KELLOGG TREATY

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has thrown a bombshell into the camp of those Senators who did their best to emasculate the Kellogg peace pact. He has introduced a resolution in the Senate to the effect that any nation which violates these pacts shall be practically classed as an outlaw nation and denied the privilege of securing arms from this Nation. We would go even further and put them on a basis so that they would be unable to get any supplies of any sort from the United States. With such an economic boycott from this, the richest Nation in the world, there is every reason to believe that it would be the world's best deterrent to war.

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald]

TO KEEP THE PEACE

It was inevitable that the Capper resolution should arouse critical reactions in quarters which have always been hostile to concrete efforts to make the influence of this country for international peace tangible and effective. Therefore it is not surprising that, after the first outburst of enthusiastic approval, voices should have made themselves heard in varied derogation. First of all, we hear the obvious charge that the resolution would, in effect, put us in the League of Nations. In any case we are warned that the proposal would make us the tail to the league's kite. And, finally, we have Senator BORAH'S mutterings that he is opposed to anything which looks or sounds like a "sanction."

The trouble with these isolationists is that they are too prejudiced to be governed by logic. If there is any difference between the exercise of embargo power in respect to Latin-American countries and its exercise in respect to a European power which has violated its pledge under the Kellogg treaty, it does not disclose itself to an unbiased mind. Yet all that the Capper resolution contemplates is that just this course shall be pursued, that our citizens shall be forbidden to sell and send munitions of war to an aggressive belligerent which has broken its word.

How such action could involve us in hostilities, how it would cause us to play second fiddle to the league, is not perceptible. It might very well be the case that our arms embargo would help the league; it might even be the case that this method would track the league's undertaking to discipline an unruly member, but that is surely no good reason for any failure on our part to make the renunciation of war as a national policy something more than a pious gesture. We owe it to common sense and good faith to leave nothing undone for the purpose of effectuating the multilateral treaty.

Senator BORAH'S opposition to sanctions is no new thing. Many a speech has he delivered in denunciation of the league covenant's provisions with regard to disciplining obstreperous countries. But just as the older BORAH could never have led the fight for the kind of treaty which has just been approved by the Senate, since his leadership implied a departure from the isolationism to which he was once devoted, so the new BORAH who has evolved a more admirable world outlook should be able to rise above the petty limitations of the past.

It is time that the Idaho Senator, together with other antagonists of America's participation in a realistic movement for international peace, face the facts of the situation. The day for bandying phrases, and hypnotizing ourselves into a self-induced terror, is now happily gone. If Mr. BORAH can prove that a suspension of trade with an aggressive belligerent would necessarily embroil us in war, the country will be with him. But he can't do that. The Capper resolution does not deprive us of any freedom or independence of action. It simply offers a way of embodying the faith we profess in works of pacification.

The fact that Congressman PORTER has launched in the House a separate enterprise to make the multilateral treaty effective indicates to what an extent the problem of making the pact workable has gripped the interest of thoughtful American statesmen. Neither Senator CAPPER nor Representative PORTER looks forward to immediate action or even debate. But both realize that public opinion must be guided toward a crystallization which will force bitter-enders and indifferentists into obedience to an overwhelming demand for American courage in keeping the world at peace.

[From the Shamokin (Pa.) Daily Herald]

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, newspaper man and statesman, has a level head on his shoulders. He knows that all this talk of peace pacts, good-will to men, love your fellow nation as yourself, is not exactly what it is supposed to be. Being practical, he suggests a practical measure, namely, a trade boycott on all countries violating the antiwar pledge. It was Roosevelt who popularized the "big stick" idea. It's still a good idea. A nation threatened with loss of trade will think twice before plunging into a costly war. Senator CAPPER has suggested an effective weapon for permanent peace. In our present state of civilization, the only way to maintain peace is with a club.

[From the Mobile (Ala.) Register]

CAPPER AND ARMS EMBARGO

Although intimating that he did not expect early action, Senator CAPPER has introduced a resolution binding this country to the policy of an arms embargo against nations that go to war in violation of the Kellogg peace pact. Mr. CAPPER remarks that it will be just as well for Congress and the country to be thinking and talking the matter over. He could scarcely ask for any better response, for semiofficial sentiments of disapproval have been wafted in from both Paris and London, while Senator BORAH bluntly asserts that such a policy would lead us into war. Besides this, whoever it is that pries opinions out of the President has informed the world that Mr. Coolidge disapproves the idea.

The Kellogg pact in effect bonds us to the peace, but the official views from abroad seem to incline to the idea that an arms embargo would destroy the neutrality status of the nations adopting it. Now, the status of neutrals is a question seriously at issue just now between this country and other powers, particularly England. Our policy stands for the complete and unabridged freedom of the seas for the vessels of all nations not engaged in war. England went counter to this policy during the World War, and even confiscated American ships and goods, with the purpose, of course, of paying for them in full. This course was specifically rebuked by Woodrow Wilson, when he made absolute freedom of the seas to all nations one of the stipulations in his fourteen points. The freedom of the seas, the war President made it clear also on other occasions, was one of the main things for which we fought.

Thus, while Mr. CAPPER has brought on all the talk he anticipated, it is not likely that his resolution will find favor at this time. But there is a way in which it could be made to work without some of the objections now alleged against it. That would be for the policy to be adopted by all signatories to the peace pact. It would then become, in effect, an international matter and thus divested of the delicacy that would attend the refusal of merely one noncombatant nation to sell arms and supplies to nations at war. There may be some virtue in the Capper idea, for nations without some outside source of supplies would be handcapped in any war, but it needs to be applied in some better and more generally accepted manner.

[From the Plainfield (N. J.) Courier-News]

TEETH IN THE KELLOGG PACT

As a means of stirring up warfare in the United States Senate, there is still no better medium than a peace pact or negotiations for peace. The Kellogg pact stirred up quite a lively skirmish before it won its way through to ratification, but the new resolution which Senator CAPPER now presents should bring out the Senate's picked shock troops running.

Senator CAPPER would put teeth in the Kellogg pact by pledging this country to an economic boycott against any nation that breaks the pact. He would make it unlawful "unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that such violation no longer continues."

As has been repeatedly pointed out, the Kellogg pact has no force other than moral force. It provides no machinery for compelling signatory nations to obey its provisions nor to punish those that violate them. The teeth that Senator CAPPER proposes to supply are comparatively inoffensive weapons; they would not necessarily bring us into an armed conflict with a recalcitrant nation even if we employed them. But the resolution touches the crux of the ancient feud between those who shudder at the thought of "entangling alliances" and those who believe the time has come for honest cooperation with the rest of the world.

Senator CAPPER must be an optimist where the Senate is concerned. He must believe that the forces which sprang to arms against the League of Nations and the World Court and that almost succeeded in weighting down the Kellogg pact with reservations have gone out of action. For his proposal would be almost as momentous a step as actual joining the League of Nations, as the nations of Europe are already construing it.

Effective teeth in the Kellogg pact would unquestionably add greatly to its prestige and its usefulness. It would mean that this Nation is willing to back up in an active way the instrument for peace which it established. It would tell the world that we have the courage of our convictions. But to try to get these teeth into the pact would mean to throw wide open again the vital questions on which the Senate has hopelessly split in the past.

[From the Owosso (Mich.) Argus-Press]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

The resolution proposed by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, in the United States Senate will, if adopted, put teeth in the Kellogg treaty. The proposal of the Senator would give power to the President of the United States to issue a proclamation when, in his opinion, any nation violates the provisions of the Kellogg treaty, to the effect that it would be unlawful to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, and any other articles for use in war, until the President shall by proclamation declare that no such violation continues.

The resolution has much to commend it in principle, but it has one questionable feature, in that it confers a great authority to the President of the United States. It gives a power which many occupants of the Chief Executive's office would hesitate to have, implying as it would decisions of great consequence. In case of dispute between two nations who are signers of the Kellogg treaty, it would be necessary for the President to determine which of these nations was at fault, and issue his proclamation accordingly. On the other hand, there is much to be said for the principle of the resolution, in that it would offer great possibilities for the enforcement of the Kellogg peace pact.

As it stands to-day the Kellogg treaty is more or less an expression of good will and good intention between the signatory nations. A nation which starts an aggressive warfare against another nation would be looked upon with distrust and the moral influence of the other nations would be against them. If coupled with that, such a nation had to face the possibility of a proclamation such as would be a part of the Capper plan, it would shut off to these nations what has been in the past one of the principal sources of obtaining supplies for carrying on warfare.

The idea as expressed by Senator CAPPER is still in the embryo stage, and if adopted will doubtless see considerable modification or changes to make it compatible with the position which this country desires to maintain in world affairs. The Kansas Senator does not expect that any action will be taken on this resolution at the present session of Congress. He merely wishes for the present to get the matter before the public and create a sentiment that will favor the United States taking this step. The idea in substance is a worth-while one, and if taken by the United States will enable this country to wield an effective weapon in maintaining the provisions of the Kellogg treaty.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch]

CAPPPER'S ARMS EMBARGO

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, wants the United States to refuse to sell arms or ammunition to any country that violates the Kellogg peace pact. He has introduced a resolution to that effect, which also authorizes the President to negotiate with other signatory nations to join in the boycott.

Immediate action is not looked for, but the proposal, Mr. CAPPER hopes, will stimulate public discussion. That hope is likely to be realized. Public opinion will, we believe, be disposed to abolish "a profitable trade that in the end will cost the lives of our own youth and saddle another tremendous war debt on the people of the earth."

Depriving the neutral nations of any opportunity for profit ought to help to unpopularize war universally.

The provision empowering the President to persuade other nations to adopt this policy seems superfluous. The other nations, with few exceptions, are members of the League of Nations, and as such are obligated to suspend all commercial relations with any nation waging an aggressive war. But the moral of this provision can not sincerely be ignored. It emphasizes anew the truth that international cooperation is necessary to outlaw war and achieve the great end of abiding peace. The experience of the World War has taught that lesson just as impressively as it exposed the danger and ultimate cost of "a profitable trade" in munitions.

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

The design of the Capper resolution introduced in the Senate the other day is to implement the Kellogg treaty much as the Volstead Act was designed to implement the eighteenth amendment. Without such a development as Senator CAPPER advocates, the Kellogg treaty must remain nothing more than a pious expression of idealistic sentiment; with the nations acting as Senator CAPPER wishes them to act, the Kellogg pact would become an efficient instrument of peace. But what Senator CAPPER wishes his resolution to accomplish and what it might be counted on, in the light of history, to accomplish are not necessarily one and the same thing.

It is an excellent idea that all nations signatory to the Kellogg pact, the United States among them, should employ the economic boycott against, and refuse the export arms or ammunition to, or help financially any nation which violates the pact. But will it always be possible to say which of two nations entering on hostilities is the one really guilty of the sort of aggressive action which the Kellogg pact is designed to end? Who will define the aggressor? The logical procedure would seem to be to call a conference of all the signatories and let it decide. And when that is done, will majority vote be binding? If so, a desperately troublesome situation might easily arise because of the present commitments of several of the signatory nations. Certain nations now closely bound by alliances would not be likely to dub one of their own group an aggressor even if the United States should hold that opinion of it. Would this country then accept the majority view and join in measures against a nation which it held wholly innocent?

It is very easy to pooh-pooh this sort of criticism, but it will have to be met before the Capper resolution can get through the United States Senate. Only those with very short memories will forget the part which Article XVI of the league covenant played in the days when the document was under consideration by the Senate. And in essence there seems to us virtually no difference between the position which the United States would assume under the Capper plan and that which it would have assumed under Article XVI. The very fact that Senator BORAH, who fought so hard against our joining the league, is holding back his judgment of the Capper plan confirms us in this view.

But all this is far from saying that the Capper plan should be scrapped merely because a similar proposal, included in the league covenant, was scrapped nine years ago. The ideal of the Capper resolution being sound, since the idea is the provision of machinery which shall insure international peace, the problem of statesmanship is to find how it can be realized. It will not do to stop with a recognition of the difficulties in the way. Statesmanship must go on and find how these difficulties may be overcome. The extreme cynic may take the view that it is quite useless to do anything, but the seeming impossibility of carrying out a clear moral obligation is no reason for not exhausting one's last resource in an attempt to carry it out. We hope, therefore, that the Capper plan will be discussed fully and fairly and that into the consideration of it there will be brought none of that partisan or personal bias discussion of the league covenant because of the determination of some Republican Senators to belittle the achievements of Woodrow Wilson.

[From the New Leader]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

The resolution of Senator CAPPER in support of the Kellogg peace pact and attempting to give that agreement something more than a mere will to peace is hailed all over the world as an important contribution to peace. Although action on it is not expected in the present Congress, it is certain to be discussed as widely as the Paris pact was.

One thing the resolution proposes is the use of the economic boycott against a nation which violates the peace pact. In case of such a violation the President by proclamation may prohibit the export to such nation of arms, munitions, implements of war, "or other articles for use in war." The resolution also would declare it to be the policy of the United States not to protect nationals who give aid and comfort to such an offending nation. The President would also be requested to enter into negotiations with other nations which have ratified or may ratify the Paris pact to take similar action against a nation that violated it. However, the resolution would apply the American boycott only "in case of a breach of the said treaty by war against a government which has declared its adherence to a similar policy."

The application of the economic boycott is a powerful weapon in war and may be as powerful in preventing war. It is a form of war itself and may be as effective in some instances as a fleet of warships. It may be an important question whether this power should be lodged in the President alone, considering that it is a form of war and the power to declare war is lodged with Congress. In a dispute involving a number of nations the President may have his own prejudices for or against any particular power, and his decision might be far from satisfactory.

Suppose this power had been lodged with President Wilson. Considering the sharp protest sent to both Germany and Great Britain, he would have declared against one or the other. Which would it have been? At any rate, the Capper proposal, whatever weakness it may have as revealed by the coming discussion, is correct in principle. Adhered to by the powers, it would help to restrain the anarchs among nations by the threat of withholding the substance upon which war feeds.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Times]

The Capper resolution, which proposes to penalize the nation that resorts to hostilities without first submitting its grievances to conciliation or arbitration by laying an embargo on the export of arms, munitions, and implements of war, may be regarded as a logical development of the Kellogg treaty. The United States, along with the other signatories to the pact, has renounced war as an instrument of national policy. But the Kellogg treaty provides no penalties for an aggressor nation. It does not even define aggressive warfare.

The difficulty with the Capper resolution, as with most efforts to concretely state conditions bearing upon war which recognizes no law, is to define internationally just what is an "aggressor" nation. The permissive character of the Capper resolution, which would allow the President to ban the export of munitions if, in his opinion, some government had flouted the Kellogg pact, might be regarded as a saving grace, and yet this seems to provide nothing which Congress and the Executive may not do when the occasion arises.

If the nations are sincere in their desire to abolish this most horrible survival of savagery, however, it would seem that the Capper resolution furnishes them a test of their sincerity. If they are anxious to renounce war, they should not hesitate to assume the moral obligation involved in such a renunciation. That is, to withhold support or encouragement to the nation that resorts to war, to cut off its supplies of arms and munitions and implements of war.

While such a happy fruition can not be expected immediately, the mind of the peace-loving world is looking in that direction and some day the international mind may reach that stage of development—after another devastating world war, perhaps—when it will be willing to reinforce a beautiful gesture toward peace with a practical and effective means to penalize violations of it.

TEETH FOR THE KELLOGG PACT

What will happen if one of the governments which signed the Kellogg antiwar treaty violates its provisions? Or will nothing happen at all?

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has attempted to provide an answer to this question. He has introduced into the Senate a resolution which authorizes the President to forbid the exportation of munitions or implements of war to any nation which breaks the treaty, and which declares that citizens of the United States shall not be protected in giving aid or comfort to an aggressor nation.

The Capper resolution seems to be a logical and moderate measure to increase the moral validity of the Kellogg pact. It does not pledge this Nation to act by force of arms in any manner; in fact, it does not pledge this Nation definitely to any course of action at all.

It merely provides that in a clear case, where there has been a wanton violation of the peace of the world, the President of the United States may act to prevent the citizens of the United States from giving aid to the disturber of the peace.

[From the Chicago (Ill.) News]

It is not likely that the United States Senate will find time either before March 4 or during the coming special session of the new Congress to take action on the resolution just offered by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas. However, the resolution merits full consideration. President Coolidge has indicated very moderate approval of its purpose. Senator BORAH, however, is opposed to it.

It proposes steps by the United States and the other nations that have ratified or intend to ratify the Kellogg antiwar treaty to increase still further the world's security against war. Any violator of the war-renunciation pact, according to the resolution, would be denied economic aid, direct or indirect, by the faithful signatories of the same instrument. No munitions, arms, or other articles used in warfare could be shipped lawfully to the treaty-breaking nation by the citizens of those signatories. Nationals who persisted in giving assistance to the offending nation would receive no protection from their government diplomatically or otherwise.

It is certain that the moral sentiment of the world will oppose the giving of aid by signatories of the Kellogg treaty to a willful violator of that war-renouncing instrument. Such a course would be wholly inconsistent with the spirit of the treaty. But the question of giving that pact economic or other sanctions is not urgent. The Capper resolution should be regarded at this time as merely a tentative proposal entitled to fair and candid discussion. There are objections to the proposal that can not be lightly waived aside. Under it, for example, the President of the United States would have to decide which warring nation was the aggressor. Manifestly such a responsibility might prove both burdensome and embarrassing, to say the least.

[From the Auburn (N. Y.) Advertiser-Journal]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

Announcement of Senator ARTHUR CAPPER'S resolution for putting teeth in the Kellogg treaty has created a sensation both in Europe and in the United States. That it is foredoomed to failure does not mean that it is negligible, for it has pointed the way to bolstering up our guaranties of peace. The gist of the Capper resolution is embodied in two paragraphs immediately following the list of "whereases," namely:

"That whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamations of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues.

"It is declared to be the policy of the United States that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty."

Undoubtedly this would be a powerful weapon if adopted by the United States. The league also has certain sanctions, among them economic blockade; but the fear has always been that if applied, the United States would immediately proceed to reap the benefits of the lost trade by dealing with the offender. The Capper resolution would eliminate this possibility and make possible a united front against violators of the multilateral treaty.

There is, however, one cogent argument against the adoption of this resolution in its present form, and that is the responsibility placed upon the President to determine which warring party is the aggressor and hence the violator. As many of the Senators are pointing out, such an act by the President might easily be construed as hostile by the nation involved and lead to war with the United States.

On the other hand, it should be possible to keep intact the principle of the Capper resolution without leaving to the President alone the important decision of designating the violator nation. If Congress, for instance, were well aware of the rights of the case, and if the league on its side were willing to establish its economic blockade, it would make little difference how such a nation interpreted our act. Indeed, it would be to its advantage not to draw the United States into the struggle.

By the same token it would be highly inadvisable to refuse supplies to one nation and give them to another if there were any question as to which was the aggressor. As a matter of fact, it is not likely that a crisis would often be precipitated if the United States should adopt the Capper resolution. It would be a tremendous deterrent to violation of the peace treaties.

The alternative suggested by some Members of Congress that munitions be denied both parties at war leaves much to be desired. That would be guaranteeing, for example, a strong nation free hand in dealing with a weaker nation. Since both would be deprived of war supplies from the United States, naturally, the stronger nation could get along with its own resources more easily than the weaker, and the United States would be playing directly into the hands of the aggressor.

Senator CAPPER has at least directed attention to the possibility of following up our peace declarations with some form of legislation that will make the pledges more effective. This can be done without resort to force simply by negation in the matter of providing materials with which to fight. The European nations are eager for some declaration like this on the part of the United States, for it would permit them to apply the league sanctions without fear America would take unfair advantage of this situation.

PEACE AND THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

The most promising aspect of the Capper Senate resolution to authorize munitions and economic boycott against any nation violating the Kellogg antiwar pact is the public attention it is receiving.

Last year a similar resolution introduced by THEODORE E. BURTON, then a Representative, aimed at warring nations. It was almost completely ignored. Here is quick proof that the Kellogg treaty discussion and ratification have stimulated America's sense of responsibility for world peace.

We are in sympathy with the purpose of the Capper resolution.

We believe that the moral weight of the United States should be thrown against nations which break the peace. That is the intent of the Kellogg pact. But America's moral influence in such a crisis would be nullified if that outlawed foreign war were fought with American munitions and supplies. And this is the missing link in the American outlawry-of-war chain which the Capper resolution aims to supply.

The actual text of the Capper resolution seems to us unclear on some points and evasive on others. But that is not important at the moment, because CAPPER'S idea now is simply to start a general discussion as a background for intelligent handling of the question by Congress next winter.

Opposition of the BORAH isolationist group on the one side and of the militarists on the other has been accorded similar proposals in the past, and doubtless will be concentrated against the new resolution.

There probably will be a hue and cry that the proposed move would "take us into the League of Nations through the back door." That is nonsense.

Soon or late the United States must face the facts of modern warfare—that there can be no war without affecting this country's world interests, that old concepts of neutrality are meaningless in an age which necessarily distinguishes between "private" and "public wars," and that traditional definitions of contraband can not apply to modern wars which involve civilian populations and which are determined mainly by economic weapons.

The Capper resolution is evidence that America is beginning belatedly to face this problem which other nations, through the League of Nations, have been facing for a decade. But the League of Nations is not the cause of that problem. Neither is the League of Nations the American solution proposed by CAPPER.

His resolution would empower the President, unless otherwise provided by Congress, to determine the violator of the Kellogg pact and to apply an American boycott against the offender. Certainly that is quite different from allowing the league or the league council to determine American action.

A second important difference between this American proposal and the league and Locarno provisions for so-called sanctions against an offender is that the latter include use of military and naval force.

The present international situation is paradoxical and dangerous because the United States, which on paper has outlawed aggressive war, is in a position to prevent league nations from suppressing an aggressive war.

Indeed, we are in a position now to furnish the arms and supplies to a nation violating our Kellogg treaty, and then go to war ourselves against league nations whose blockade against the aggressor interferes with our "freedom" to aid the outlaw. Here is one cause of the Anglo-American disagreement over sea law and the new cruiser rivalry.

This issue is fundamental. It will not be settled in a day. The solution probably will not be in the exact form of the Capper Senate resolution, or of the similar Porter resolution introduced in the House. But that the solution will be along the general lines of these resolutions, we do not doubt.

Meanwhile, this issue deserves the best thought of the American people.

[From the Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

In connection with the introduction of his resolution in the Senate, Senator CAPPER stated that he wanted to start a discussion of its merits. He didn't expect action on it at this session of Congress, but he wanted to get the talk started. In that respect there is no question but what he is succeeding. He is finding, as he probably expected, that there are those who favor such a move and those who oppose it. He is finding those who will help to push such legislation along as well as those who will oppose it, and out of the discussion he should get many valuable suggestions that may have an influence in shaping such a measure as will actually come up for action, if it really gets that far.

Attention is being directed to the fact that little would be accomplished if only one country should take such a stand. It might be possible for one country to set out to penalize another for any infraction of the treaty denouncing war and have it amount to no more than the snap of the finger unless it was joined by others in such action. Let a country be declared guilty and the denial of war supplies ordered, but no great handicap would be experienced by the warring nation if a neighbor was willing to supply all the war material that was required. The country that would be trying to punish the backslider would be living up to its requirements, but the object of its legislation would be frustrated by the acts of one or more of the nations which had not agreed to the penalization.

Thus unless there was a general agreement along such a line on the part of the nations little could be accomplished, and there is serious doubt whether any one nation would be willing to take a lead in such legislation prior to a common understanding.

Senator CAPPER has put forth his plan in such a manner as to bring out both the good and bad points, and by the time Congress is disposed to give it serious consideration he may be prepared to remodel it in several respects. In the meantime, the Senator from Kansas is going to have an opportunity to fill a large-sized scrapbook with the opinions expressed concerning it.

WHERE THE KELLOGG TREATY LEADS

An embargo on export of arms to a nation that violates the Kellogg pact would silence those cynics, American as well as European, who taunt the United States with hypocrisy in initiating and concluding that treaty. Further, Senator CAPPER'S resolution providing that the President shall issue a proclamation when he finds that a nation has violated the treaty and that export of any war material to that nation shall thereupon be unlawful would bind this Nation to the only logical course, to do the least it could do if the treaty is to be more than a pious resolution. As the example of the United States would doubtless be followed by other great powers, which would also be the greatest arms-producing powers, the embargo would mean almost certain defeat for a nation that was not economically self-sufficient, and even the richest in natural resources is not self-sufficient.

But there are grave implications in an embargo which must be accepted if that measure should be adopted. The President would first decide which of two or more warring nations was the aggressor. That decision would make the United States the champion of one party against the other. It would come from the nation that has the greatest capacity to supply war material and capital and that is most disinterested in the quarrels of other nations. Therefore the judgment of the United States would in all probability be adopted by other nations and lead them to join in the embargo, especially as the rendering of that judgment would doubtless be preceded by an exchange of views leading to concerted action. The United States would thus become the arbiter in quarrels of other nations.

Experience in the World War teaches that wars are seldom duels between two nations; they are fought between groups of nations. Even the Russo-Japanese War was confined to two powers by the British-Japanese alliance which imposed neutrality on all other nations by threatening British intervention on the side of Japan. Possible causes of war are most numerous in Europe, the nations of which are so closely related in alliances, racial feuds and sympathies, and economic interests that war between any two of them would draw in others on each side. Any one nation, knowing the probable penalty of violating the Kellogg pact, would be mad to make war without powerful allies. Then judgment as to which was the aggressor would have to extend to all the belligerents, each of which might have defenders among the neutral powers.

Decision as to which of two warring nations is the aggressor is not simple. Bismarck made several aggressive wars, but he usually contrived that the nation to be attacked should strike the first blow or should declare war. The ex-kaiser still protests that Germany fought the World War in self-defense, Austria accuses Serbia of aggression through harboring conspirators. Red Russia attacked Poland on the White Russian frontier, but when Poland made a counterstroke at Kieff, Trotzky cried: "Aggression." The Kellogg treaty binds the nations to settle disputes by pacific means, thus branding as an outlaw any nation that makes war without resort to such means. But an agreement on some pacific means and on the manner of application would be necessary. There might be a deadlock as to the manner of arbitration, conciliation, or mediation, pending which hostilities might break out. Then each might accuse the other of being the aggressor, and the United States would have to decide which was guilty in order to know to which to apply the embargo.

The purpose of the United States in its program to outlaw war can be accomplished only by imposing penalties on nations that make war for causes other than self-defense, but that involves consideration by our statesmen of the merits of quarrels ending in such wars. When that is done we become entangled in the affairs of other nations, chiefly those of Europe, the breeding ground of war. It was to avoid just such entanglement that we held aloof from the League of Nations. Almost all signatories of the Kellogg treaty are also members of the league, and any of them which violated the treaty would also violate the league covenant. At the same time that the United States was considering the question of guilt with a view to apply the embargo, the league would be considering the same question with a view to applying the sanctions of the covenant. The term "pacific means" used in article 2 of the Kellogg treaty broadly covers the entire ground of those articles in the covenant that bind league members to settle disputes by arbitration, conciliation, mediation, or appeal to the World Court. League members are bound to participate in coercive measures against a covenant-breaking nation, ranging from nonintercourse to actual war. The Kellogg treaty binds its signatories to no such action, but an outlaw nation is to "be denied the benefits furnished by this treaty"—and that is, renunciation of war by the other signatories so far as it is concerned.

Senator CAPPER proposes the first step in using the same means for enforcement of the Kellogg treaty as the league provides for use against a nation that breaks the covenant. Though the United States might go no farther along the track marked by the league, it would have to begin by doing as the league would do—declaring a certain nation an outlaw. It could hardly avoid acting in concert either with the league or with its principal members. That would involve consideration of the merits of the quarrel that make a nation an outlaw and, if the case were clear, reaching the same conclusion. The United States might be content with an embargo on arms, but that would lead to joint action with other powers. Public opinion might drive the Government to more severe means against a flagrant offender—means as severe as those to which the league resorted—in which full cooperation would be the logical result.

All of the Senators who voted against the Versailles treaty remaining in office voted for the Kellogg treaty, confident that it does not entangle the United States with Europe or the league. They were right as to its exact terms. It expresses a purpose, fulfillment of which depends on growth of a public opinion against war among all nations until it attains such power that it will compel the governments to execute that purpose. That public opinion is already most powerful in the United States, and it will support the Capper resolution. It will support other measures going further to place sanctions behind the treaty. Then it may be that the treaty will become the framework on which a new league covenant will be built, more simple but more effective than that of Geneva for the reason that it will be the work of all nations made in time of peace, not of the victorious nations only at the close of war.

[From the Grand Forks (N. Dak.) Herald]

DEVELOPING THE PEACE IDEA

Senator CAPPER has proposed a resolution intended to aid in giving practical effect to the basic policy set forth in the Kellogg peace pact. The essential features of the resolution are contained in these paragraphs:

"That whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues.

"SEC. 2. It is declared to be the policy of the United States that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty."

This resolution has attracted attention and prompted comment on both sides of the Atlantic. Practically all of the comment has been favorable to the purpose of the resolution, although those who have spoken are as a rule reluctant to commit themselves definitely and on short notice to the precise provision of the resolution. Such a resolution is too important to be adopted offhand. It touches on national rights which have been held to be of the highest importance, and these can not be disposed of without due consideration. But the really interesting thing is that the resolution is the direct outgrowth of the multilateral peace treaty, and that its spirit and purpose are warmly commended by men occupying responsible positions as in keeping with the Kellogg treaty. There is general recognition that, the Kellogg treaty having been adopted, means must be found to give its provisions practical effect, and there is evidence of an earnest desire that the next necessary step shall be taken, if not in the exact form of the Kellogg resolution, then in some other form.

The Kellogg treaty has been regarded with considerable cynicism as a mere gesture which can have no practical effect. But already it is having the practical effect of turning men's minds toward further effort to insure peace and make it permanent.

Sometimes the solemn declaration of devotion to an ideal is more practical than the cynics suppose.

[From the Brooklyn Eagle]

BALKING AT REALITIES

The chorus of approval greeting the Capper resolution is promptly interrupted by discordant notes. Charges are made that the resolution would entangle us in foreign disputes; that to realize Mr. CAPPER'S purpose would make us virtually a member of the League of Nations; that we would be at least morally bound to follow that suspect organization if it attempted to impose the economic blockade upon an offending and stubborn belligerent. * * *

Mr. BORAH is not alone among the friends of the Kellogg treaty who fear steps designed to give that document positive force. They cling to the idea that it is dangerous for this country to go beyond the simple assertion of the moral obligation that the treaty imposes. They see, or think they see, a distinction between the exercise of the embargo power as we have applied it in the past in respect of factional quarrels in Latin America and its use against some European belligerent who, in our judgment, might violate its pledge under the Kellogg treaty. There is no essential difference in principle between the two courses of action. The Capper resolution would not embroil us in hostilities. Action under it would simply deny to our nationals the privilege of trading with a country that embarked upon what we would consider to be aggressive war.

Mr. CAPPER'S proposal is an honest attempt to put some authority behind the implications of the Kellogg treaty. We now have the alternatives regarding that compact as something which may be repudiated at will with no penalty attached to repudiation or as something with a background of real power that can be invoked to make our opinion effective. Those supporters of the treaty who, like Mr. BORAH, are now balking at realities should explain precisely why they fear this contemplated sanction; they should point out how suspension of trade in a war crisis should involve us in belligerency. If they can not establish their case in this single respect it falls to the ground.

To contend that action under the resolution would make us virtually a partner with the League of Nations by adopting as our own one of the sanctions of its covenant is beside the mark. We do not become a member of the league by accepting a league method, nor do we bind ourselves to apply that method in any or every case where the league might choose to apply it. We are assured of full liberty and independence of action under the Capper resolution. It does not propose to tie us up with other nations.

Mr. CAPPER and those who are with him may fail of their purpose. But they have projected into the sphere of public discussion an idea distinctly worth while. Of course, nothing will or can be done about the resolution at this session. The time is too short. But it has a sufficient volume of public opinion behind it to insure full debate when the new Congress shall assemble. It is not something that can well be pigeonholed in committee.

[From the Camden (N. J.) Evening Courier]

ALSO TOO LOGICAL TO SUCCEED

Little hope dare be held for success in Congress of the Capper and Porter resolutions, which would back up the antiwar treaty by shutting off United States resources and banning exportation of arms and munitions from this country to any other nation violating the Kellogg pact.

Of course, these proposals are logical. They are vastly sensible. But, like the recent proposal to draft Congressmen for front-line work in any future war, such schemes are too logical to succeed.

They would take the profit out of war. And that would abolish war. With recollections of profits in the late conflict, war means boom business to certain folks.

Another highly logical proposal would be to draft, just as soldiers are drafted, all munitions plants, shipyards, or any other private industry needed in conduct of war and pay all the officers and workers on a $30 a month scale, the same as the boys in the trenches were paid.

Of course, such a procedure might wreak havoc with the drafted industries in the matter of profits, but are those gentry any better to sacrifice their profits than our citizens are to sacrifice their lives?

It would be a step toward peace more powerful and significant than the antiwar treaty itself of these Capper and Porter resolutions were approved. But we are skeptical that our solons ever will get to the point of acting to safeguard peace when it is so much easier to sign papers and thus wash official hands of the matter in the manner of one Pontius Pilate.

[From the Meriden (Conn.) Record]

POST CRUISER RESOLUTIONS

President Coolidge's signature to the cruiser bill evidences his belief that the undertaking can be financed without seriously unbalancing the Budget.

With the cruisers an assurred fact, interest centers on the resolutions offered by Senator CAPPER and Representative PORTER to put teeth into the Paris pact.

The Kellogg treaty has been called by many a beautiful gesture. They have approved the effort but feared that something more than honor must be involved to prevent war.

It will be recalled that when the pact was signed, M. Briand declared peace had not been achieved but that a foundation had been created upon which peace might be erected.

Senator CAPPER evidently wants to create the first story on the Kellogg foundation. In his resolution he proposes that if the Paris pact should be violated the President shall have the power to determine and announce which country the violator may be.

Thereupon, it should be decreed that "it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

The resolution also provides "that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach."

If Senator CAPPER'S idea should go through, America would be committed not to supply nations breaking the peace and that would make us parties to any economic blockade. It is also pointed out that we would hardly be expected to use our Navy to enforce rights to carry on a trade we had declared illegal.

It will be recalled that Sir Austen Chamberlain stated in the House of Commons that the Kellogg treaty would be important or unimportant as a factor in world relations depending on whether or not the American people got behind it.

If the Capper resolution were adopted it would be regarded as a real disposition to get back of the treaty.

Hardly had Congress gotten over the surprise of the Capper resolution when Representative STEPHEN G. PORTER, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, introduced a resolution going one step further than Senator CAPPER.

Representative PORTER'S resolution, whose preamble recites that it is intended to apply to violators of the multilateral pact, would give the President the much broader authority to declare that it shall be unlawful to export munitions of war to "any country" where "conditions of domestic violence or of international conflict exist or are threatened."

Senator CAPPER'S resolution has been hailed abroad as a potent aid in making the Paris pact effective.

It is argued that the adoption of such a policy would greatly change the rights of neutrals. A writer in Le Matin is quoted as saying:

"If a country which might be planning a war knew that it could expect neither from the United States nor from any other power any sort of economic aid, and that the citizens of all countries who might help it would be acting illegally and would not have the support of their governments, it is probable that the country would think twice before embarking on such a perilous undertaking."

Senator CAPPER is quoted as saying he did not expect action on his resolution in the present Congress. He merely wished to present the idea, giving Congress and the general public time to consider the resolution and come to a conclusion.

Judging by the favorable comment heard in this country and abroad, the Capper resolution will provide enough food for thought to occupy Congress for a time when it reassembles.

[From the Arkansas City (Kans.) Traveler]

CAPPER'S RESOLUTION

If adopted and strictly enforced, the Capper resolution to prevent American munitions concerns from selling armament to foreign powers would probably be as long a stride toward world peace as the Kellogg pact. It has long been one of the ugliest scandals of the Western Hemisphere that the perennial bushwhacking in Mexico and Central American Republics is done chiefly with weapons made in the United States. But the Capper resolution is due for a rough time of it. The manufacturers of munitions have always had a great deal of influence in the high places.

[From the New York World]

The Chicago Tribune, as spokesman for the old "irreconcilables," hastens to expound what may be called the plot theory of the Capper resolution. A special article pronounces it the work of the "pro-Leaguers." They did not press their views in the Senate debate, according to the Tribune, for they feared this would defeat the Kellogg pact. But now, "with the ink on the pact scarcely dry," they unmask their plan. * * *

This naïve view overlooks, we believe, the entire history of Senator CAPPER'S idea. Far from being sprung suddenly on anyone, it was contained in his conception of the Kellogg pact from the beginning. M. Briand made his original proposal on April 6, 1927. The next step by any legislator was taken by Senator CAPPER on November 21, 1927, when he offered his first Senate resolution. This declared (1) for the renunciation of war and the adjustment of all disputes by mediation, conciliation, or arbitration. It offered (2) a formal definition of an aggressor nation as one which, having agreed to submit disputes to arbitration, conciliation, or judicial settlement, began hostilities without doing so. It declared (3) that no nationals should be protected by their government "in giving aid and comfort to an aggressor nation." The intent of all this was plain. An aggressor nation would be self-convicted by its failure to seek the agencies of peace; and the other signatory nations would refuse aid to it, even to the extent of declining to protect their ships or sailors or other agents furnishing it supplies.

The final text of the Kellogg pact is far less explicit; but many of its advocates have believed that nearly as much is implicit in it. It defines aggression and aggressor, as one interpreter has said, without definition. That is, Article II declares that the high contracting parties agree that the settlement of disputes of whatever nature or origin "shall never be sought except by pacific means." If this means anything, it means that any signatory which begins a war without trying "pacific means" is ipso facto an aggressor. But how can such a nation be dealt with? Here the significant phrase of the pact is found in the preamble. It is there stated that "any signatory power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interests by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this treaty." If this means anything, it means that the aggressor nation is denied a friendly status by the other signatories. Unquestionably, with so much merely implied in the pact, the development of our national policy would depend greatly on circumstances. But even under this vague wording our course could hardly be doubtful in any case so clear cut as, say, Austria's attack on Serbia when Serbia was eager for arbitration. Mr. BORAH has himself said so. He said on March 25, 1928, in a passage repeatedly quoted since, that "it is quite inconceivable that this country would stand idly by in case of a grave breach of a multilateral treaty to which it is a party." Mr. CAPPER merely wishes to make more explicit what he and others have all along regarded as implicit in the pact.

There are two conceptions of war. In the old view war is the business only of the two nations engaged. This was the view of the Central Powers when Austria attacked Serbia, and Germany warned "Hands off." In this view, if any other nation interferes it must prove that it has some specific interest in the controversy. The new view is radically different. According to it, war is now a catastrophe in which every nation is interested and to which it has a right to object. Under municipal law, every affray between two citizens involves the rights of the neighbors. Their safety requires a restraint upon violence. The development of this restraint has abolished feudal warfare, dueling, and free private assassination. We are now transferring this attitude from the municipal to the international sphere. We assert that every country has its rightful interests threatened by a war between any other countries, and that it is interested in preventing war and in limiting it or stopping it when once it is begun. The Kellogg pact would hardly be worth while if it constituted merely a pledge against aggression, without any guarantees, and a promise to seek substitutes for war, without any provision of substitutes. The Capper group regard the pact as a more positive expression of the new attitude toward war.

There is no sudden plot. The Capper plan, in its general outlines, has been in view from the beginning. The procedure of those interested in peace is to take one step at a time—but not to stop with the first step.

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION AND EUROPE

Senator CAPPER's resolution authorizing the President to forbid the export of arms and implements of war to an aggressor nation may meet with very considerable opposition in the Senate of the United States. It may be a long time before it is enacted into law. But whatever its prospects of success, there is no doubt whatsoever that a large section—indeed, a preponderant section—of European opinion believes that its adoption would be the greatest step toward peace that could now be taken.

There are many persons in this country who do not believe in "sanctions," who do not believe that it is practicable or desirable to provide for common action against a law-breaking state. But there are very few thoughtful students of international affairs in Europe who would take the same view. European thought has progressed to the point where police measures against a lawbreaker seems logical and natural.

This in itself is an extremely important fact. The question of the maintenance of world peace is not a theoretical question. It is a highly practical question. It must be solved with full regard to the facts, to the psychological elements involved. If Europeans believe that international stability will be enormously promoted by such a resolution as Senator CAPPER'S, then, whatever the theories individual Americans may hold, there is an obvious helpfulness in enacting such a resolution into law. Nor is it apparent that any risks are involved or that embarrassing obligations are assumed by the careful language of the measure in question.

The promotion of peace depends upon concerted effort. And when the principles of concerted action have been discovered we shall be in the way of realizing the end in view. The reception of the Capper resolution abroad affords ample evidence that it may furnish the basis for common action for the maintenance of international accord.

[From the Los Angeles (Calif.) Times]

CAPPER'S PEACE PLAN

Senator CAPPER of Kansas, borrowing a leaf from the book of the League of Nations, proposes that the United States declare an arms embargo against any nation which may violate the multilateral treaty outlawing war, known as the Kellogg-Briand pact. By the terms of a resolution which he will introduce in the Senate, the President would be empowered, on a finding that any signatory of the pact has begun hostilities in contravention of its provisions, to declare commercial nonintercourse with the offender. In his view this would not only stop any war that might start, but would tend to prevent any from getting under way, on the theory that the United States is the principal dependable source of the sinews of war, and that the nation to which our markets are closed would necessarily be hopelessly beaten.

This probably would be true were the nations evenly matched; but it is doubtful if our action or influence alone would or could prevent a large nation from trampling upon a small one. Were the Capper principle to be given as wide adoption as the Kellogg-Briand pact itself, however, there would be a very different state of affairs. No nation, except perhaps, the United States itself, is now strong enough to be independent in the matter of war supplies.

As a proposal for discussion—which, to be sure, is all Senator CAPPER calls his idea at present—this resolution is admirable, and out of it may come some practical plan which will "put teeth" in the Kellogg pact. But if the Capper plan has great advantages, apparent without discussion, it also has some drawbacks which are not so obvious and which need to be considered carefully, among them that it would require a restatement of one principle of international law which was not challenged anywhere before the World War and which, so far as we are concerned, must still be regarded as binding.

That is that any belligerent may buy freely in any neutral market that it can reach, and that the closing of such market is to be regarded as an act of war. In other words, if a neutral sells to one belligerent it must also sell to any other, or forfeit a neutral status.

In the present status of international law, therefore, the issuing of an embargo proclamation by the President, applying to one nation or one set of allies alone, would immediately involve this country in the conflict, if the nation ruled against chose to take such action.

For members of the League of Nations the rule has been set aside, in part, since the legality of commercial embargoes is not only established by the covenant, but members are bound to carry them out when ordered by the League. But here is international action preceded by international judgment. The Capper resolution would, in effect, make the President a "1-man league," giving him the powers of the council and assembly of that body—powers more tremendous than ever have been placed in the hands of any Chief Executive even in time of war.

This objection is not insuperable; it could be overcome by international agreement declaring a unilateral embargo not a breach of neutrality. Whether the league members would accede to such an agreement remains a question, in view of their obligations to the league and the league requirement that embargoes be undertaken by joint action.

Senator CAPPER has opened up a fertile field and the resultant debate will be extremely interesting, whether or not it is fruitful.

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Public Ledger]

TRYING TO PUT "TEETH" IN THE KELLOGG PACT

Senator CAPPER'S joint resolution, laid before the Senate yesterday, is a move to put into the Kellogg pact just those "teeth" which Secretary Kellogg, along with President Coolidge and Senator BORAH deemed it essential to leave out. It also has a direct bearing upon the Borah-Reed amendment to the cruiser bill calling for treaties to settle the "freedom-of-the-seas" issue.

Senator CAPPER would have Congress declare it unlawful for Americans to export war supplies to a Kellogg-treaty violator and would have the Government give no protection to traders even in noncontraband goods giving aid and comfort to the violator. It is plain that the "freedom-of-the-seas" doctrine is here directly involved.

The attempts to approach this great issue are interesting. But all are tentative and looking toward a future which may prove remote. Much ground must be cleared before a solution will be even vaguely visible. That the spade work is going on is to be taken as encouraging.

[From the Asheville (N. C.) Times]

TO ENFORCE THE PACT AGAINST WAR

Senator CAPPER'S resolution authorizing the President, subject to congressional action, to declare an economic boycott against any nation which he "determines" has violated the Kellogg-Briand treaty against war is a logical supplement to the pact itself.

In an explanatory statement the Senator says that his resolution "is simply to carry out the spirit of the Briand-Kellogg pact, to prevent conscienceless nations from making a profit out of aiding and abetting nations that violate the pact."

Aside from the practical difficulty of determining which of two nations has violated the treaty, the administration is thought to be opposed to taking this further forward step to international action against unjustifiable war. (The Capper resolution contemplates world action on the boycott.) But it was months after the original proposal by Foreign Minister Briand, of France, that the administration bestirred itself in behalf of the treaty renouncing wars waged for the advancement of national interests.

Public opinion played an important part in the negotiations which ended with the signing of the pact of Paris. If public opinion in this country takes up the cause for which Senator CAPPER leads the way, a virtual economic blockade may in the near future be added to the pact of Paris as its weapon of enforcement.

It will, no doubt, require more time for United States opinion to approve the Capper resolution than was required for the proposal renouncing war. For many, such support for the multilateral treaty will savor too much of the sanctions prescribed by the covenant of the League of Nations. But, if the nations propose to support their solemn resolutions against war by the material, though not forcible, expression of moral condemnation against international law breakers, the substance of the Capper resolution must at a not distant day take its place alongside the treaty for the renunciation of war.

Senator CAPPER was the first American in public life to take public action looking toward the drafting of the Kellogg-Briand treaty. He is now the first to propose the adoption of a reasonably penalty for the enforcement of the treaty.

There is little prospect that Senator CAPPER'S proposal will receive consideration in this congressional session. But as a principle profoundly affecting the whole issue of freedom of the seas in time of war, and therefore intimately related to the question of international competition in sea power, it is bound to receive the same thoughtful reflection in the United States that was given to the first proposal for the treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy.

[From the Dayton (Ohio) Daily News]

TEETH FOR PEACE

Having ratified the treaty pledging us to peace and then having passed the cruiser bill preparing for war, the Senate finds that there is no rest for the weary. Here comes Senator CAPPER with the next ante. The nations are agreeing to the pledge to seek settlement of their disputes by peaceful process. Senator CAPPER has heard the comment of the cynical that this is but a scrap of paper. No security has been given for the payment of this peace bond. The Kansas Senator now comes forward with a resolution for Congress to pass to stop that jeer.

What he proposes is that it be unlawful for any American to furnish arms to any country or government which is engaged in war in violation of the new treaty. Whenever the President decides that any nation is defying the treaty, he is to clap on an embargo against that country upon all manner of war supplies.

The resolution of Senator CAPPER takes up the peace problem just where the multilateral treaty laid it down. His resolution concedes that the outlawry of war is apt to be an empty effort unless ways are found to enforce the promises of peace. Senator CAPPER is now proceeding from the premise which produced the terrible "Article 10" of the League of Nations debate.

The proposal of the Kansas Senator should be pressed. Not that it is necessarily a practical way to approach the problem. The anti-war treaty is signed with the understanding that it permits defense against aggression. But what is defense, and what aggression? Those are hard questions to answer. Every fighting nation claims to be on the defensive. In making the President sole judge of the facts in such a case, Senator CAPPER puts upon a President a terrifying responsibility. But let the subject be debated. It is by the slow education produced by discussion of these intermediate steps toward peace that the minds of the people of the world, and especially of the United States, are to be adjusted to the practical measures by which alone Mars can be brought under control.

[From the Tulsa (Okla.) Tribune]

TEETH FOR PEACE PACT

Senator CAPPER'S resolution to authorize munitions and economic boycott, against any nation violating the Kellogg antiwar pact offers another opportunity for victory of the forces of peace over the jingoes and the munitions makers.

Without a law to carry out in effect the proposition offered by Senator CAPPER, we may at some time find ourselves in an untenable position. Should a cosigner of the Kellogg pact enter a war of aggression and purchase munitions from American manufacturers to wage the war, we would vitiate our own acceptance of the principles of the multilateral treaty. American munitions makers most assuredly would avail themselves of a chance to supply a ready market, without regard for treaties, so long as the United States Government would permit it. By permitting it our Government would be a party to the act.

Not only to sustain America's good faith in the Kellogg pact, but to protect ourselves against the possibilities of being thrown into the classification of an aggressor in a war upon which the rest of the world might frown, our Government should make it impossible for any American firm to supply a foreign power with arms for waging a war such as we have disavowed. It should be left to the discretion of the President or Congress at all times as to whether or not our munitions makers were justified to accept foreign trade.

The United States needs a law to accomplish the intent of the Capper resolution for these reasons, and for the impetus that would be given in the peace movement by such an obvious victory over the forces that cause war.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Times]

DISCUSSING THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

As has always been true the worst enemies of any important legislation looking to future reform are those who insist that its present form shall be perfect and infallible. Opponents of the Kellogg treaty condemned it as merely a beautiful gesture. They complained that lack of penalties made it impotent. They failed to see the importance of this gesture as preliminary to more effective guaranties of peace.

In regard to the Capper resolution there are those who insist that it is unnecessary. That the Kellogg treaty goes far enough. Others insist it is dangerous as threatening embroilment with European politics; that it gives too much power to the President, whose decision as to the aggressor nation may conflict with, say the World Court's decision as to the guilty party, with resultant confusion.

That nations will keep the peace merely because they are signatories to a renunciation of war hardly deserves refuting. The Kellogg pact will hardly serve its purpose as a mere gesture. It must lead the way to more practical and effective means of insuring peace.

The Capper resolution is intended to go a step further than the pact. It may be too altruistic. Grant that certain of its provisions look dangerous. War is infinitely more so, and in the process of experiment the dangerous elements may be eliminated. To be effective, of course, a munitions embargo must be adhered to by the principal munitions-making nations of the world.

The main difficulty with the Capper resolution is that it seems to put the cart before the horse. It first commits the United States to the policy that "the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty" and then requests that the President enter into negotiations with other governments which ratify or adhere to the Kellogg pact to do the same thing. To be effective the principal munitions-making nations must first enter into a general treaty not to give aid by supplying munitions of war to "aggressor" nations, else the United States shuts itself off from trade with the warring nations without any compensating advantages in behalf of world peace. At the same time it would become prey to a variety of world complications. To be effective there must be a concerted movement of the nations to withhold aid and munitions from nations which violate the pact.

The Briand-Kellogg pact has not defined an "agressor nation," nor does it provide any penalty or prevent trading with such nations. The United States has frequently reiterated, ever since the War of 1812, its declaration of the freedom of the seas, and only last week the Senate adopted an amendment to the cruiser bill calling for broad reestablishment of American neutral rights, including the right to trade with belligerents. This took into consideration no question of whether the combatants were "aggressor nations" under the pact or not. First there must be a world treaty definition of what constitutes an "aggressor" or a violator of the pact obligation, for in all wars the combatants have always loudly proclaimed that they were fighting only a "defensive" war, and wars of defense are not banned by the pact. When the nation or nations which violate the pact may be determined, then the treaty nations may consistently provide for withholding aid and munitions from such aggressors, and, unless those nations are self-supporting and can supply their own war equipment, their war activities may be checked.

The important thing is that nations may be made to realize they can not threaten the peace of the world with impunity. That they can not resort to hostilities without first submitting their grievances to conciliation or arbitration. Fundamentally the Capper resolution is a test of the nations' sincerity in their desire to abolish war. There is a distinct moral obligation involved in a renunciation of war; that is, to withhold support or encouragement to the nation that resorts to war without first exhausting every possible means of retaining peace.

Perhaps the Capper resolution is "dangerous" in its present form. Perhaps it goes too far. It will, however, serve the great purpose of focusing public discussion upon its central purpose; that is, to provide some means, not now provided by the Kellogg treaty, of penalizing the nation that resorts to hostilities without first submitting its grievances to conciliation or arbitration by an embargo on arms, munitions, and implements of war.

[From the Abilene (Kans.) Reflector]

Senator CAPPER'S plan to have this country refuse to sell arms to any nation that has signed the peace pact has elements of good sense. It might be better to refuse to sell arms to any country at any time and would go further than any treaty to halt the war mania.

[From the Trenton (N. J.) Gazette]

TEETH FOR THE PEACE PACT

Senator CAPPER'S proposal to support the Kellogg multilateral treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy, with a trade embargo on violators of its provisions, is both sound and logical. While ratification of this treaty was pending in the Senate its opponents condemned it as a gesture possessing none but a moral significance. Basis for such a criticism would be eliminated through the enactment of a law fulfilling the purpose which Senator CAPPER proposes.

The United States, joining with others of the larger nations of the world, has renounced war as an instrument of national policy. It has pledged itself through the Kellogg treaty to the adjustment and settlement of its international disputes through mediation or arbitration to the end that war may be honorably avoided. Senator CAPPER proposes that this country and the others that are parties to the treaty shall go even further than this.

He suggests that whenever the President determines that any country has violated the treaty for the renunciation of war it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, "to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war, until the President, by proclamation, declares that such violation no longer continues."

Such a law represents a logical sequence to the presentation of the antiwar pact by America to the world. It would be an important step along the path of peace, one that would give substance and power to that vital document which is so eloquently expressive of a great ideal. It would provide the teeth which the Kellogg treaty now lacks and will deprive the cynics of their only talking point.

Full effectiveness of the embargo plan would, of course, be dependent upon the cooperation of the other nations that are parties to the Kellogg treaty. There are substantial reasons, however, for the belief that they would be sympathetic and even enthusiastic in their reception of the proposal. Europe, it must be conceded, proceeds with greater readiness and initiative than does the United States in movements having the maintenance of permanent peace as their objective. Locarno and Geneva offer impressive evidence of Europe's practical interest in the cause of permanent peace, a cause which is made of transcendant importance by the presence of millions of the war's dead in the soil of Europe.

Senator CAPPER, through his resolution in the Senate to enforce world peace, has given to the United States a great purpose whose fulfillment will bring closer to reality the dream of permanent peace among nations.

[From the Nashville (Tenn.) Tennesseean]

ANOTHER PEACE MOVE

If the resolution presented to the Senate by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, is passed, the United States will give notice to the world that in the event of a violation of the Kellogg-Briand peace pact it will declare an economic boycott against the offending nation or nations. The multilateral peace treaty contains in itself no means of its enforcement. It is nothing more than a solemn pledge to renounce war. It provides no penalties and makes no provisions for its enforcement. It is little more than an appeal to the conscience of mankind.

The Capper resolution would unquestionably give additional force to the peace pact. In the event that any nation signatory to that treaty should go to war, then the President would be empowered by proclamation to forbid the sale or shipment to it by nationals of the United States of war armaments, munitions, or supplies. This would unquestionably constitute a powerful and persuasive weapon. The protection of the United States would be withdrawn from its nationals who violated the terms of the President's proclamations. Since this is the wealthiest and most resourceful Nation in the world this course would unquestionably greatly hamper belligerents in any future war.

Although Senator CAPPER has been an isolationist and an opponent of the League of Nations, the resolution which he proposes carries into effect one of the vital principles of the league. It has a provision against aggressive warfare and authorizes what is termed an economic boycott. It would be much more effective if the Senator would urge the United States to enter the league. In this way greater force and effect would be given to the treaty for the renunciation of war.

Unless other nations should adopt the same policy proposed for this country by the United States, the result might be a mere loss of trade to our nationals without any compensating influence on the conflict. If this principle should be embraced by a multilateral treaty and all the parties signatory to the Paris pact should agree to it, then it would have real force.

The trouble with many of our statesmen is that they are more sentimental than practical in their devotions to peace. They would have this Nation lead the world in the outlawry of war and yet they are unwilling for it to cooperate with those agencies that have been set up to provide substitutes for war. It would be so much more effective if instead of merely proposing resolutions and making noble gestures our country would become reconciled to the League of Nations and the World Court and use those agencies for the purpose for which they have been established.

It is not an easy matter to lead the world to peace when this Nation is apparently suspicious of all the tribunals that have been established to find a practical and effective means to escape from war. If the United States would assume some of the responsibilities that the other powers have assumed in the League of Nations and the court, it would speak with much greater authority. At the same time the Capper resolution, whether so intended or not, would bring America closer to international organization and cooperation.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Morning Record]

IS THIS RADICAL?

Senator CAPPER has introduced into Congress a bill permitting the President, in case of war, to refuse permission to ship arms to such nations involved in it as are signatories of the Kellogg treaty to outlaw war. Instantly there has developed opposition on two grounds. The first is the age-old objection of legislatures to executives that it would give too much power to the President. The second is that the plan is radical.

Is it radical?

Perhaps it is. But it is another question whether radical legislation is therefore wrong. If it is radical so was the Kellogg treaty—unless that pact was not intended to be taken seriously. To the rank and file in the United States that agreement was an honest effort to drive out of civilized society the terrible menace of armed strife. It was an attempt to make it hideous rather than glorious, to name it by its true name.

Then to the rank and file efforts to look upon it as a real step toward peace deserve the utmost sympathy, whether radical or not. Particularly is this so after following the treaty with the greatest Navy bill in the Nation's history. Americans do not want their nation to be looked upon as a hypocritical power, talking peace to the peace-lover and arming to the teeth for the comfort of the believer in war.

Senator CAPPER does not do a dangerous thing. All he asks is that the Kellogg treaty be made an enforceable pact. He does not ask that it become mandatory for arms to be withheld from combatants. He does seek permission for the President to withhold them if, in his opinion, the power from which they are withheld is an aggressor. In other words, when some government flouts the Kellogg treaty and public opinion in the United States realizes that it is going contrary to its pledged word, the United States can refuse to countenance that "scrap of paper" policy by refusing, even in a commercial way, to be a party to the fraud.

What, then, is the radical core to the Capper suggestion? It is this: That the Kellogg treaty is to be more than a gesture. It is to provide machinery in this country to make it easier for America to show its devotion to peace. It aims at putting the United States in a position where it can enforce the view which led it to propose this pact—at least, to enforce it so far as its own part is concerned.

The radicalism of the plan, therefore, consists merely in taking the agreement seriously—in making it possible for the United States to prove its faith by its works. It casts aside all evidences of pretence and deception, all the "cant" of fine words and falsehood, all the hypocrisy of the "sewed sleeve with a closed fist therein"; and it puts in its stead a frank insistence that peace means peace, pledges pledges, and the outlawry of war the absolute determination to leave no stone unturned to make that outlawry real.

If this be radicalism, make the most of it.

[From the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Citizen]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, presumably is not satisfied that in ratifying the Kellogg pact we have gone far enough in promoting the peace of the world. He has therefore prepared a resolution, which he proposes to introduce to-day, making it obligatory on this country to bar the sale of munitions or any other war equipment to any country which violates the multilateral treaties.

The resolution vests the President of the United States with the power to proclaim the guilty nation. Naturally, this resolution is hailed by all the sincere friends of the pact and the League of Nations as an advanced step, in so far as this country is concerned, in advocacy of the renunciation of war.

It is true that Germany was able to continue the war for four years without the aid or assistance of the munitions manufacturers of this country. But very few nations have reached the same scientific standard as Germany. France, likewise, was able to continue the war without buying munitions in this country. In fact, France, according to General Pershing, in addition to her own supply, was able to furnish the American Army with heavy guns. Both England and Russia depended largely on American munitions in the early stages of the war.

What probably would be even more effective as an economic blockade would be the cutting off of food supplies. Without American flour, most of the European countries, with the possible exception of Russia, would be without sufficient bread to feed their people. Germany suffered more from lack of food than she did from lack of munitions.

At any rate, the Capper resolution adds punch to the Kellogg pact and every sincere believer in the renunciation of war will hope that the Senate will adopt it.

[From the Atlantic City Press]

TINKLING TREATY CYMBALS

Washington dispatches indicate that President Coolidge, without having studied it, believes the Capper resolution proposing an arms embargo against nations engaged in aggressive war, to go further than is wise. A glance over wide editorial opinion on the subject indicates that this attitude coincides with the attitude of what may be termed strictly administration newspapers, whereas more or less independent opinion shows a trend of hearty accord with the sense and intent of the Capper resolution.

It is pointed out by the cautious that it would, in effect, set up the President of this country as a sort of umpire deciding which is not defensive war, a subject which is not defined by the Kellogg treaty itself. The implied intent to submit the proposal to other nations as well would relieve this country of any implication that it would seek to set up a unilateral interpretation or modification of the treaty, now multilateral in purport. Applied only to nations violating the spirit of the Paris pact—that is, to aggressor nations—even though the pact does not itself define the term, the Capper resolution would not seem to affect our right to deal with belligerents, as quasi reasserted in the cruiser bill.

But perhaps, prior to adoption of the resolution, the signatory powers including the United States might further demonstrate their sincerity by establishing the means through which "self-defense" may be recognized from "aggression," possibly through a majority opinion, if such opinion can be reached without coming to blows over it.

Without some such step and without some effective alternative as suggested in the Capper resolution, the "frank renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy" remains but sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

[From the Hartford Courant]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

When the pact of Paris renouncing war had been signed, M. Briand declared that peace had not been achieved but that a foundation had been created on which peace might be erected. It is the purpose of the resolution sponsored by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, to build a story on the substructure created by that pact. He proposes that the Senate and House adopt a resolution providing that whenever the war-renouncing pact is violated the President shall have the power to determine and proclaim which country the violator may be. Once this has been done "it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

He would also have Congress declare it to be our policy "that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach" of the pact of Paris. Senator CAPPER proposes again, that the President negotiate with other governments to secure agreement that their nationals shall not be protected in aiding a violator.

The final provision of the Capper resolution is that our policy of refusing to protect those who aid violators "shall apply only in case of a breach of the said treaty by war against a government which has declared its adherence to a similar policy."

On first sight this would seem to exclude but few of the principal powers, since most of them are members of the league, whose covenant, like the Capper resolution, provides for a boycott against an aggressor, and therefore apparently constitutes "a similar policy." Presumably, however, the resolution refers only to those governments which may establish "a similar policy" by special agreements with the United States. On this point, as well as on some others, the resolution is not clear.

That it will meet with opposition, both in part and as a whole, may be taken for granted. In its broad and general purpose, however, the resolution strikes us as praiseworthy. If nothing more influential can be ascribed to the pact of Paris than its moral effect, the Capper resolution would give the pact teeth. It advances far toward the solution of many problems which are now troublesome; for example, the problem of the freedom of the seas in war time. Without some such action the league will be reluctant to determine an aggressor and apply a boycott against it, since by so doing it might merely divert trade with the aggressor from its own members to the United States.

The Capper resolution deserves the most serious consideration. It was advanced at this time not in the hope that it would be adopted in the remaining weeks of the short session of Congress, or in the special session, but rather in the hope that it would be freely discussed and that opinions on it would crystallize before Congress convenes in its next regular session in December. In the discussion that will take place in the next several months the points of strength and weakness of the resolution should be clearly illuminated.

IN ANOTHER WAY

Senator CAPPER has brought things to a focus in his joint resolution, published on this page.

The Senator would have the United States say frankly and openly that we will not insist on our neutral rights to trade with a nation violating the Kellogg pact.

This is what the League of Nations has been trying to arrive at and the CAPPER move is hailed at Geneva as a bridge between the United States and the league. That will not help matters any in the Senate. But it will center attention on what is to-day standing in the way of world organization.

During the first two years of the World War before we entered, we had the rights of a neutral to trade with Germany. The British Navy interfered with that right, and for some months it looked much more likely that our war would be with Britain.

It was easy to understand the British motive, but it was easy to recognize our legal right. Since the war Britain has steadily refused to take on any commitment to enforce the authority of the League of Nations because the United States, not being a member, would have neutral rights of trade, and that would bring Britain and the United States again at the parting of the ways.

The Kellogg pact has come in to take the place of the league covenant and it will be easy for the United States to relieve the situation without officially recognizing the league.

By relinquishing our right of neutral trade where the Kellogg pact is broken we should, in effect, be relinquishing our right of neutral trade when the league covenant is broken. For it is the same peoples who are committed to both; we are the only ones on whom the Kellogg pact would be binding and not the league covenant.

The Capper resolution does put "teeth" in the Kellogg pact, the pact becomes something more than a benevolent wish for world order the moment it takes the right of neutral trade away from those who violate it. In these days without rights of trade even the biggest groups would soon be embarrassed. The smaller groups could not even make an effective start toward war.

Why should the United States stand out for the right to sell munitions in a revolt against the Kellogg pact, when we were the ones to propose the pact and to urge its acceptance? Ought we not to be the ones to urge that revolters against the pact be treated as outlaws?

Even though it would be an indirect recognition of the league and would powerfully intrench the league covenant, why should the United States not carry through on the Kellogg pact and make it mean just what it says? Why should we not serve notice that the group that breaks the Kellogg pact will by that act sever its trade relations with the United States?

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal]

PEACE WITH THE SINEWS OF WAR

President Coolidge's advocacy of the Kellogg peace pact takes a queer quirk in his recently announced opposition to the CAPPER resolution. According to the White House statement, some 30 nations of South and Central America have not yet ratified the multilateral treaty and will not do so if they see in it the withdrawal of the possibility of buying arms and ammunition from the United States and other countries. In other words, the President wants the Republics to the south to sign the pledge, even if the will for war is stronger than the will for peace. He does not wish to place any barriers in the way of either the Kellogg pact or a sizeable conflict. He is content with the simple declaration by the countries of the world that war has been renounced as an instrument of national policy.

In giving emphasis to this opinion, the President declares that the CAPPER resolution goes too far. It would place the United States in the position of passing on international conflicts. It would militate against small and weak nations which must go outside their own countries to buy munitions. And, it might be added, it would interfere with a lucrative trade that is often enjoyed by the United States.

But the trouble with the embargo plan is that it does not go far enough. It means that only the United States would apply restrictions on the sinews of war. It would leave the belligerent countries to go elsewhere for their needed supplies.

As a multilateral arrangement, a cooperative plan to give effect to the Kellogg treaties, it would make the pact a force instead of a formality. But the President indicates that he is interested solely in the latter. This he regards as the crowning achievement of his administration.

[From the Lansing (Mich.) Capital News]

There is some merit in Senator CAPPER'S suggestion that we institute an economic boycott against any nation that violates the Kellogg treaty by going to war.

It might not be a bad idea to abstain from all commerce with nations at war for, while this would cost us something in commerce, it might keep us out of war.

[From the Holland (Mich.) Evening Sentinel]

SQUEEZING PROFITS OUT OF WAR

The Republican leaders in Congress, we are told, have turned thumbs down on the plan proposed by Senator CAPPER providing for an embargo on arms and ammunition to any country that violates the Kellogg peace pact.

It is hard to understand why they should oppose such a plan. President Coolidge is quoted as saying that the plan is "too sweeping," and some of the Senators are said to oppose the plan because it is supposed to have originated with advocates of the League of Nations.

As to its being too sweeping, the President may have reasons connected with considerations of constitutionality that will make a good argument. On the face of it, however, it would seem that a way might be found whereby such a plan would help to make nations think twice before they will violate the Kellogg pact. To call on millions of young men to leave their homes and die for their country is also "very sweeping," but it can be done and is done when necessary.

The alleged objection of some Senators on the score that the plan was incubated by those who are advocates of the League of Nations is too narrow-minded to merit serious consideration. What of it if a League of Nations advocate first thought of the plan? That has nothing to do with it. If the plan itself is sound, it is worthy of adoption, even if it was ten times more an offshoot of the League of Nations.

Such an argument is a display of narrow politics that has no place in any plan for the preservation of world peace. There may be reasons against the plan, but the League of Nations reason is not one of them. It is silly and childish and unworthy of anyone who makes any pretensions to statesmanship. It is the reason of the small politician.

While it is not true that all wars are completely economic in their origin, it can not be successfully denied that profits play a great part in every war. Purely unreasoning emotion also plays a great part. This latter no nation or group of nations can legislate against. When the time comes, people of the future will very probably become hysterical, as they were in the past, and no amount of reason can prevent it.

But along with national emotion almost invariably goes the shrewd manipulation of selfish business interests that see an opportunity for profits in any war and that are willing to have millions die so long as profits can be made. Such interests have always been very clever in cloaking their selfishness under a garb of seeming patriotism. They have stirred people to white heat of indignation and have reaped a rich harvest.

If these profits can be taken out of war, at least one element of danger will be removed. There will be no motive for keeping people stirred up and a chance will be given for unreasoning emotion to cool off before it is too late.

The Capper plan will not pass just yet, but it is likely that it will eventually. It is fundamentally sound, whatever the technical objection may be under present conditions. If the Kellogg pact is worth adopting, a plan like this to make the pact practically effective is worthy of serious consideration.

PEACE COMPULSION

The Kellogg-Briand peace treaty, regarded by Senator JOHNSON, of California, and by many another critic as pretty near "nothing" in binding power, nevertheless has started something.

It was, on the face of it, only a pious resolution to stop fighting. But it did commit the nations to the moral principle of keeping the peace. And still more, it set people to thinking the world over.

One of the results of this thinking is the introduction of the Capper resolution in the United States Senate, and a similar resolution in the House of Representatives, and an immediate popular response at home and abroad.

Imagine a simple parallel in private life. Suppose a group of men sitting down to a poker game were to agree that they "wouldn't cheat any more." That would be fine. They would all feel a pleasant glow of virtue. But some experienced player might soon suggest:

"All right, boys. We're going to play square. But now, just supposing some fellow does happen to get careless and is caught sticking cards up his sleeve, what are we going to do about it?"

The mildest answer possible would be, "Stop playing with him; put him out of the game."

Well, suppose some nation that has agreed with its neighbors not to fight any more starts another war, or threatens to start one. Senator CAPPER'S idea is that the other parties to the agreement shall stop playing with him. Because he is cheating with cards, they will deal him no more cards. They will sell him no more chips—no more war materials.

This is peaceful coercion by economic weapons. Is there any other way to obtain peace without shedding blood for it?

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Globe-Democrat]

ARMS EMBARGO RESOLUTIONS

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has introduced a resolution in the Senate authorizing the President to declare unlawful the exportation of "arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war," to any nation that violates the Kellogg peace treaty in resorting to war contrary to its terms, the President to determine that such violation has occurred, and to declare his determination by proclamation. In the House of Representatives, STEPHEN G. PORTER, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, has proposed a resolution of similar import but of different terms, which would authorize the President to prohibit the exportation of munitions of war "to any country where conditions of domestic violence or of international conflict exist or are threatened."

The United States has not assumed any obligation to enforce the observance of the peace treaty, and it is not likely to take upon itself a direct obligation to that end. But it would be inconsistent with the spirit of the treaty if it permitted its nationals to supply arms and munitions to a country which has obviously violated the treaty. In effect this would be a material encouragement to the violator of the treaty, which has for its sole purpose the maintenance of peace, an agreement which was proposed to the nations by the United States and to which it has formally subscribed. If this agreement is to be effective violations should meet with general public condemnation and public aid should not be given the violator.

But the Capper resolution would lay upon the President the weight of responsibility for a decision that might be of the utmost importance to this country and to the world. Such a decision might not be difficult if the circumstances were perfectly clear, but it is highly improbable that they would be so clear in any instance. And if the President decided, in any case, that a nation had violated the treaty, and made public declaration of that decision, as the resolution requires, the effect would be necessarily to place this country in a position of positive opposition to the offending nation, which would almost surely result in a suspension of diplomatic relations.

The Porter resolution would extend a power already existing, but now applying only to American nations and limited to domestic conflicts. It would not require the President to determine the violator of the peace treaty but would authorize him to prohibit the exportation of "arms or munitions of war" (not "other articles for use in war"), to any nation, or presumably to every nation, that engages in war, domestic or international.

There is, however, so much involved in the questions raised by both of these resolutions that they should be carefully studied and fully discussed before any action is taken on them. The whole doctrine of neutrality, so long upheld by the United States, is involved in them. It may be, indeed, as some are claiming, that neutrality is no longer possible under present world conditions, but America will be reluctant to accept that conclusion. The sentiment of these resolutions is admirable and the purposes plausible, but there are possibilities of dynamite in them that demand cautious consideration.

[From the Trenton (N. J.) Times]

PUT TEETH IN THE PACT

Senator CAPPER'S resolution, which would have the United States refuse to sell arms to any nation violating the Kellogg treaty, merits favorable action at this session of Congress. It represents a logical and reasonable way of putting teeth in the international agreement for permanent outlawry of war.

Powerful opposition doubtless will develop against the resolution. Armament profiteers, many of whom got rich during the World War, may be expected to oppose it. All economic groups, indeed, which stand a chance of capitalizing war will be found fighting the measure with every resource at their command.

But it is true, as Senator CAPPER declares, that the rank and file of the American people are in favor of any move designed to strip the war game of its money-making features. The proposed embargo would, in addition, make it extremely difficult for a jingoistic nation to procure necessary armaments.

The Kellogg treaty is a big step in the direction of peace. Unfortunately, however, it does not—in fact, can not—prevent an unscrupulous government from breaking its word. That is why we need an enactment like Senator CAPPER'S resolution. That is why we should turn a deaf ear to the shrapnel gang.

[From the Pittsfield (Mass.) Berkshire Eagle]

PEACE MOVEMENT

Assuming that the Kellogg peace treaty is fully ratified and put in operation, it may be put down for a certainty that there will be more or less pessimism respecting its worth until more concrete evidence is given that there is a genuine determination on the part of the signers that the spirit of the document is to be carried out.

It is asserted by some of the principal friends of the treaty that the introduction of the Capper resolution, providing for the cutting off of supplies for the carrying on of an aggressive war, is inopportune at this time. This may be true. It may be that it is the wiser course to get the instrument signed as it appears, let that set a while, and then endeavor to put teeth in the treaty by adding the Capper resolution, or something akin to it.

Neither will the rank and file of the American people be satisfied fully until the pact is strengthened. The Capper resolution may be sidetracked for the present, but it will not be forgotten. At the proper time, in the not distant future, the resolution should be brought up again and thus put on record every nation that signs the treaty as it stands.

Unless the signers accept the Capper resolution or something equally strong, the world-wide impression will be that the people who signed it had a pen in one hand and a blackjack in the other!

[From the Wilmington (Del.) News]

CAPPER RESOLUTIONS

How opinions differ. Secretary Kellogg believes that the proposal of Senator CAPPER cutting off communications with nations that violated the letter and the spirit of the Kellogg peace pact would be ineffectual as promoting peace.

On the other hand, a member of the French Chamber of Deputies—and we referred to his remarks recently—thought the Capper plan would absolutely throttle war by placing an arms and other kinds of embargo upon the offending nations.

Secretary Kellogg, however, told the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate that he saw no harm and had no objections to such legislation as proposed by Senator CAPPER.

Immediate action on the proposal is not probable, but they will come up sooner or later, as Senator CAPPER is of the kind to push anything he takes hold of unto the end.

[From the New Haven (Conn.) Journal-Courier]

FOR SOBER REFLECTION

United States Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has introduced in the Senate a resolution in behalf of peace, supplementing the Kellogg peace pact, which deserves the sober reflection of the people of the country. It is, in fact, an extension of the peace spirit of the pact, drawn along similar lines and yet providing a means of carrying into effect, when needed, the provisions or pledges of the pact without recourse to war. Some such understanding of the principle of the pact was bound sooner or later to be formulated, if it is to be made something more than a mere pious gesture of good intentions.

It was the deliberate purpose of Secretary Kellogg in promoting the pact which bears his name to confine and limit its declaration to rejecting for all time war as an instrument of national policy in the consideration of international differences. Its spirit is lofty; its power to accomplish what in reality the world wants accomplished when a signatory violates its conditions is lacking. It is the opinion of Senator CAPPER that good faith is not sufficient to bring the governments of the world to full realization of just what it means to sign such a document and then leave it more or less confused by the admission that the right of self-defense is inherent—not that the right does not exist, but that it offers an excuse for warlike indulgences and requires therefore further reinforcement.

The World makes this admirable and concise statement of the Capper resolution, which we adopt as our own: "Senator CAPPER has proposed to plug this hole by a new statement of policy on the part of the United States and a new set of treaties. He wishes Congress to declare that it shall be unlawful to export materials of war to any nation which violates the pact of Paris. He wishes Congress to declare that the United States does not intend to protect its nationals 'in giving aid or comfort' to such a nation, a statement of policy which amounts to the threat of an economic boycott. He wishes Congress, finally, to request the President to negotiate new treaties whereby other governments will agree to the same course of action, so that this pledge may be reciprocal."

Senator CAPPER does not propose that his resolution shall be taken up at this time. His real object is, obviously, to present it to the American people as a means of making the pact practical and effective in a peaceful manner. While it may at first arouse suspicion that it is intended to push ajar the rear door leading into the League of Nations and thus gradually usher us into its presence, careful reflection will show, we are sure, that its fundamental effort is of an entirely different character. It would appear to be obvious that this Government could not under any conceivable interpretation of the Kellogg peace pact deliver to a government, which had broken faith with the pact, war munitions and supplies.

This would make the pact ridiculous. This is what the Capper resolution appears to anticipate by providing in subsequent treaties that it shall be unlawful on the part of any affirming government to provide a violator of the pact with the instrumentalities of war. This is essentially different in character from the provisions of the covenant of the League of Nations, which provide for armed intervention in event of their nullification. It was this phase of the covenant which gave it a warlike sanction while the Capper resolution seeks to meet the same crisis by peaceful sanctions. The objection of this newspaper to the covenant was based on the understanding that the league was, in fact, a war machine when provoked to action and was destined to further postpone the creation of a real will to peace. We approved the Kellogg peace pact, not because it was or can be made effective by itself, but that it opened the way to further steps which should insure its purpose.

We suspect that the objection to the Capper resolution will proceed largely from the isolationists who would do nothing to entangle us in the world-wide effort to create, permanently, universal peace methods for the settlement of all international disputes. What there is left of the old partisan feud, which flamed into extravagant opposition because of Mr. Wilson's leadership in behalf of the covenant, will find its expression also. There will also be a reluctance on the part of other nations to accept the Capper resolution for reasons well stated by J. Ramsay Macdonald, former Prime Minister of Great Britain, in a recent statement to this effect: "The nations lack confidence in their security and arm. They are afraid to walk in the unfamiliar ways of peace. They know that arms have never given them security, but they have inherited an instinct which irrationally drives them back upon organized force for their safety." It is true that those things require consideration in any attempt to bring the world to its moral senses. Opposed to them must be the convictions and intrepidities of those who have freed themselves from political nightmare and stand ready to make the sacrifices for peace which are now made so thoughtlessly for war.

It is manifest that we are slowly but surely reaching the point where our Government must make its decision and establish its relationship with the governments of the world. We can not escape much longer a recognition of the fact that an obligation to play our part in this great political drama of reconstruction and rehabilitation, which has enveloped the world from east to west, has already been created. If, upon sober reflection, the Capper resolution will aid us to both realize and accept that obligation, hope will take the place of despair.

[From the Waterbury (Conn.) Republican]

A PEACE ENFORCEMENT PLAN

Senator CAPPER'S resolution for giving force to the Kellogg treaty can not be either indorsed or condemned offhand. Its implications are so great that it is necessary to consider it from all angles before reaching a definite opinion. The general idea behind it, which is the cutting off of the American market as a source of war supplies for a power violating the pact, is unquestionably good. If money is included among the things it would be unlawful under the resolution to export to a country proclaimed a violator by the President, then the effect of the resolution ought to be to make war on a large scale impossible so long as this country maintains its present economic position.

Whether the phraseology of the resolution is that best calculated to carry out its purpose is a question that requires further study. Under its provisions the President would determine who had violated the treaty. Would or would not his decision agree with that of the league council, which would settle the question for league members? If it did, then all would be well. If it did not, then a serious crisis might be provoked. And if the President is not the proper agent to decide for us who has broken the treaty, then what is? Not the council, for we are not a league member. All these questions need to be debated before a final decision on the merits of the Capper resolution is reached.

In his comments upon his purpose in introducing the resolution Mr. CAPPER made it clear that he does not expect it to come to a vote until the regular session next winter. He realizes that it is of such importance that it needs to be debated and studied by the American people. Some proposition of the sort would be the natural corollary of the Kellogg pact. Between now and next December the American people ought to make up their minds whether the resolution under discussion, with or without revision, presents the sort of plan they wish for making the Kellogg pact effective.

[From the Tacoma (Wash.) Ledger]

WOULD MAKE WAR DIFFICULT

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, announces that he has prepared a resolution providing that the United States shall impose an embargo against any nation entering into the multilateral pact, commonly known as the Briand-Kellogg treaty for the renunciation of war as a governmental policy, which shall violate the international agreement. The resolution would make the President the judge of whether or not there had been such violation, and the President then would have the power to prohibit the sale or delivery to such nations of all arms, munitions, implements of war, and "other articles for use in war."

The last-mentioned thing that would come under the embargo is decidedly elastic, for it would be difficult to imagine any product of factory, range, or field that would not be of use to a nation engaged in war. As a matter of fact, wheat, flour, potatoes, clothing, or fuel are essentials in the life of any people, greatly more so in war than in peace, for then such a nation would not be in a position to supply itself with the necessities of both armies and civil populations through its own productiveness.

It might be expected that the Capper resolution would not commend itself to people having things to sell to their neighbors. Not only would the manufacturers of arms and munitions be hard hit by such an embargo but the farmer would find some exceedingly remunerative markets closed to him. When all is considered, however, it is safe to say that the Capper plan would go further to prevent war from starting, or to bring it to a close once it had started, than all the international agreements that could be devised.

Obviously a nation can not wage war unless it can keep armed and unless its people, both military and civilian, can be fed. There is no question that had not the Allies been able to secure both food and war material in the United States during the World War they would have been up against a hopeless task.

The imposition of embargoes, especially upon arms and munitions, is no new thing. It will be remembered that during the disturbances in Mexico, when armed factions were contending for control of the nation, the exportation of arms and munitions from this country to Mexico was strictly forbidden.

What was done in the case of Mexico could well be done in the case of any other nation, and if there could be an international agreement that would bind all nations to observe that sort of embargo it would look as though wars would be few and far between. After all, might it not be that the Kansas Senator has struck upon the best possible means for preventing war and advancing the cause of peace?

[From the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard]

TEETH IN THE KELLOGG TREATY

The essential part of the Capper resolution is the provision "that whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues." Americans who by selling the articles mentioned to a nation which has committed a breach of the Kellogg treaty give that nation aid and comfort shall lose the protection of their own government, provided that this policy "shall apply only in case of a breach of the said treaty by war against a government which has declared its adherence to a similar policy."

Under the Kellogg pact a nation that resorts to war in settlement of an international dispute is guilty of a breach of its obligations. Some critics of that agreement have asked, "Well, what of it? There is nothing in the treaty that says that anything shall be done about it. In short, the Kellogg treaty is merely a gesture." To which Senator CAPPER replied, "Very well; we will put some teeth in it." The teeth are in the clause we have quoted. The nation that violates the multilateral treaty by going to war will be subjected to an economic boycott on "arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war." Whether this means only material used by the military forces or whether it is broad enough to include foods, fertilizers, raw materials of industry for the maintenance of the nation as a whole, on the assumption that wars are waged now by entire peoples instead of merely by armies, is not clear.

The Capper resolution would mean two things: Its general adoption would result in there being no neutrals in war. There is nothing new in this except the proposal to give it a formal recognition. In the last war President Wilson declared the day of neutrals was past. All Americans realize that we could not keep out of a big war wherever it started. The Capper proposal, in a sense, makes a virtue of necessity by providing virtually that the nation violating the Kellogg agreement by going to war against another nation shall be treated as an aggressor against all the signatories and denied the right to buy goods from their nationals. This, in effect, makes the United States a party to an agreement quite similar to the famous article 16 of the League of Nations. The step Senator CAPPER proposes is a logical one. If the nations agree to renounce war, the nation violating its pledge should find all the others arrayed against it. Americans may not be quite ready for that now, but that it will come is inevitable.

[From the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) News]

ARMAMENT EMBARGO

Senator CAPPER'S resolution to strengthen the Kellogg treaty by stipulating that the United States shall declare an armament embargo against any nation violating the antiwar pact is a proper sequence of the Senate's ratification of the agreement to outlaw war as a national policy.

But it would seem that the thing to do first is to take the making of armament out of the hands of private enterprise and put it in the hands of Government, where it belongs. We have bootlegged armament into Latin-American and other countries long enough to make it clear that embargoes on armament, privately produced for gain, are not easy to enforce.

[From the Rochester (N. Y.) Times-Union]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION AND EUROPE

Senator CAPPER'S resolution authorizing the President to forbid the export of arms and implements of war to an aggressor nation may meet with very considerable opposition in the Senate of the United States. It may be a long time before it is enacted into law. But whatever its prospects of success, there is no doubt whatsoever that a large section, indeed an overwhelmingly preponderant section, of European opinion believes that its adoption would be the greatest step toward peace that could now be taken.

There are many persons in this country who do not believe in "sanctions," who do not believe that it is practicable or desirable to provide for common action against a lawbreaking state. But there are very few thoughtful students of international affairs in Europe who would take the same view. European thought has progressed to the point where police measures against a lawbreaker seem logical and natural.

This in itself is an extremely important fact. The question of the maintenance of world peace is not a theoretical question. It is a highly practical question. It must be solved with full regard to the facts, to the psychological elements involved. If Europeans believe that international stability will be enormously promoted by such a resolution as Senator CAPPER'S, then, whatever the theories individual Americans may hold, there is an obvious helpfulness in enacting such a resolution into law. Nor is it apparent that any risks are involved, or that any embarrassing obligations are assumed by the careful language of the measure in question.

The promotion of peace depends upon concerted effort. And when the principles of concerted action have been discovered, we shall be in the way of realizing the end in view. The reception of the Capper resolution abroad affords ample evidence that it may furnish the basis for common action for the maintenance of international accord.

[From the Southbridge (Mass.) News]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION FOR AN ARMS EMBARGO

The resolution of Senator CAPPER, calling for an embargo by this country on arms to be exported to countries violating the Briand-Kellogg treaty, has been introduced into the Senate and referred to the foreign relations committee without debate. While this incident does not arouse great interest at this time, there will undoubtedly be some lively debate when the report of the committee comes back to the Senate.

The exportation of arms and munitions of war has long been a subject of controversy, and the reopening of the matter recalls the heated debates in Congress and in the press while the European war was in progress previous to the entry of America into the struggle. Without doubt the slaughter in Europe could not have been kept up if it had not been for the market for war supplies which this country furnished. This fact was well known across the water and its remembrance causes much of the ill feeling of Europeans for America even at this late day. The people of the Central Powers, who could not take advantage of the market because of their inferiority on the sea, naturally referred to us as a nation of userers, taking advantage of the war to make money, and this feeling is shared by the allied people who had access to the market. The result is that the United States is in a position of isolation so far as friendliness among nations is concerned.

The time to consider such a resolution is now, when peace prevails. Any such declaration after war has been declared would justly be considered an unfriendly act by those powers which could buy here. Announcement that America would refuse to supply violators of the Kellogg-Briand pact with the weapons for war would mean much to possible offenders against the peace of the world. The progress of the resolution will be watched closely by all lovers of world peace, and by all citizens who wish our country to live up to its professions of leadership toward that end.

[From the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram]

MR. CAPPER REVIVES AN OLD QUESTION

If any member of the League of Nations, disregarding its pledges as a signer of the covenant, resorts to war, then "it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking state and the nationals of any other state, whether a member of the league or not."

That is the language of article 16 of the covenant.

Under Senator CAPPER'S new resolution in "support" of the multilateral antiwar treaty if a country breaks this treaty and goes to war, then "it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation by the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

Article 16 of the covenant is thus more sweeping than the Capper resolution. Article 16 provides for an "economic boycott" against the "guilty" nation in a war. The Capper resolution would commit America to a boycott against a violator of the multilateral treaty only as far as trade in war supplies was concerned.

The Capper resolution is not in conflict with the terms of the multilateral antiwar treaty. The Capper resolution, however, is in conflict with the "interpretation" of that treaty which was made by the Senate's Committee on Foreign Relations and which the Senate accepted by overwhelming vote when it ratified the treaty. "Should any signatory to the treaty or any nation adhering to the treaty violate the terms of the same," were the words of the committee's report, "there is no obligation or commitment, expressed or implied, upon the part of any of the other signers of the treaty to engage in punitive or coercive measures as against the nation violating the treaty. * * * In other words, the treaty does not, either expressly or impliedly, contemplate the use of force or coercive measures for its enforcement as against any nation violating it."

Woodrow Wilson said America could not be neutral in future wars. The Senate didn't accept his views. Mr. CAPPER revives the old fight. Mr. CAPPER stood against Mr. Wilson in the league fight in 1919 and 1920. Mr. CAPPER voted for ratification of the Versailles treaty with the Lodge reservations. He voted against unconditional ratification. In the strictest sense, however, Mr. CAPPER's present attitude is not inconsistent with his position of a decade ago, since the Lodge reservations did not condemn the principle of the "economic boycott." Nevertheless, in a general way if Mr. CAPPER is right now Mr. Wilson was not quite so wrong in his theory of securing peace by force, as many of his critics have declared.

[From the Providence (R. I.) Tribune]

THE CAPPER BILL

The main argument used against the Kellogg multilateral treaty was that it contained no sanctions automatically to go into effect as soon as its provisions were violated, making it resemble the futile pounding of the air by an old man too feeble to translate his protest into forcible action. Senator after Senator arose on the floor during the debate to say that while he was not simple enough to believe that the Kellogg pact was anything but a pious gesture, he would, nevertheless, support it and vote for it. Such statements amounted to humoring the Secretary of State, who would have been offended if his precious peace treaty was not adopted.

Now along comes Senator CAPPER with a bill that would put teeth into the treaty, perform a glandular operation upon the old man, and inject strength and vigor into his bones. Under the terms of Senator CAPPER's bill the President would be empowered to declare an embargo on "arms, munitions, or implements of war or other articles for the support" of the Government which had made a breach of the obligations of the treaty. In other words, as soon as any signatory nation to the treaty violated its provisions and had been so declared in violation, the United States would prohibit, by presidential proclamation, the export of implements of war to the offending nation.

The manufacturers of war implements will not like that bill. It strikes at the very heart of their business. The next and logical step would be a blockade of the offending nation so that no articles, whether cotton, foodstuffs, or other articles, will be allowed to leave American ports for the offending nation.

The bill, of course, will not be discussed at this session of Congress or at the special to be called in April. But it is the logical step after the signing of the Kellogg treaty, and it seems to be part of the plan of interested men and organizations in this country really to outlaw war. The big obstacle in the way of its consummation is the willingness of the other nations to agree to it. If the United States is the only country to declare such an embargo, it is worthless, for there are French, British, and Italian munition makers who would gladly sell to the offending nation. The success of the bill depends upon the unanimity with which it is accepted by other nations.

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

Senator CAPPER'S resolution, intended to prevent the shipment of munitions to any country that gets into a war of aggression, was first introduced several years ago. It didn't attract much attention, and was never pressed. It has now been reintroduced, its wording altered to make it conform to the outlawry of war treaty. Its author says it will not be pressed for adoption at the present session, but that he intends to push it vigorously at the next session.

The resolution supplies what so many peace moves have lacked—a weapon. Neither the League of Nations nor the world court has anything wherewith to enforce its decisions. Such bodies must rely upon the weight of international opinion to make their decisions binding. But the Capper resolution contains the means to hit at belligerent nations in a way that will hurt.

It provides that whenever any nation violates the outlawry-of-war treaty, this country can forbid the exportation of arms and munitions to the offending nation. There are few nations that can carry on, in a war of any size, without importing material from this country. If the resolution were adopted, it would mean that Washington would be the judge of the righteousness of the motives of any nation going to war. The resolution would set at naught the "reservations," specious and selfish, to the outlawry-of-war treaty, except in the cases of countries able to provide their own munitions.

There will, of course, be a bitter fight upon the resolution, but we believe it must be adopted in the end. To fail to adopt it would be to admit insincerity in adopting the outlawry-of-war treaty.

[From the Greensboro (N. C.) News]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

The initial reception of the Capper resolution suggests that the next major debate on world peace will center around this proposal to limit trading with a nation which goes to war. For it is evident that the idea expressed in the resolution has caught the attention of responsible persons on both sides of the Atlantic. Something like it has been expected since the Kellogg treaty was ratified, and was perhaps inevitable. Moreover, if it is true, as has been stated outside the resolution itself, that its real author is James T. Shotwell, who was perhaps more the author of the Kellogg treaty than either Kellogg or Briand, the relationship becomes even stronger.

What the resolution proposes is essentially simple:

"Whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

Another clause declaring that "the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty" adds to the main idea and therefore tends to restrict support of war.

The immense implications of the resolution are necessarily such as to cause it to be examined minutely and over a long period of time. It will not be taken up by the present Congress and probably not by the coming special session. Nevertheless, a first glance at it is sufficient to indicate that it expresses an idea which in one form and another has been discussed many times before. For by its terms a nation going to war in violation of the Kellogg treaty is faced immediately with the prospect of being unable to buy from the United States, for instance, or any other nation which would adopt the same resolution, any war supplies, and would have to produce all such supplies from within its own borders, or certainly the greater part of them. The experience of the World War would suggest that that is an impossibility if the war continues many months.

That fact alone would give pause to any nation which foresees the possibility of war. Yet if the Kellogg treaty means anything, the idea of the Capper resolution is neither illogical nor inconsistent with the treaty.

[From the Brooklyn Times]

CAPPER'S MOVE FOR PEACE

Supplementing and, indeed, complementing the Kellogg treaty outlawing war, is a resolution to be introduced in the United States Senate by Mr. CAPPER, of Kansas, to-day. The Capper move for universal peace calls for the isolation of a government which, being a signatory to the Kellogg pact, nevertheless resorts to war with another power which has also signed. The Capper resolution declares that the offending nation in such case shall be cut off from all supplies of arms or other articles needed in war by the United States, unless the President by proclamation or the Congress by joint resolution, shall otherwise order. There is no mention in the Capper resolution of the inhibition of loans, whether public or private, to such offending government, but such inhibition is plainly, if inferentially, conveyed in the original pact.

No more effective means to assure world peace could be devised than one that would cut off a warring nation from supplies here. If the United States does not furnish the money and material, no war could be successfully prosecuted by any European power for any considerable length of time. The sore spots of Europe are mainly in the East. But most of these governments are practically bankrupt, and while they maintain imposing armies, they could not equip or munition them without outside aid.

Perhaps the best illustration of the value of the Capper policy is to be found in Mexico. Up to the time the United States Government, some few years since, interdicted all sale of arms and munitions to Mexico, except to the established Government, revolutions were the constant feature. Since the inhibition was declared, Mexico, in the face of internal convulsions, unknown before, has been relatively quiet. If the inhibition were removed and the enemies of the Mexican administration permitted to arm, there is scarcely any doubt that the old-time revolutions would be renewed.

Mr. CAPPER'S resolution, however, should be amended to make the policy he advocates for the United States apply to all the major powers. In the unlikely event of war, it would be a ridiculous proposition to permit a European power to finance and arm a weaker nation in a war against its neighbor. The prohibition is so admirable it should be made universal.

[From the Flint (Mich.) Daily Journal]

CAPPER WOULD GIVE GREAT AUTHORITY TO PRESIDENT

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has drawn a resolution which will put teeth in the Kellogg treaty to renounce war. His resolution would stipulate that when the President of the United States determines and by proclamation declares that any nation has violated the Kellogg pact it shall be unlawful to "export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or any other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues." It is to be assumed that money would be included in "any other articles for use in war."

The Kansas Senator does not expect that any action will be taken at the present session of Congress. He admits that he merely wishes for the present to get the matter before the public and to help build a sentiment for the resolution through public discussion.

One might say offhand that this would solve the whole problem, because it would be difficult for any nation to wage war with any degree of success without purchasing war supplies from the United States. But there are other consideration involved. It would give the President of the United States an authority almost beyond limit. In the event of war between any of the world powers it would be for him to say which country was right in its contentions and which was wrong. He would be forced to make the decision of which one of the powers had started an aggressive war and to withhold the shipment of war supplies and credits to the aggressors. There is still dispute, after a period of 10 years, of whether the Central Powers or the Allies were the aggressors in the World War. History will probably say that both were aggressors. The United States sold war supplies to the Allies alone. Until we entered the war we would have sold them to Germany as well. The sale of war supplies is not a guaranteed delivery proposition. The purchaser has to carry home his purchases. With the Allies in command of the sea lanes it was impossible for Germany to carry war supplies which she might purchase from us. So Germany made no purchases, although she complained very bitterly because we sold war supplies to her foes.

If the nations of the world should enter into a compact not to sell war supplies to any violator of the Kellogg treaty, after an impartial commission had decided who the violator might be, is an entirely different matter. But to give the President of the United States the authority to pass judgment on the question of war guilt is imposing upon that Executive a burden which he is not likely to crave.

[From the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press]

PUTTING TEETH IN THE KELLOGG PACT

Senator CAPPER wants the Kellogg multilateral peace treaty to be something more than a jog to conscience. He wants to make its violation impractical as well as improper. He would have the United States go on record by formal resolution as promising to deny any treaty violator the right to obtain arms, ammunition, implements of war, or "other articles of use in war"—and not only that, but Mr. CAPPER would have the President negotiate with other treaty ratifiers to obtain similar declarations of policy from them.

As in many wars the only hope of staging a respectable and prolonged conflict lies in purchase of armaments from other nations, and particularly the United States—and as even the last one would have been considerably cramped without our trading assistance—such a declaration by several of the principal manufacturing and surplus-producing nations might be rather effective as a physical bolster to a moral treaty. It must be kept in mind that "other articles of use in war" covers a multitude of cargoes, including food and clothing ostensibly shipped to civilian populations. Or at least it was so interpreted by the United States and its allies in the late unpleasantness.

There has been an effort on the part of Professor Shotwell, certain elements of the French press and Government, and others to interpret the Kellogg treaty as a moral obligation on America's part to join in the suppression by actual combat means of any violator. That interpretation was definitely ruled out at the time of the Senate ratification, and, of course, carries the treaty's meaning too far. But a policy of boycott by embargo, such as Senator CAPPER suggests, is a quite logical outgrowth of the treaty. We should not care to promise that we would do anything positive against a violator in any particular case. But we might appropriately announce that we would do nothing positive to aid a violator—in the way of continuing a supply of war materials.

[From the Watertown (N. Y.) Times]

MR. CAPPER'S ARMS EMBARGO

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, proposed that the United States institute an arms embargo against any country which violates the Kellogg treaty to renounce war. Possibly an analysis might show that his reasoning is at fault but to all appearances it is decidedly sound. At the present time warring countries can obtain arms and munitions from neutral countries. That was one of the main points of arguments, of course, during the period of the World War prior to our entry. We shipped arms and munitions to the combatants and made no discrimination except that the allied fleet made it practically impossible to get arms to Germany. However, manufacturers would have shipped arms there if it had been possible. In the case of civil war in South American countries there has always been argument as to whether or not it would be morally right for us to ship arms to revolutionists who were seeking to overthrow the government. We have usually taken the position, however, that any discontented people have the right to protest or at least have the right which we can not question and we are within our rights in furnishing all sides with arms to fight it out. At best it is at times a contradictory theory but nevertheless it is established in international law and practice.

Now comes Senator CAPPER with this resolution which seems to be thoroughly sound. He simply takes the position that we are all signing a treaty to renounce war. Therefore, if any nation should violate this treaty the countries party to the treaty should not furnish them arms with which to fight. Gradually we are working out a new code of international law along lines which comprehend world peace. The Capper resolution is certainly a step in this direction.

[From the Atlantic City (N. J.) Press]

HE TAKES A PLEDGE SERIOUSLY

No one but a western, possibly a southern, Senator could have had the temerity of preparing for introduction a measure such as the Capper resolution for an armament embargo against any nation violating the Kellogg peace pact. As it is, the Kansan will have the arms and munition manufacturers and related interests swarming about his ears like angry hornets.

And yet, the surprising thing is that the matter is so simple and so logical, as merely carrying out the purpose and intent of any peace pact that can hope for success, as to occasion wonderment that such an arms embargo clause was not made a part of the Kellogg treaty itself in the first place. There is no denying that this country has profited in most wars during the last half century, and ranging from South American revolutions to the World War. Moreover, this country continues to be the world's storehouse of arms and ammunition, not to mention that other sinew of war—credit.

Shut off the weapons of war, including credit, and war would become a silly undertaking. The question, however, is, Will this country and the other major powers be willing to take their several pledges for world peace as seriously as all that?

[From the Portland (Me.) News]

THE NEXT STEP TO PREVENT WAR

When the Kellogg peace pact—otherwise known as the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war—was formally ratified, it was generally recognized that it was an important moral gesture toward the supreme desideratum of permanent world peace. The pact expressed the growing enlightenment of a war-weary world that mass murder as an instrument for the settlement of international disputes is futile and a survival or barbarism, and that henceforth it would be the policy of the signatories to that pact to liquidate disagreements through peaceful and orderly processes. But the multilateral treaty provides for no definite action to make that policy effective. It is a solemn agreement and pledge. However, nothing beyond moral disapproval is to be visited upon the nation or nations violating the treaty.

As a measure to put teeth in the Kellogg peace pact, Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, has presented a resolution in the United States Senate providing for an economic boycott on the part of the United States Government against any nation which may violate the pact. While the employment of force is not contemplated in Senator CAPPER'S resolution, the nonviolent and more effective method of preventing war is proposed in the placing of an embargo on arms, munitions, implements, or other articles for use in war. The Portland Evening News deems the Capper project of great interest.

A spokesman for the French Government observes that "the Capper resolution is of transcendent importance and represents an entirely logical sequence to the presentation of the antiwar pact by America to the world."

British official sentiment is understood to be in favor of the Capper plan, and it is recalled that Sir Austen Chamberlain, the Foreign Minister, declared in a debate last July on the Kellogg treaty:

"If the American Government ranges itself behind its own treaty, then indeed it would be an additional and most formidable determent from war, a most valuable security of peace."

The allusion to America ranging itself behind the Kellogg pact would be definitely and effectively realized by the enactment of some measure like the Capper resolution. Sir Wickham Steed, when shown a copy of the resolution, exclaimed: "God bless Senator CAPPER!"

while Ramsay MacDonald, leader of the Labor Party, said: "It is a most interesting and significant resolution."

The Capper resolution may have its flaws, but the overshadowing fact about it is that it starts our thinking and acting militantly in terms of peace rather than in terms of war, and moves toward making the principles of the Kellogg peace pact more tangible realities.

[From the Rome (N. Y.) Sentinel]

Where Mr. CAPPER holds a marked advantage is here: After having renounced war, taking the initiative in inducing most of the other powers to do the same, how can the United States Government or its citizens consistently supply other governments with the means of making war?

It would seem that if the Senator but holds to his proposal, embracing every possible opportunity to keep it alive, he will at least succeed in concentrating the attention of the world on the inconsistency of the attitude of most governments respecting armaments.

[From The Nation]

Senator CAPPER'S proposed addition to the Kellogg treaty is a logical extension of it. He suggests:

"That whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

This is a step toward making the treaty more effective, which will probably be welcomed by most of its supporters. It seems, though, to have one weakness. The Kellogg treaty has been so reduced in its possibilities by the exceptions in its own text and the subsequent reservations of most of the signatories that its violation by any country must become largely a question of interpretation. Naturally a nation that evades its application will claim that the government is not violating the treaty but acting according to its understanding of it. To give our President the power of interpretation is therefore putting large responsibility in his hands. Essentially such interpretation is an international—not an American—question.

[From the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian Pilot]

CAPPER'S EMBARGO PROPOSAL

Senator CAPPER'S proposal that the United States follow its ratification of the war-outlawry treaty with an independent commitment prohibiting the shipment of war munitions or supplies to any country resorting to war in disregard of its obligations as a signatory of the Kellogg treaty, bristles with difficulties of execution, but it is entirely logical and unquestionably in the right direction. If wars are abhorrent to a civilized world, the nations of a civilized world are justified not only in renouncing war as an instrument of their own national policies, but also in refusing to supply the means for making it the instrument of the national policies of others. That is the underlying morality of the Capper proposal and it is invulnerable. Moreover, the practice is not unknown to American statecraft. In order to discourage or suppress civil war in Mexico we have repeatedly, by presidential order, prohibited the indiscriminate shipment of American-made arms into that country. Propinquity and the Monroe doctrine, of course, played their part in these embargoes, but over and above these considerations was the dimly perceived immorality of trafficking for profit in the promotion or perpetuation of other nations' wars. The traffic is just as immoral when it serves war between two nations as when it serves war between two or more factions of one nation.

The central difficulty raised by the Capper resolution is that of determining, in specific clashes or threatened clashes between two nations, which is violating the Kellogg treaty and which is abiding by it. Under the Capper resolution, the determination, for the purpose of legalizing an embargo, would be made by the President of the United States. The effect of such a determination would be not only to lay the ground for an embargo on arms shipments from the United States, but to stigmatize the nation against which the embargo is directed as an aggressor and treaty breaker. The trouble-making possibilities of such an assumption of judgment by the President of the United States may be appreciated by imagining some European ruler vested with reciprocal power to pronounce the United States guilty of an act of aggression and brand it as a treaty breaker. The reaction in the United States to such an ex cathedra condemnation of it would not be unlike the reaction in some other country to a presidential denunciation of it as a treaty breaker, and it is a reaction not pleasant to contemplate.

But neither is it pleasant to contemplate the business of a neutral plying a profitable trade in the war agonies of two other nations. That kind of business has for centuries enjoyed the moral sanction of international law, but with the enactment of the Kellogg pact outlawing war "as an instrument of national policy," the neutral supplying of war materials to the nation resorting to this outlawed practice has itself taken on the character of an outlawed traffic. International law has not yet caught up with this corollary and the Capper resolution is directed to helping it catch up. A better means of identifying the treaty breaker than the ex cathedra judgment of the President is to be desired, but in default of our membership in any of the leagues or tribunals that have been set up for dealing with such questions of culpability by a wider consultation of opinion, we might be justified in relying on the procedure suggested by Senator CAPPER. The effectiveness of this or a similar embargo device for reinforcing the Kellogg treaty, however, must rest on some cooperative arrangement that would insure unity of action by at least the principal munition-making powers. Without such unity of action an arms embargo proclaimed by the United States against any nation not included within the pale of the Monroe doctrine, would only result in making more business for the munition factories of powers not joining in the embargo, and would fail of its object. Senator CAPPER has indicated the road to a powerful and logical reinforcement of the Kellogg pact. It deserves the fullest exploration not only by the United States but by all the nations that have joined it in the war-renunciation covenant.

[From the New York (N. Y.) Journal of Commerce]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

Senator CAPPER has introduced a resolution designed to "put teeth" into the Kellogg treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy. For that very reason it is a foregone conclusion that opposition to his proposal will be determined and bitter. Senator CAPPER himself does not expect that any immediate action will be possible, and precipitancy would certainly be ill-advised. The resolution is brought forward now in order that a chance may be given for discussion and for the development of a public opinion in favor of some such solution of the problem of enforcing the promises embodied in the Kellogg treaty. According to the proposed resolution, "whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

Undoubtedly opposition from industrial interests that would be seriously affected in their business and profits by an embargo of the sort proposed will be vigorous and difficult to resist. If we intend, however, to eliminate war as an instrument of national policy, we must show a willingness to cooperate with the league in some form of coercion of an aggressor nation. Otherwise countries belonging to the league will be very reluctant to apply economic or military sanctions to an offending state with which this country might decide to maintain trading connections in time of war at the expense of league members.

The Capper resolution would not definitely commit us to acceptance of the league definition of an aggressor state, but it would go far toward removing the apprehensions of other nations that the United States as a neutral in time of war might defy and ignore league restrictions designed to coerce aggressors. The result would be greater willingness on all sides to enter into some agreement to further naval disarmament.

[From the Milwaukee (Wis.) Journal]

CAPPER IS NOT ALL WRONG

Senator CAPPER'S proposal that, in a case of war, when the President decides that one of the warring nations has violated the multilateral treaty, export of munitions shall be forbidden, is a hasty prescription, not well thought out or safeguarded. But it is not all wrong, and CAPPER makes a point. If the multilateral treaty is to accomplish anything, it will be because we put meaning into it by acts.

A sounder rule would be that proposed by Newton D. Baker, that when two nations have submitted a dispute to arbitration and one of them goes to war in violation of the award, the United States will not sell to that nation either munitions or any other supplies. One can find loopholes in this. Each nation would contend that the other was the aggressor. But we have to face this, or we can make no beginning of ending war. And Mr. Baker proposed to go the whole way—refuse food supplies as well as munitions. Why not? One is as important as the other. We can export munitions, or we can export other things and set a population free to make munitions.

Senator CAPPER apparently is trying to dodge the prejudice against basing any action by the United States on the decision of any arbitrator or body from another nation or other nations. But we are never going to do anything to end war all alone. Alone, all any people could do is refuse to fight. And that doesn't end wars in this world we are living in.

CAPPER proposes that the United States say that if any nation wants to make war when it is in the wrong, this country will not help it. Of course, that meets instant opposition from those who remember that the profits from helping anyone in a crisis are tremendous. So we can pick CAPPER's plan to pieces. But that doesn't dodge the fundamental. If we mean anything by the Kellogg treaty, we are going to do something besides sign our name to gracious words.

[From the New Haven (Conn.) Journal-Courier]

PRESIDENTIAL EMBARGOES

The chief objection raised in Congress to the Capper plan has been the heavy responsibility which it would force upon the Chief Executive. The Kansas Senator has devised, or rather has offered, the first really efficient machinery for lending objective meaning to the Kellogg treaty. He would have the President decide the aggressor in any future international flurry, and lay an arms embargo, against that nation. The plan was originally conceived by Professor Shotwell, of Columbia, it is said, who also has early credit for the germ of the Kellogg pact idea itself.

That this proviso if it passed would laden the President with a heavy burden is plain. Senate experts in international law predict that such a presidential embargo would be construed by its victim at once as an overt act of war. Yet this is a detail. It is plain that the Kellogg treaty, if its sanctions are not explicit, lays implicit obligations upon its signatories to be early in choosing the innocent from the guilty in any future war. No word is mentioned of such a choice, but the necessity for it is there. The treaty does hold that signatories who break it shall be excluded from its benefits; in that single passage there is the inference of choice, for the nations must know whom to exclude before they can exclude. It is unthinkable that any nation will lend comfort in the future to a belligerent warring against the very principle it has sworn to defend.

Plainly there must be a choice, and plainly that choice is up to the President. The objection that it is a heavy load upon him is met when existing regulations which charge him with the laying down of arms embargoes are cited. It has apparently been forgotten in the present controversy that only a few months ago the press was full of discussion of a presidential arms embargo against the Mexicans. The President is already empowered to prohibit the exportation of war materials to belligerents in North America and in lands where the United States has enjoyed the right of extraterritoriality, as in China. It would not, then, be a great extension of this principle if he were to assume the wider censorship of belligerents among the first powers of the world. Of course, it may be argued that the decision is too grave not for him to bear but for the people to trust to him, in which case there is remedy in our ancient checks and balances through inspection by the Congress, as the Congress now inspects declarations of war.

[From the East St. Louis Journal]

MR. CAPPER'S ARMS EMBARGO

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, wants the United States to refuse to sell arms or ammunition to any country that violates the Kellogg peace pact. He has introduced a resolution to that effect which also authorizes the President to negotiate with other signatory nations to join the boycott.

Immediate action is not looked for, but the proposal, Mr. CAPPER hopes, will stimulate public discussion. That hope is likely to be realized. Public opinion will, we believe, be disposed to abolish "a profitable trade that in the end will cost the lives of our own youth and saddle another tremendous war debt on the people of the earth."

Depriving the neutral nations of any opportunity for profit ought to help to unpopularize war universally.

The provision empowering the President to persuade other nations to adopt this policy seems superfluous. The other nations, with few exceptions, are members of the League of Nations and as such are obligated to suspend all commercial relations with any nation waging an aggressive war. But the moral of this provision can not sincerely be ignored. It emphasizes anew the truth that international cooperation is necessary to outlaw war and achieve the great end of abiding peace. The experience of the World War has taught that lesson just as impressively as it exposed the danger and ultimate cost of "a profitable trade" in munitions.

[From the New York World]

CAPPER'S PLEA—THE MORE OBJECTIONS ARE DEBATED, THE BETTER ITS CHANCE OF PASSAGE

It is the chief weakness of the pact of Paris recently ratified by the Senate that while it pledges nations to settle disputes by pacific means it does not say what will happen if a nation breaks this pledge. Senator CAPPER has proposed to plug this hole by a new statement of policy on the part of the United States and a new set of treaties. He wishes Congress to declare that it shall be unlawful to export materials of war to any nation which violates the pact of Paris. He wishes Congress to declare that the United States does not intend to protect its nationals "in giving aid or comfort" to such a nation, a statement of policy which amounts to the threat of an economic boycott. He wishes Congress, finally, to request the President to negotiate new treaties whereby other governments will agree to the same course of action, so that this pledge may be reciprocal.

It is not a new plan which Senator CAPPER has brought forward in this resolution. Substantially the same plan was proposed in a resolution which he introduced in 1927; Representative BURTON, of Ohio, has introduced a similar proposal which the House Committee on Foreign Affairs has approved; and the idea of an economic boycott as an instrument of maintaining peace is at least as old as the League of Nations. What gives a new turn to the proposal now is the fact that the United States has approved the pact of Paris. Having come this far from a position of isolation and irresponsibility toward world affairs, and having pledged itself with many other nations to settle any and all disputes by "a peaceful and orderly process," it is wholly logical now that the United States should attempt to reinforce this pledge with something to make it effective. We could not in good faith sell munitions or supplies to a nation which had violated the pact of Paris. It will substantially improve the outlook for continued peace if we say so in advance.

Senator CAPPER does not hope for action on his resolution at the present session. He has offered it now, he says, that it may "bring about discussion and consideration which will result in action at an early date." This is good strategy on his part. For his proposal will lose nothing by being thoroughly debated. It will lose nothing by challenging the isolationists in Congress who are certain to insist first that this is a plan "to enter the league by the back door," and second that while it is perfectly proper for the United States to make pledges to renounce war it is not the duty of the United States to help enforce these pledges. The more such arguments against the Capper resolution are debated the better its chance of adoption will be.

[From the Sandusky (Ohio) Star Journal]

WOULD MAKE PACT EFFECTIVE

In a local gathering of men, the other evening, there was a discussion of the probability of more wars, and almost without exception those present expressed the view that the Kellogg antiwar pact is little more than a gesture and is not likely, to have any effect in a crisis.

Doubtless this view is held by many—possibly by most people. Conceding good intentions, the pact appears to lack force, because there are so many loopholes and no penalties.

Now, however, comes Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, with a proposal that would put teeth in the Kellogg pact, as many writers express it. He has offered a resolution in the Senate which provides, in effect, that the United States Government shall declare an economic boycott against any nation violating the pact and invests the President with authority to issue a proclamation forbidding the export of arms and munitions to such an offending nation.

To all intents and purposes, this is the plan set forth in the covenant of the League of Nations, a covenant to which we have declined, thus far, to subscribe.

The Capper resolution has created a profound impression, not only in this country but abroad. Here is a proposal which would really make effective the antiwar pact. Even if some nation should decide, in the heat of passion, to resort to war against another nation in defiance of the pact, it would be almost helpless in the face of an economic boycott. If it could not secure supplies and munitions from other countries, it could not wage a successful war. And, presumably, other nations would be asked and expected to adopt measures similar to the Capper resolution.

Here comes the test, however: Such action would be a severe blow to the munitions and certain other business interests. Will Congress have the courage to defy these interests and adopt a measure that will really give a meaning and effectiveness to the antiwar pact?

We shall be intensely interested in the action taken.

[From the Perth Amboy (N. J.) News]

BACKING THE KELLOGG PEACE TREATY

If the Kellogg peace treaty really means anything, and if this Nation is sincere in its desire for peace, what could be more consistent than for the United States to proclaim to the world that it will not sell arms or munitions to any nation that resorts to war?

The Kellogg peace treaty sets forth that any nation ratifying it rejects war as a national policy and agrees to settle all international disputes through pacific means. But there it ends. The treaty needs some teeth in it to make it effective. Senator CAPPER has submitted a proposition that will supply this defect. He would have the Senate adopt a resolution to the effect that whenever the President shall determine that the Kellogg treaty has been violated by any nation it shall be unlawful to export to such country arms, munitions, or instruments of war.

Objection has been raised to this proposition to the effect that it puts too much of a responsibility on the President. After all, the Kellogg treaty recognizes the right of any nation to defend itself with arms, if necessary. Naturally, the question arises, When is a country merely defending itself, or when is it the aggressor? This has been the problem over which every real move toward permanent peace has stumbled, and the solution has not yet been found.

But, after all, there is a great deal of hair-splitting in the consideration of this matter. While every nation, when it goes to war, always claims that it is fighting in its own defense, it is generally easy for public opinion to fix upon the guilty party. It has been proposed that the decision as to which may be the aggressor nation in going to war be determined by the willingness or unwillingness of a belligerent nation to submit its case to the League of Nations or to the World Court for settlement.

As a matter of fact, as far as the peace of the world is concerned, it does not matter which nation is the aggressor. The United States, having taken its stand against war, ought, without equivocation, to refuse to sell munitions or arms of any kind to any belligerent nation. The League of Nations already provides for an economic boycott, but with the United States not bound by the league covenant it is uncertain just how this would work out. But an economic boycott on all imports as well as the lending of money, is different from a boycott on war materials, although the United States might readily refuse to lend money to any country that is at war for the purpose of helping to finance the war.

There is much the United States can do along this line, and Senator CAPPER'S resolution is worthy of the utmost consideration. He does not expect it to be acted upon at this session of Congress. His purpose is to get it before the people and have it discussed. The more it is considered and reasoned out, the more desirable it becomes that such a resolution should be adopted by the United States.

[From the Watertown Times]

MR. CAPPER'S ARMS EMBARGO

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, proposed that the United States institute an arms embargo against any country which violates the Kellogg treaty to renounce war. Possibly an analysis might show that his reasoning is at fault, but to all appearances it is decidedly sound. At the present time warring countries can obtain arms and munitions from neutral countries. That was one of the main points or arguments of course during the period of the World War prior to our entry. We shipped arms and munitions to the combatants and made no discrimination, except that the allied fleet made it practically impossible to get arms to Germany. However, manufacturers would have shipped arms there if it had been possible. In the case of civil war in South American countries there has always been argument as to whether or not it should be morally right for us to ship arms to revolutionists who were seeking to overthrow the government. We have usually taken the position, however, that any discontented people have the right to protest or at least have the right which we can not question, and we are within our rights in furnishing all sides with arms to fight it out. At best it is at times a contradictory theory, but nevertheless it is established in international law and practice.

Now comes Senator CAPPER with this resolution, which seems to be thoroughly sound. He simply takes the position that we are all signing a treaty to renounce war. Therefore if any nation should violate this treaty, the countries party to the treaty should not furnish them arms with which to fight. Gradually we are working out a new code of international law along lines which comprehend world peace. The Capper resolution is certainly a step in this direction.

PROVIDING THE TEETH

The suggestion advanced by former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker during the debate on the Kellogg-Briand peace treaty that the United States announce as its policy refusal to sell to any nation engaged in an aggressive war did not fall on barren soil. Seemingly overlooked by the estimable gentlemen who yearn for peace, but who are not eager to pay any of the price of peace, it begins to bear fruit in the guise of a resolution prepared for introduction in the Senate by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas. That resolution provides:

"That whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

That puts teeth in the multilateral peace treaty, which, while hailed in some quarters as a great stride toward international peace, has been regarded in many others as only a noble gesture, and the ratification of which by the United States Senate has had no effect whatever upon the program of battleship building or stopped more than momentarily talk of possibility of war and preparedness therefor. It makes it a peace treaty in fact as well as in name. If adopted, of it it could be said with truth what was said flamboyantly but erroneously of the multilateral Kellogg-Briand treaty. When commentators at Geneva, the seat of the League of Nations, hail its proposal as a godsend, declaring it "of the highest importance" and "extraordinarily helpful" to efforts for world peace, they do not exaggerate. If it would not mean "the end of war," as one enthusiastic soul exclaimed, it would come very near to meaning just that if members of the league in cooperation would put into effect, in case of threatened war, article 16 of the league covenant, which provides for an economic boycott of the aggressor nation. That article is more or less a dead letter so long as the United States remains aloof; but with the United States adopting as a policy the proposals of the article, the members of the league would be able to put it into effect without the fear, almost the certainty, that the United States would seize all the trade while they were refusing to trade with the aggressor belligerent. What nation then would undertake to fight a war if informed in advance that its supplies from all the world would be cut off? What nation would do anything but submit to arbitration of disputes under such conditions? Not one, except in extraordinary circumstances.

The Capper resolution, however, has not passed the Senate. Already the timid are suffering palpitation of the heart. Already the sordid are beginning to figure on loss of trade in contraband and noncontraband with fighting nations. Already the Wilson baiters are earnestly estimating how much credit would come to that great battler for world peace through the strengthening of what was once contemptuously called "Wilson's League." If that resolution is to pass, there are three great obstacles to be overcome. They are:

1. The timidity of the isolationists and their dupes who fear for the United States to undertake anything they are not assured in advance will commit the United States to nothing, will cost it nothing, and will gain it everything.

2. The latent but still determined opposition to the League of Nations, based on the timidity aforementioned, on jealousy of Wilson's fame, or on indisposition to do anything effective to end wars.

3. The age-old human desire for profit, even at the expense of the misfortunes of others.

Virtually all the opposition will be based on arguments against "entangling alliances" and against having anything to do with the League of Nations. The "profit" argument will not be brought deliberately from under cover. But it will be back of some of the opposition to the Capper resolution. The Kellogg-Briand peace treaty costs nothing, commits us to nothing; the Capper resolution, if adopted and carried out, might cost the United States very, very much. It would cost expanded trade in time of war and substitute therefor contraction of trade. Producers, manufacturers, shippers, and as a consequence labor would suffer by the self-imposed obstacle to trade with a great nation sorely in need of great quantities of goods of all kinds and willing to pay and pay big for them. Not much of that will be said in debate, which will concern itself with the old bugbears, redressed and again trotted out to frighten believers in fairy tales, but the thought will be there. Oh, it will be there.

Nevertheless, the fight should be made. It should be made because there is a chance of winning it, and even if there were not no man or woman can rest when a fight for real world peace is in prospect. It should be made, too, to let the country understand that the Kellogg-Briand treaty is but a beginning and is worse than worthless if a stop is made now. It should be made to tear aside the cloak of complacency which the country is even now donning, as if the work were complete and world peace in sight. And when the fight starts it will be interesting to watch some of those so loud spoken in their advocacy of words, words, words in which the mutilateral treaty is clothed. How many of them will be on the firing line when it is proposed to substitute action for words? How many of them will proclaim in the Senate their welling love of peace? How many will repeat how far they are willing to go in pursuit of peace? How many petitions will pour in upon Congress, how many resolutions will be passed by how many organizations? How many speeches will President Coolidge make and how feverishly active will Secretary Kellogg be? Will they be jealous of these nurses of their child, who thus prepare to take it in hand, or will they watch with glowing pride as it is brought safely through the teething stage?

Time will tell. The Capper resolution has revived sooner than expected the issue that was fought out 10 years ago. Not even that resolution goes as far as the great practical idealist of the greatest war of all time wished to go, and as most nations have gone, but it goes far enough to arouse the enthusiasm of those who went down to defeat with him 10 years ago. Does it go so far as to arouse the bitterest opposition of those who were victors in that decade-gone fight. There's the danger.

CAPPER'S PEACE PLAN

Stopping up the holes in the Kellogg peace treaty has engaged the efforts of Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, who has ready a resolution that would empower the United States to institute an armament embargo against any country that violates the terms of the treaty.

Whatever happens to the measure after it is submitted to Congress, Senator CAPPER appears to be actuated only by the highest motives and desire to save the world from another rain of bloodshed. It has been charged that the Kellogg treaty is only a dramatic gesture, with no assurance that it will be sufficient to override any nation contemplating war when the occasion seems ripe.

Senator CAPPER admits that while the United States could prove a powerful factor in depriving other countries of supplies through this resolution, the Government should not lose time in asking other signatories to the pact to subscribe to the embargo plan. Big manufacturers of war necessities may openly applaud the step and secretly oppose it, but that does not alter the fact that the Capper plan would shut one very important door to the waging of war abroad and is a sensible adjunct to the peace treaty.

[From the Chicago (Ill.) Post]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

Senator CAPPER has introduced a resolution providing that in the event any nation goes to war in violation of the Kellogg multilateral treaty the United States will place an embargo on the export of war materials to the offending nation and withdraw protection from American citizens who give aid and comfort to the treaty breaker.

At once the jingo element rises on its toes to shout. This is guaranteeing the status quo in Europe; it is entangling us in foreign broils; it is creating sanctions for the peace pact.

Buncombe, or, more briefly, bunk.

Consider the reverse. The Kellogg treaty is multilateral. It specifically recognizes that any nation violating it is an offender against all nations party to it. If the contract be broken for one it is broken for all. There is automatic release for all nations from any obligation under the treaty toward a nation violator.

Let us suppost that in such case the United States, acting under its rights as a neutral, supplies war materials to the treaty-breaking nation and supports its nationals in giving aid and comfort, what then is it doing?

Is it not helping to wreck the world-peace structure which it was chiefly instrumental in building? Is it not abetting in the effort to destroy the status quo in Europe? Is it not taking the shortest and most direct route to embroil itself in war? Is it not in fact doing all the terrible things which the jingo opponents of the Capper resolution declare the adoption of that proposal would involve?

We need only to consider this reversed to see how insincere is the cry which is raised against the resolution. There may be better and wiser ways of doing what Senator CAPPER proposes, but there can be no question that the policy which is embodied in his resolution is much nearer to the intellectually and morally sound attitude which the Nation should assume than that which its critics approve by implication.

Senator CAPPER, it will be noted, does not propose that the United States should give aid to the nation or nations which may be attacked by a treaty breaker. He proposes only that it shall not give aid to the offending nation. In other words, he proposes that America shall not assist in the violation of its own treaty.

We doubt if in the minds of the American people there can be any dissent from so sane and honorable a proposition. Is it easy to conceive of your country, for the sake of trade, lending help to a power which has broken faith with civilization and set itself against the peace and order of the world?

Note, further, that the resolution is in no sense a guaranty of the status quo in Europe. The nations signatory to the Kellogg pact have renounced war as an instrument of national policy; they have made solemn pledge that every dispute of whatever sort which henceforth arises shall be settled by pacific means. Within that limitation the status quo in Europe may be altered. We are not preventing. Our opposition to war is not in defense of any political status quo, but in defense of civilization against its greatest peril.

The nation that attacks the status quo by war uses an illegitimate means, a means so dangerous to all the world that it can not be countenanced. That would be the reason for our refusal to aid it.

Note again that this resolution does not entangle us. On the contrary, it is designed to avoid entanglement. To give assistance to a treaty breaker is to become entangled in the most discreditable way. It is to compound a felony. It is to offer excuse, if not justification, for action on the part of the defenders of the treaty in restraint of our aid to the violator.

Finally, note that in any case decision as to whether the treaty has been violated in a particular instance, and if so, as to who may be the violator, rests with ourselves. Such a resolution as this could take effect only upon our initiative, and after, in the light of the facts, we had decided that such and such a country had broken the treaty which we negotiated.

[From the New York World]

Already the discussion of the Capper resolution enables us to divide the opposition into three main groups. There is the school represented by Mr. BORAH, who holds that any resolution or any sanction is unnecessary. There is the group represented by Mr. Coolidge, who, if we credit the White House statements, holds that some action may be necessary but this particular resolution goes too far. Finally, there is the group typified by Senator EDGE, who attacks the resolution as dangerous, in that it will "put the United States in the very middle of every international broil." Unnecessary, incautious, dangerous—there are three distinct verdicts on the resolution.

We may well think that it is a sufficient achievement for the present to have the first group sharply challenged. Senator BORAH repeatedly argued during the debate on the Kellogg pact that the moral force of the pledge against aggressive war was sufficient and we need go no further. Each signatory nation had registered its solemn promise not to use war as an instrument of national policy; if it resorted to war, it would face the united condemnation of mankind. But the Senate debate itself and the report of the Foreign Relations Committee showed the inadequacy of this view. It was emphasized in the debate that the United States and other nations are free to go to war at any time in defense of anything they please to term their interests; and there has not been a great war since Waterloo that both sides did not loudly proclaim to be "defensive."

Those who have a really practical belief in the Kellogg pact will wish to make it effective by "implementing" it. The worst that could happen to it would be to regard it as a very beautiful but wholly abstract pledge, and to place it on the shelf for cobwebs, dust, and oblivion. The Capper resolution is a hopeful indication that this is not to be its fate and that it may one day be given genuine vitality. It should not be left alone but extended and developed. Men may differ on the best method of accomplishing this result, but the opening of debate on the subject is a highly encouraging omen.

[From the Buffalo (N. Y.) News]

TO BOLSTER PEACE PACT

The nations that have signed the Kellogg multilateral treaty to outlaw war should move to make it a really effective instrument for peace. The resolution that Senator CAPPER has introduced, providing for an embargo by this country on the shipment, to any nation violating the pact, of arms, munitions, and other things necessary for the prosecution of war, is a step in the right direction.

Senator CAPPER is hopeful that the other powers will take like action—that they will follow the lead of the United States. If they were to do so, a treaty-breaking state would find itself faced by an economic embargo, since under the conditions of modern warfare practically everything that a nation needs in its ordinary life it requires in war. The Capper resolution would implement the Kellogg pact—would give it teeth. From such a commitment the signatory powers might move on to a renunciation of preparations for war. Then, and not until then, will the implications of the Kellogg pact be recognized when the nations frame their budgets.

[From the New Haven Register]

BACKING UP KELLOGG PACT

Two moves were initiated in Congress recently to provide methods by which the United States might take negative action against violators of the Kellogg treaty. Senator CAPPER introduced a joint resolution by the terms of which it would be unlawful to export munitions or other articles for use in war to a nation which the President by proclamation declared to have violated the multilateral pact for renunciation of war. Representative PORTER introduced a resolution in the House providing for an arms embargo against any country where "conditions of domestic violence or of international conflict exist or are threatened," the President determining when such conditions obtain. The Capper resolution also contains a section declaring it to be the policy of the United States "that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty (Kellogg pact).

These resolutions define policies of great importance and concern to the United States and to practically all the nations of the world. Their adoption would involve far-reaching changes in our position with relation to other countries. It would vastly increase the responsibility and the power of the United States, making us not only interested in but an influential factor in almost any conflict of substantial proportions anywhere in the world, regardless of whether or not we were directly concerned. The question of neutrality and freedom of the seas in time of war is likewise involved, as is our policy of protecting our own citizens.

It will be seen that this is a matter in which Congress must move with the greatest caution and only after the fullest and most exhaustive consideration. Senator CAPPER says that he will not press for action on his resolution until the regular session of Congress beginning next December. He has introduced it at this time so as to give full opportunity for discussion of the project and the formation of public opinion concerning it. Such discussion is very necessary.

A favorable attitude toward the Capper proposal is already indicated abroad, where it is looked upon as a method of assuring American sympathy for sanctions ordered by the League of Nations against a belligerent. We ourselves must guard against any tendency to be swept off our feet by a suggestion that may look fine in theory, but which might not work so well in practice. The practical aspect of the question needs to be very thoroughly explored.

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Evening Public Ledger]

SENATOR CAPPER'S PLAN

Senator CAPPER'S proposal for enforcing the provisions of the Kellogg treaty does not go quite so far as the covenant of the League of Nations, which provides for an economic boycott on a nation which wages war in disregard of its provisions. It does, however, seek to isolate a nation that violates the treaty.

It provides, in the first place, that nothing useful in war is to be exported to any country that engages in hostilities in disregard of its treaty obligations. In the second place, it removes from the protection of the Government any American who gives aid and comfort to a nation violating the treaty. And in the third place, it requests the President to ask the other nations signing the treaty to agree to withdraw protection from their nationals aiding a nation that has committed a breach of the treaty.

It may be argued that the effect of such agreements would be to force every nation to provide munition plants of its own and also to lay up stores of goods that might be needed in case of war. But this would happen only in the event that those nations contemplated violating the treaty; that is, that they were determined to be prepared for an aggressive war. Wars of defense are not forbidden, and it is not likely that there ever will be any international agreement against them.

The European comment on the Capper resolution is sympathetic. It indicates that there is a serious intent to discourage war and to resort to peaceful methods in settling disputes. It is not necessary to speculate about how long this intent would survive a great international crisis in which the honor of a nation was involved. That it is entertained at all indicates that the world is moving away from the time when the only answer to an argument was a blow.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Morning Record]

EMBARGOING WAR MUNITIONS

The general approval with which the proposition of Senator CAPPER to institute an armament embargo against any country violating the Briand-Kellogg peace pact has been received is one of the most emphatic expressions as yet given that the thought of the world has changed from war to peace. The pact in itself is merely a declaration that arbitration and conciliation are preferable to the arbitrament of arms in the adjustment of international disputes, but the Capper resolution would make possible the enforcement of the principle. If a nation violating the pact should be unable to go into the world market and find arms, munitions, and implements of war, it would quickly allay its belligerent inclinations. It would realize that the peace pact meant more than the sound of words.

The acclaim accorded the resolution by the press of some of the European countries indicates that the lead of the United States in such a movement would receive cordial foreign support. In fact an idea of similar import was advanced by prominent British and French statesmen some weeks ago, and cable reports are to the effect that Europe, as a whole, would welcome and support the plan. The provisions of the resolution are so far-reaching and would be so effective that action on the measure is not expected at this session of Congress and will be deferred until the next regular meeting of the National Legislature in December. In the meantime the world will have the opportunity for discussion and opinion will be crystallized.

The adoption of a policy of this character by the United States and followed by the countries of Europe would practically assure the permanent peace of the world, for there is little doubt about the favorable attitude of Japan and probably China, which appears to be in the dawn of reestablishing itself in the family of nations. The lead of the United States in a project of this kind has already restored to some extent the confidence of the world that we are earnest and honest in our peace protestations. The debate on the cruiser bill created in foreign countries the impression that the sentiment of the Briand-Kellogg peace pact did not represent the true feeling of the people of this country, but now the Capper resolution has tended to dissipate that suspicion.

The proposed measure has produced a most favorable effect at Geneva, for its purpose is in line with the hopes and the ideals of the League of Nations. If the munitions and implements of war can be effectively barred from a peace-violating or a peace-defying nation the governments of the world can unite in the promotion of human welfare instead of devoting the major portion of their time to the prevention of armed conflicts. If the markets for the agencies of destruction are curtailed or eliminated, such commodities will not be produced or carried in anticipation of a demand, and herein a possible inducement for the advocacy of war will also be removed. The League of Nations, the spirit of Locarno, and the peace pact of Paris appear to be moving irresistibly toward the ultimate triumph of a permanent world peace.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. DILL. I will yield.

Mr. NEELY. In my judgment, there are not 48 Senators or a quorum present.

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator that we had a quorum call only a few minutes ago, and there was a quorum, but if the Senator wants to make a point of no quorum, I shall not object.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. A quorum can not be called at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. WHEELER. There has been some business transacted since the last call.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. What business has been transacted?

Mr. WHEELER. The junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] made a motion or asked for permission to present some matter.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether he is interested in the radio bill?

Mr. DILL. I think the radio bill should be passed.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Well, the Senator is making great headway toward its early passage.

Mr. DILL. I do not think it is nearly so important to pass the radio bill as it is to prevent the passage of legislation affecting our relations with a foreign country, as this bill does.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not care to enter into a discussion of the subject which the Senator is presumably considering.

Mr. DILL. I have discussed the subject all evening, and if the Senator from California had been here he would know that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But if the Senator from Washington is really and sincerely interested in the passage of the radio bill—and I have no reason to question his sincerity with respect to that proposed legislation—why pursue this course?

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall take a recess until to-morrow, and this matter probably can be brought to a vote very early after the session opens to-morrow; but we have tried to recess on two occasions this evening and Senators have voted to stay here; so I feel called upon to continue to discuss this subject.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I am willing to stay here until the cock crows in the morning.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Washington, I presume, would be willing temporarily to have this matter laid aside if the radio bill could be passed at once?

Mr. DILL. Oh, yes.

Mr. NEELY. If the Senator from California will make such a request for unanimous request I believe we could agree on that so far as this side of the House is concerned.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will make this request for unanimous consent, that the Senator from Washington yield the floor and give us a rest.

Mr. DILL. I may say if the Senator from California had been here and heard the argument which I have been delivering on this subject I am sure he would not expect me to yield until I had completed the argument. The Senator having been absent, naturally does not realize the seriousness of the situation which I have attempted to present to the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have no doubt history will take note of the Senator's great and illuminating argument; history will not forget it.

Mr. DILL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in line with the Senator's suggestion, I am mightily afraid our friend from Washington is going to get the radio bill in a jam here and cause it to fail of passage.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that there are other things that are more important in Congress to me than the mere passage of the radio bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. That bill is very important to the American people; the Senator is one of the leaders on whom we are relying, and I hope he is not going to throw aside the opportunity.

Mr. DILL. There are three or four days left; there is plenty of time, and we can recess later on.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I renew my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, what business has been transacted except speaking?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] introduced something for the RECORD.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is not business.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from California made some very appropriate and interesting remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. That was not business.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It was a mere idle remark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But does the filing of a mere paper constitute the transaction of business which warrants or justifies a call of the roll? I submit it does not.

Mr. DILL. It requires unanimous consent, and that constitutes business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk has been directed to call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Barkley	Glenn	Neely	Steiwer
Bingham	Goff	Oddie	Swanson
Bratton	Hale	Pine	Thomas, Idaho
Bruce	Hayden	Pittman	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Trammell
Caraway	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Vandenberg
Curtis	Kendrick	Sackett	Warren
Deneen	Keyes	Sheppard	Watson
Edge	King	Shortridge	Wheeler
Fess	McKellar	Smith
Glass	McMaster	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. COPELAND and Mr. EDWARDS answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that warrants issue for the arrest of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms is so ordered.

Mr. NEELY. I move the immediate consideration and adoption of the following order:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Whereas under the rules of the Senate a call of the Senate has been ordered; and

Whereas the following-named Senators are absent without leave of the Senate, to wit (their names to be filled in):

Whereas it is necessary to compel the attendance of said absent Senators in order that the Senate may proceed to the transaction of its business: Therefore it is Ordered, That the Sergeant at Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to compel the attendance on the Senate of said named absent Senators, unless they be ill; and it is further Ordered, That warrants for the arrest of said Senators be forthwith issued under the signature of the Presiding Officer, attested by the Secretary, and that the Sergeant at Arms be, and he hereby is, directed to execute such warrants forthwith by arresting each of said named absent Senators and bringing them, and each of them, before the bar of the Senate; and that he make due return to the Senate of the execution of said warrants; and that this order shall be continuing until fully executed unless otherwise ordered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I suggest that the attention of the Sergeant at Arms be called to the wording of this order, and that he be directed to execute the order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will be so directed by the Chair.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It does not mean that the absent Senators are merely to be requested to come but that they are to be compelled to come.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, may I invite the attention of the Chair to the fact that warrants should be issued at once by the Secretary or by the clerk. Unless they are issued, we know by past experience that the Sergeant at Arms will not make the arrests and will not bring in the absent Members.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that warrants are being prepared now.

Mr. NEELY (at 2 o'clock a. m.) Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. NEELY. Has the Sergeant at Arms reported any progress in arresting the absent Senators?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from West Virginia that the Sergeant at Arms is now out serving the warrants.

Mr. NORRIS (at 2.10 a. m.) entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. BROOKHART (at 2.12 a. m.) entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. BLAINE and Mr. BROUSSARD (at 2.15 a. m.) entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am glad that we have a quorum, and I regret that it was necessary to have some of the Senators who had gone home called from bed. I do not want to be responsible for keeping the Senate here, and, if those in charge of this measure want to make an agreement to vote to-morrow, I shall not object. So far as I am personally concerned, I will be very glad to stay and discuss the bill, for I assured some of the Senators that there would be no vote to-night on this bill, and I think that agreement ought to be kept. If it is desired, however, that a recess be taken in order that we may vote in the morning shortly after the Senate may meet, I shall interpose no objection to such an agreement. On the other hand, if Senators want to continue with the bill, I shall be very glad to proceed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, there was some disorder in the rear of the Chamber and some of us did not understand the Senator's proposition.

Mr. DILL. I say that earlier in the evening it was requested that we make some arrangement whereby we could have a vote to-morrow at some time. I did not want to do that, because I had some matters that I wanted to put in the RECORD, but I recognize the hour is late, and I do not want to be responsible for Senators being dragged out of bed.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator has already done that; they are being brought in now.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to going ahead, but, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to agree to a vote at any time after 11.30 a. m. So, if that be the desire, well and good; but if not, I shall continue the discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest that we vote at 3 o'clock this morning.

Mr. DILL. No; we can recess until 11 o'clock and then vote in the morning, if that be the desire; otherwise I shall feel called upon to keep my word with Senators to whom I said there would be no vote to-night on this bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it seems, then, that the Senator has told some of his friends who went home that they could go to bed, while he has left us to stay here all night; he was going to keep us up and let his friends sleep.

Mr. DILL. They were not particularly my friends.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am in favor now of going on.

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope that no Senator will ask unanimous consent to do anything, but let us hold the Senator to his speaking idea and transact no other business but that. I want to assure him in the outset there will be no consent given to anything else while I am here.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me suggest to the Senator that there have been two motions since the last call and a quorum may be called now.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all, because no business has transpired since the last call.

Mr. DILL. The Senator need not excite himself. It is a very simple matter to transact some business on this bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not getting excited. I am just advising the Senator of my willingness to fight this thing out.

Mr. DILL. Very well, we will stay. I merely made the statement because I did not want to take any further responsibility in that regard; but now that Senators want to stay, I will try to accommodate them, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HEFLIN. In other words, the Senator has got them up out of the water now; they are standing here shivering in the cold, and if they want to remain here he is willing that they should.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator means not out of the water, but out of bed. [Laughter.]

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I was attempting to discuss some phases of the reasons why we had kept the marines in Nicaragua during the period after they should have been withdrawn, when the Senator from West Virginia made his point of no quorum.

When the marines were withdrawn in 1925 there was a great deal of protest against American intervention.

We refused to state any choice as to candidates. Carlos Solorzano and Juan B. Sacasa were elected President and Vice President, by a vote of about 48,000 to 28,000. Chamorro and Salvador Castrillo, who had been so effective in trying to turn Nicaragua's resources, banks, and railways over to Americans, staged a coup d'état, and in January, 1926, Chamorro took over the Presidency after Vice President Sacasa had fled abroad. We refused to recognize him.

In October Chamorro "deposited" the Presidency with Sebastian Uriza after his friends had agreed to support him for the Presidency in 1928. The Congress brought together to elect an executive to fill out the unexpired term, on November, 11, 1926, elected Adolfo Diaz. As Dr. Isaac Joslin Cox states in Nicaragua and the United States:

"A more natural method would have been to permit the succession of the Vice President Sacasa * * *. A hint from the State Department after the abdication of Chamorro would have swept aside all technical pretexts and have established Sacasa as the constitutional executive for the unexpired term."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am going to ask unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that we vote upon the bill itself not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that is too long a time.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say I would just as soon make it 12 o'clock, but, as I understand—and the Senator from Utah will correct me if I am wrong—there are some amendments still to be offered to the bill, and it will probably take that length of time to dispose of them.

Mr. SMOOT. If every Senator here has the intention of offering amendments and talking on them, it would take the remainder of the day.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not mean to have unlimited debate on the amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Suppose one amendment here should lead to discussion up to 1 o'clock; then no other amendments could be offered.

Mr. WHEELER. I assume that would not be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether it would be or not. I would not want the bill in that condition.

Mr. WHEELER. Could it not be arranged so that we can take a vote upon the pending amendment immediately after we convene, and then consider the other amendments after that?

Mr. CURTIS. With a limitation on debate?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. What limitation would the Senator suggest?

Mr. WHEELER. Ten minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. If there were 20 amendments and there were 10 minutes debate on each, that would be 120 minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. With a final vote at 1 o'clock?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not agree to anything that is going to prevent amendments being offered to the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I am trying to arrange that. I do not want that situation to arise.

Mr. SMOOT. If 10 minutes are allowed for discussion on each amendment, it probably would arise.

Mr. WHEELER. I am proposing a final vote at 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. On what?

Mr. WHEELER. On the bill and all amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Without any further discussion on the amendments or the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. We can vote on the amendments and the bill and clean everything up.

Mr. WHEELER. I made that statement in the first place. My proposal is that there shall be a final vote on the bill at 1 o'clock p. m., and there will be a final vote on the amendment of the Senator from Washington at 11.15.

Mr. SMOOT. Without any further debate.

Mr. WHEELER. Without any further debate.

Mr. DILL. No.

Mr. WHEELER. That we recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning; then vote on the pending amendment at 11.15, and then take a final vote on the bill at 1 o'clock.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to a final vote on the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I want no misunderstanding about this.

Mr. DILL. I suggest, under the agreement, that debate be limited to five minutes. Otherwise, under the rules, it will be necessary to call a quorum.

Mr. CURTIS. We just had a quorum call.

Mr. DILL. I understand that, but I have been speaking for about five minutes. I hope the proposition may be to limit debate to five minutes on the bill and pending amendments. That would probably meet the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to fix the time at 1 o'clock, then allow discussion to run up until 12 o'clock, and then have five minutes allowed upon each amendment. That might take us to 1 o'clock, when we would have to vote on the bill, although a half dozen amendments might be pending which could not be offered to the bill. I say to the Senator there are amendments here that the committee must offer to the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let me make this suggestion: I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-day; that at 11.15 o'clock a. m. a vote be had upon the pending amendment; that then a final vote be had on the bill and all amendments pending or which may be offered to it at 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Without further debate.

Mr. CURTIS. Without further debate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Would not that place a Senator who desires to propose an individual amendment at a great disadvantage? He might absolutely be cut off without an opportunity to explain his amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. He would have from quarter after 11 o'clock until 1 o'clock.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Some Senator might get the floor and hold it the entire length of time.

Mr. CURTIS. We can incorporate in the agreement a provision that after 11.15 no Senator shall speak more than 10 minutes.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Not more than five minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; not more than five minutes.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have an amendment which I wish to propose; I will say that I have a recommendation for it from the engineers and the Secretary of War; and if I offered that amendment without any explanation it might not be adopted.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator would have five minutes under the suggestion made; would not that be enough?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That would be enough.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest an agreement in this form:

That the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock this morning; that at 11.15 o'clock a. m. a vote be had upon the pending amendment—the Nicaragua survey amendment—that after 11.15 debate shall be limited to five minutes on each amendment; no Senator shall be allowed to speak more than once; and that at 1 o'clock a final vote be had upon the bill and all amendments, pending or offered.

Mr. SMOOT. Not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. Not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. DILL. Before consent is given I want to be sure that I have an understanding that if the Nicaraguan joint resolution be not passed by the House, and signed by the President, the Senate conferees will not bring back this appropriation. I think that was the understanding.

Mr. CURTIS. That statement has twice been made on the floor.

Mr. DILL. I merely wanted to be sure of that.

Mr. WHEELER. That statement has been made several times.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have three amendments that I desire to offer to this bill. If these amendments should be accepted, they will take no time other than the time required to offer them. If objection is made to them, I desire to have some time.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator has five minutes.

Mr. KING. The Senator has five minutes on each one of them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Otherwise, I shall have to object. For one of my amendments five minutes would not suffice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is not the amendment to which the Senator has reference legislation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not legislation. It is a most important matter, recommended by the Budget and by the various departments of the Government. It affects the American Indians. I am not going to agree to any proposition that will take away my rights on the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me suggest that the Senator from Kansas modify his proposal by making an exception giving to the Senator from Oklahoma 10 minutes instead of 5 on his amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think these amendments will be accepted. They should be accepted. If they are not accepted I want time to present them. They are most important.

Mr. SMOOT. Are they the ones that the Senator presented to the committee?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Two of them are.

Mr. SMOOT. We could not accept those except by vote of the Senate. I am perfectly willing to have a vote of the Senate on those amendments, like any others.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, one of the amendments relates to a hospital recommended by the Indian Bureau, recommended by the Budget Bureau, passed by the House of Representatives, passed by this body, and then a difficulty arose in the conference committee on the regular Interior Department appropriation bill. This body receded, and the item is dead. I desire to reoffer that amendment; and I can not make any agreement now that will limit me in the presentation of the facts and figures that I have in favor of that amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not have any trouble in convincing the Senate in regard to that if we have once agreed to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is what I said, that there should not be any trouble about it; but there has been.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Oklahoma may safely assume that as kindly attention as the circumstances permit will be given to every one of his amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will say to the chairman of the committee that I am sure of that; but if we agree to a time to vote upon this proposition I shall be denied the opportunity to make any suggestions or offer the evidence that I have in support of my amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that the Budget Bureau and the President have recommended the hospital amendment since it was acted upon in the Senate. If so, I should not think there would be any objection at all to it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The only question is over the source of the funds.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senate has already acted upon it once.

Mr. NORRIS. And agreed to it.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the Senator desires that that hospital shall be built by the Government instead of out of the funds of the Indians; and all other hospitals in the same position as those that the Senator is asking for have been built out of the Indian funds.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Kansas. The Senator from Oklahoma evidently has an amendment that he is in earnest about, and he desires an opportunity to present it; and, of course, in all fairness he ought to have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. NORRIS. As long as we are getting an agreement that will permit a vote on the amendment that is pending here now, why should not the Senator from Oklahoma be allowed to present his amendments? Why not make an exception of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. I should be willing to make an exception; but he has 30 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have been here all night, waiting patiently to offer in good faith an amendment to this bill which I can not discuss in five minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator ought to have more time. I do not think anybody who has an amendment to offer in good faith ought to be deprived of reasonable time in which to present it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator about how much time he thinks he would need to present his views in support of the proposed amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is difficult to say, because questions might be propounded that would consume time. I had thought that it might take, under those conditions, 30 minutes. I am anxious to get a vote on the bill. I do not want to delay it for a moment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me make an appeal to my brethren here. It is quite obvious that unless this bill goes through quickly we will not get it back to the House in time to have action taken before adjournment. It does seem to me, therefore, that those who have amendments, no matter how important, ought to be willing to restrict the time within which to present their arguments, because if we take too long a time it is obvious that we will not pass the bill, and we will have to adjourn and will get nothing. I beg Senators who have amendments to bear in mind that phase of the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest that the Senator from Kansas, in his unanimous-consent proposal, allow the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Oklahoma, say, 15 minutes on their amendments, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. CURTIS. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Make it 20 minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. That is all right.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma is concerned, it is not a question of the Senate; it is a question of the House. I am perfectly willing to accept the hospital amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma and let it go to conference; but if we can not hold it in the conference I do not want him to feel that we have violated any understanding with him.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On that proposition I am going to make such a record here, when I get the time, that the Senator will not be willing that this body recede from that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to have the bill fail on that amendment or any other if I can help it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senators mentioned are given 20 minutes each on their amendments, we will still have time left. I therefore ask unanimous consent that we vote on the pending amendment not later than 11.15 a. m., that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] have not to exceed 20 minutes on his amendment, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] not to exceed 20 minutes on each of his amendments, and that we vote not later than 1.15 p. m.

Mr. NEELY. And that no other Member of the Senate speak more than five minutes.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to consent to almost any reasonable suggestion; but under that plan practically no other Senator will have any opportunity to offer an amendment or explain it. The Senator from Oklahoma has three amendments, as I understand. He will be allowed to speak 20 minutes on each one.

Mr. CURTIS. One of them will be accepted.

Mr. SMOOT. He will have 20 minutes on one, and 5 minutes on the other two.

Mr. NORRIS. That will give to the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Kentucky combined, if one amendment is accepted, an hour; so the time ought to be extended a little.

Mr. TRAMMELL. We only have a little over an hour.

Mr. CURTIS. I extended the time to 1.15, which would give another hour for the other Senators.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There are several committee amendments that have not been disposed of.

Mr. CURTIS. They will not require any discussion.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not know whether they will or not.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if this matter is not settled very soon I am going to insist on the regular order. It is useless to wait until 1 o'clock to-morrow to try to find out what we are going to do if everybody wants to stay here all night.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Nobody wants to stay here all night; but there are some Senators who do not want to be precluded from even offering an amendment and explaining it. Certain Senators insist on 20 minutes each or 15 minutes each; and I do not think a Senator who is willing to take only 5 minutes should be precluded from an opportunity of offering his amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. He ought not to be.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is all I am asking for—about five minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. There will be one hour after the other Senators have exhausted their time.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kansas if he will not make one more modification of his request for the purpose of providing five minutes for the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Five minutes for any Senator who offers an amendment. That is the fair way to do.

Mr. NEELY. That might make it impossible to vote at 1.30.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have an amendment that involves $14,000,000, and all I ask is five minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. By making it 1 o'clock we would have ample time to take care of all that is said about any amendment, and more, too. If Senators can confine themselves to five minutes, outside of the exceptions that have already been made, we can get through easily by 1 o'clock; and I do not think we ought to run beyond that time.

Mr. CURTIS. One fifteen.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is the proposition. Is there objection to it?

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recess until 11 o'clock a. m.; that there be a vote upon the pending amendment not later than 11.15; that then there be allowed to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] 20 minutes on one amendment and 5 minutes on each of the other two amendments; that there be not to exceed 20 minutes allowed to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], 5 minutes to the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], 5 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]——

Mr. SWANSON. Five minutes to me.

Mr. CURTIS. Five minutes to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and that we vote on the bill and all amendments pending and all amendments offered not later than 1.15 p. m. to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Why not make it 1 o'clock?

Mr. HEFLIN. One fifteen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into, and the Senate stands in recess until 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Out of the mysterious silences of our breasts, amid the varying currents of the world do we seek Thee, our most gracious Heavenly Father. O Thou who art the inspiration of all that is good and the glory of all that is beautiful, send forth Thy light, reminding us of our place and calling. Do Thou open the windows of our minds that we may receive the spirit and the love of truth, thus turning our weakness into strength. Undergird and uphold our firm belief in the ultimate triumph of the good, for nothing else in equal measure has ever taught us so much how to live. In every situation inspire us to think truly, to speak truly, and to live truly; then our daily lives shall be open books of great and noble creeds. Our prayer is made in the holy name of Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 12351. An act amending section 72 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 145), by changing the boundaries of the divisions of the southern district of California and terms of court for each division; and

H. R. 13857. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7028. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Utah with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado, Green, Bear or Yampa, the White, San Juan, and Dolores Rivers, and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested;

H. R. 11722. An act to establish a national military park at the battle field of Monocacy, Md.;

H. R. 12793. An act for the relief of Alonzo Durward Allen;

H. R. 13593. An act granting the consent of Congress to the villages of East Dundee and West Dundee, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a foot bridge across the Fox River between East Dundee and West Dundee, Ill.; and

H. R. 16878. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 264. An act for the relief of Margaret I. Varnum;

S. 2986. An act for the relief of Francis J. McDonald;

S. 3623. An act to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920;

S. 3940. An act granting certain public lands to the State of New Mexico for the use and benefit of the Eastern New Mexico Normal School, and for other purposes;

S. 4274. An act for the relief of James Evans;

S. 5030. An act for the relief of Eva Broderick;

S. 5045. An act authorizing Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain from East Alburg, Vt., to West Swanton, Vt.;

S. J. Res. 201. Joint resolution restricting the Federal Power Commission from issuing or approving any permits or licenses affecting the Colorado River or any of its tributaries, except the Gila River.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4858) entitled "An act for the relief of T. L. Young and C. T. Cole," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CAPPER, Mr. NYE, and Mr. STEPHENS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

OSAGE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2360) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906," entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma and for other purposes," and ask unanimous consent to agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, what are the amendments?

Mr. LEAVITT. They have been in the RECORD for two or three days.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Then I object if I can not get the information.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I move to agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2360 and agree to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. R. 14659, an act to provide for the appointment of two district judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14659) entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York" having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1, and also recede from its amendment to the title.

GEO. S. GRAHAM,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
F. H. LAGUARDIA,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. E. BORAH,
C. W. WATERMAN,
T. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14659) submitted the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate receded from its amendment and the bill stands agreed to by the conferees as it passed the House.

GEO. S. GRAHAM,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
F. H. LAGUARDIA,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CUSTOMS APPEALS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up another conference report, on the bill (H. R. 6687) to change the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6687) to change the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

GEO. S. GRAHAM,
SAMUEL C. MAJOR,
ANDREW J. HICKEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

G. W. NORRIS,
C. W. WATERMAN,
T. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 6687 submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate receded from its amendments, and the bill stands agreed to by the conferees as it passed the House.

GEO. S. GRAHAM,
SAMUEL C. MAJOR,
ANDREW J. HICKEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

GROVER M. MOSCOWITZ

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, reported from the Judiciary Committee, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 431) providing for an investigation of Grover M. Moscowitz, United States district judge for the eastern district of New York

Whereas certain statements against Grover M. Moscowitz, United States district judge for the eastern district of New York, have been transmitted by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to the Judiciary Committee: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That EARL C. MICHENER, J. BANKS KURTZ, C. ELLIS MOORE, ROYAL H. WELLER, and HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, being a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into the official conduct of Grover M. Moscowitz, United States district judge for the eastern district of New York, and to report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House whether in their opinion the said Grover M. Moscowitz has been guilty of any acts which in contemplation of the Constitution are high crimes or misdemeanors requiring the interposition of the constitutional powers of the House; and that the said special committee have power to hold meetings in the city of Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and to send for persons and papers, to administer the customary oaths to witnesses, all process to be signed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives under its seal and be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House or his special messenger; to sit during the sessions of the House until adjournment sine die of the Seventieth Congress and thereafter until said inquiry is completed, and report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of the Seventy-first Congress.

SEC. 2. That said special committee be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as they may deem necessary, and all expenses incurred by said special committee, including the expenses of such committee when sitting in or outside the District of Columbia, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman of said committee: Provided, however, That the total expenditures authorized by this resolution shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, the Rules of the House of Representatives specifically require that a resolution of investigation shall be referred to the Rules Committee of the House. All the Speakers have strictly adhered to that proposition. Now, if this resolution is allowed to go through by unanimous consent the trouble that will arise is this: There are several other important committees of the House that desire the right to report resolutions of investigation where they have jurisdiction over the subject matter involved. In order to maintain the prestige of the rules of the House and the proper procedure of the House I shall be constrained to object to this going through by unanimous consent. But if the Speaker considers it important enough so that it can not wait over another day, I do not feel that the Rules Committee has been slighted if he recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. But as far as allowing it to go by unanimous consent I can not do so, and I notified the gentleman from Pennsylvania last week that if another resolution of a similar character was called up I should object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish it to be taken that I assent to the proposition made by the chairman of the Committee on Rules. I still adhere to the view which I have held and which I expressed on the floor of the House about the reference of everything pertaining to impeachment matters to the Committee on the Judiciary, but as the Chair has recognized me to make the motion to suspend the rules, I do so now. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution which has just been read. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York to 20 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a couple of minutes. The purpose of this resolution is to make a preliminary investigation. The committee has not come to any conclusion upon the subject of the conduct of this judge, but as there are only a few days left before the House dies, it is necessary that this committee, if it is to do its work and be efficient, should be continued beyond the expiration of this present session of Congress. This resolution is simply to authorize an examination of witnesses under oath and to preserve the committee in being after the final adjournment of the House.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is this resolution similar to the one which we passed a few days ago in respect Judge Winslow?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is exactly the same, except that the committee will consist of five instead of seven members, owing to a necessity among the membership of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am in sympathy with the resolution; but I call this situation to the attention of the gentleman. When we adjourn does the gentleman understand that the Committee on the Judiciary will be appointed before next December?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no understanding about that at all.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If it is not going to be appointed—if, as I understand, only the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations, and a few others are to be appointed, and this investigation is begun by this subcommittee, that subcommittee, under the resolution, will be required to report back to the full committee, which will not be in existence. If it should be found that this particular judge is not worthy of being continued on the bench, then there is no Judiciary Committee to which to report. I suggest to the gentleman that he try to have the Committee on the Judiciary appointed at least on the reconvening of Congress in the special session. Otherwise we might have a judge on the bench for six or seven months who, the subcommittee believes, should not be there.

Mr. GRAHAM. I entirely agree with the gentleman as to his suggestion about the committee, but that matter is not now before the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. No; but I call it to the gentleman's attention.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman explain to the House how these proceedings were brought about, and whether or not the charges against Judge Moscowitz are similar to the charges against Judge Winslow?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; I can not go into that explanation now.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, this is indeed a very important resolution, and I demanded a second in order that I might have an opportunity to briefly explain its import to the House. I am not opposed to the resolution. When these charges were made against this judge of the eastern district, he courageously, as a judge who is fearless and honest, met the issue and demanded of this House a complete and thorough investigation.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. In a few moments. Furthermore, he said that he would not hide behind any technical considerations whatsoever, but would give the fullest cooperation to any committee of this House. He felt that the value of his service in the future, the dignity and honor of his office, and the respect due to the judiciary in general, would be seriously impaired unless there be a thorough and quick investigation of these charges. As far as I am personally concerned, as a Member of Congress from the district where this judge presides, I personally feel that these charges are palpably and manifestly false. They spring from the mind of a disgruntled, dissatisfied litigant, and if the Committee on the Judiciary is going to occupy its time with the consideration of appeals of that sort from dissatisfied and chagrined litigants, then that committee will not be able to function properly, and it will be doing nothing more than listening to and considering such appeals.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Not until I have made a brief statement. What is the situation in this case? Here we have the bankruptcy of a man named Levine, in Brooklyn. Just a few days before he was adjudged a bankrupt, he took out of his estate $100,000. What did he do with it? It was the duty of the receiver or the trustee and those representing the court and the creditors to find out.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Why does the gentleman interpose an objection, when the judge himself has written a letter asking that the investigation be made, and when only an investigation will clear his name?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that after this is all over and the judge has been cleared we will never know any more about why these charges arose or whence they came, and I want now, before the event, to tell the House something of this situation, in order that the House may know it thoroughly and be guided in its future conduct in matters of this sort.

This judge is entitled to some public explanation of these charges. We only hear one side. There should be an investigation, undoubtedly, but I am going to see to it that this judge has some explanation made now, so that you might suspend your judgment as to his guilt or innocence. Not only you gentlemen are involved in the House but the whole country is involved and the dignity of the Federal court is involved. We ought to know something about this situation. When we go back to our homes after March 4 we will only have in our minds the idea that this judge was attacked. When any man attacks a Federal judge it is just like hitting an opponent when his hands are tied behind his back. He can not come here and defend himself. Some one must defend him in his stead.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Possibly the gentleman does not know, but this judge was acquainted with some of these charges, most of them, before they were presented to the House; and he was given 24 hours in which to ask for an investigation himself, and he failed to do it.

Mr. CELLER. I hardly think it is incumbent on a member of the Federal judiciary to take a challenge of that sort from a Member of the House. He says he is in favor of the investigation and wants the investigation to proceed with all due speed.

Now, let us look into this matter of the $100,000 which was filched from the creditors. The bankrupt committed suicide. His sons were summoned for examination. They were two law students, examined by a special commissioner appointed under the bankruptcy statutes, section 21A. Let me give you something of what transpired before that special commissioner. These two young men were law students, and knew the nature of an oath and had knowledge of their father's estate. They were the logical persons to give testimony to aid the administration of the bankrupt's estate, especially since the bankrupt was dead. Instead of aiding, these young men hindered and obstructed the course of administration. They first disregarded the summons to appear. Then when threatened with contempt and did appear before the special commissioner, Judge Isaac Franklin Russell, they either were evasive or lied. The special commissioner was a former judge of special sessions in New York. I believe he is a trustee of New York University, a very distinguished jurist. Here is a sample of the contemptuous conduct of these young law students: The commissioner asked this young man Levine, "Where were you on Friday night?" He answered, "I do not remember." Then he asked him, "What time did you get home Friday night?" His answer was, "I do not remember." The next question was, "Did you make deposits for your father in 1927?" The answer was, "I do not remember." The next question was, "Did you write out a check for $20,000 on your father's account?" The answer was, "I don't remember." To practically every important question put to this young law student he said, "I don't remember." In that way he thwarted the purpose of the bankruptcy examination. He thus encouraged certification of contempt charges.

Now, what would you, as a special commissioner, what would you, as a judge of the United States district court, do to men of this type?

This judge as special commissioner certified these young men for contempt because their conduct undoubtedly was contumacious and contemptuous of the dignity and honor of the court; and when the proceeding came before the district court he accepted the conclusion of law and fact of the special commissioner, a distinguished judge, and found these boys in contempt. That is why they come here now, because they were found in contempt because of their contumacious conduct, and make this charge against this judge. Thus in examining these charges, consider, please, who made them. And furthermore——

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I understand you are not opposing the investigation. You want it?

Mr. CELLER. Yes; but I want this House to understand something of the facts.

Mr. SNELL. You are not trying the man?

Mr. CELLER. No; I am not trying the man. I want to give you a bird's-eye view of this matter—give you something of my view, namely, that these charges are manifestly false and should not ground any action of reasonable men.

Mr. SNELL. Is not the gentleman——

Mr. CELLER. I refuse to yield further.

Furthermore, gentlemen, there was a composition or settlement with creditors in this case. In proceedings before the United States district court in which this judge presided, in addition to Judge Isaac Franklin Russell, the special commissioner, there was Judge Edwin L. Garvin, a former United States district judge, who was predecessor of this very judge as trustee. In addition to that we had a county judge there, Reuben L. Haskell, who represented these Levine brothers, and another lawyer by the name of Duberstein, who likewise represented the boys; and in this composition agreement it was agreed by all parties that there would be a settlement, and on the strength of that settlement the boys were to be purged of their contempt. In other words, all parties interested requested Judge Moscowitz to purge these boys of contempt because they had finally agreed to help the creditors. The judge complied with the request.

Now, mind you, if this judge is guilty of any of the charges in that palpably false affidavit by this chagrined and dissatisfied and disgruntled litigant, do you not say there must have been a conspiracy between Judge Russell and the Hon. Edwin L. Garvin, trustee of the estate, and Judge Reuben L. Haskell to hunt and hound these young men? It is quite inconceivable that all these judges were arrayed and banded together to drive these youths. It is utterly impossible of conception to any reasoning and reasonable man that all these judges were in some sort of conspiracy to hurt these two lads who come here now and complain.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is it not a fact that you are stating to the House matters which are not before the committee or which have not been presented to the committee, and in addition to that the point in this case, it would appear now, is this: That whether other judges participated or not, there was undoubtedly a conspiracy among a group of lawyers to rob an estate. Now, the question is: Was the judge acquainted with the facts and did he participate in that conspiracy? That is the inquiry the committee desires to make.

Mr. CELLER. I will say to the gentleman unqualifiedly, no. I have known this judge for many years, and I believe him to be an upright and honest judge, and in order that he might get fair consideration, not only by the Members of this House but by the public in general, I make this statement—because, as I said before, after this blows over you will hear nothing more of the matter, and the man stands accused and condemned prior to trial in the mind of the public, and even after trial usually the public prints only carry a very small notice with reference to the established innocence of the man previously condemned.

For that reason I come here in the House, under my right as a Member of the House, to proclaim what I know about this case and repeat what I said before the Judiciary Committee yesterday. As to whether there was some sort of a conspiracy or banding together upon the part of the attorneys to mulct an estate I will say this: To my mind the fees allowed in that estate were large, larger, undoubtedly, than should have been allowed, but any of you gentlemen who are familiar with bankruptcy practice must be aware of the fact that the referee in bankruptcy usually fixes the fees and not the judge. I am of the opinion, although I am not certain about it, that the referee fixed the fees in this case, but if the referee did not fix them in this case there is nothing in the affidavit and there is nothing in the proof brought before the Judiciary Committee that this judge had anything whatsoever to do with the fixing of the fees, and for that reason I say unqualifiedly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the distinguished chairman of this committee, that there is nothing remotely approaching guilt on the part of this judge with reference to the fixing of these fees or any other fees. This I will say, however, that the United States district judges, not only in New York and Brooklyn but elsewhere, are all victims of a very vicious system whereby Federal patronage in the form of receiverships and special masterships is parceled out along political lines. That is the difficulty. If you are going to investigate, conduct a general investigation. Do not fire your ammunition upon one judge in Brooklyn, and do not train your guns particularly on him. Investigate them all, because if he is guilty in that regard they are all guilty in that regard, with reference to parceling out receiverships in return for political favors. That is the only sin, if there is a sin, as far as Judge Moscowitz is concerned. I do not believe, however, that that is indeed a sin because it has been done for the last 100 years, ever since we have had a Federal judiciary.

That vice is inherent in our Federal judiciary system, and you may not be able to prove that any one particular judge or any array of judges are necessarily guilty of moral turpitude or dereliction of duty because they have followed the precedents that have been ingrained into the Federal judiciary system for these last 100 years, namely, to recognize political friends and favorites in receiverships.

Now, gentlemen, I ask you, and I ask the public throughout the country, to suspend judgment upon this man until he has been heard. Do not prejudge him. That is why I stand up here this morning. That is why I demanded a second on this resolution, and for no other reason did I demand a second. I thank you.

The gravamen of these charges is that this judge permitted a group of lawyers to milk an estate by a corrupt use of the power of finding a man in contempt. That a charge of contempt was more or less trumped up against these young Levines to force them to find property to bring into the bankruptcy estate in order to settle with creditors and provide fat fees for lawyers. The charges are not backed up by any evidence of probative value. All we have is inference and innuendo in an affidavit from one of these Levines. If a judge must be put to all this trouble and difficulty on such grounds, I say we had better shut up shop.

I shall not oppose the resolution.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The time is in the control of the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from New York has three minutes remaining.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] three minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am not going to address myself to the facts, as they were properly stated by the gentleman on this side. We are not here to try Judge Moscowitz, yet I, for one, am not going to ask you not to investigate.

The point in my mind—and a very serious point—is, how these proceedings were brought about. It seems to me that they are not founded upon any law or upon any rule of the House. The mere filing of an affidavit by an individual, as in this case, should not result in putting the machinery of this House into such form as to bring before it a resolution of investigation. The judiciary, in my opinion, should be thoroughly safeguarded, so that if a charge is made, it should come from some one in authority or some one of responsibility. Otherwise a bad precedent is established, and if such a precedent is followed, then all that is necessary in order to bring about a procedure of this kind is to have some person who happens to feel he has not received the judgment he expected to receive, file an affidavit with the Speaker, and the machinery is then put into operation.

I contend that that, as a matter of law, is unconstitutional. I further contend that this is not a privileged resolution and that there is in reality nothing before the House for that body to consider in this connection. I tell you, gentlemen, this resolution, which seeks to have the Judiciary Committee function in an investigation against Judge Moscowitz, was not filed by any bar association, nor by any Member of Congress, but was filed by an individual.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. This affidavit was filed with the Speaker of the House and was backed by a Member of Congress.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. But the Member of Congress himself does not make the charges. The Member of Congress in this case was simply a messenger boy for somebody in his county to bring the affidavit from the county of Kings, N. Y., and file it with the Speaker of this House.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. But the Member of Congress lent his name to the proceedings.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If a Member of the Congress will stand up here and tell me he is sponsoring these charges or that he makes the accusations, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am sponsoring these charges, I am making these accusations, and I stand responsible for them. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Since the gentleman from New York is willing to carry the burden of the charge, and says that he is making these accusations and stands responsible for them, far be it from me to question him any further. Let him carry the burden.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL PARKWAY

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 15524) for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. What has become of our unfinished business under the rule of yesterday?

The SPEAKER. It is pending, and the motion may be made at any time. It is in order, but it is in the discretion of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $7,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for acquiring and developing, except as in this section otherwise provided, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital," as amended, such lands in the States of Maryland and Virginia as are necessary and desirable for the park and parkway system of the National Capital in the environs of Washington. Such funds shall be appropriated as required for the expeditious, economical, and efficient development and completion of the following projects:

(a) The George Washington Memorial Parkway, to include the shores of the Potomac from Mount Vernon to a point above the Great Falls on the Virginia side, except within the city of Alexandria, and from Fort Washington to a similar point above the Great Falls on the Maryland side, except within the District of Columbia, including Analostan Island, and including the protection and preservation of the natural scenery of the Gorge and the Great Falls of the Potomac and the acquisition of that portion of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal: Provided, That the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, authorized by the act approved May 23, 1928, shall, upon completion, if constructed on the river route, be maintained and administered as a part of said parkway, as provided in said act for other lands acquired by the said commission. Said commission is authorized to occupy such lands belonging to the United States as may be necessary for the development and protection of said parkway and to accept the donation to the United States of any other lands by it deemed desirable for inclusion in said parkway. As to any lands in Maryland or Virginia along or adjacent to the shores of the Potomac within the proposed limits of the parkway that would involve great expense for their acquisition and are held by said commission not to be essential to the proper carrying out of the project, the acquisition of said lands shall not be required, upon a finding of the commission to that effect. Said parkway shall include a highway from Fort Washington to the Great Falls on the Maryland side of the Potomac: Provided, That no money shall be expended by the United States for this project until the National Capital Park and Planning Commission shall have received definite commitments from the States of Maryland and Virginia, or political subdivisions thereof, or from other responsible sources for one-half the cost of acquiring the lands in its judgment necessary for said project, other than lands now belonging to the United States or donated to the United States, and one-half the cost of construction of necessary highways on the Maryland side of the Potomac, and any necessary highway to connect the Highway Bridge, the Arlington Memorial Bridge, and the Key Bridge on the Virginia side: Provided, That in the discretion of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, upon agreement duly entered into by the States of Maryland and Virginia or any political subdivision thereof to reimburse the United States as hereinafter provided, it may advance the full amount of the funds necessary for the acquisition of the lands referred to in this paragraph, such agreement providing for reimbursement to the United States to the extent of one-half of the cost thereof without interest within not more than five years from the date of any such expenditure.

(b) The extension of Rock Creek Park into Maryland as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the State of Maryland or any political subdivisions thereof, for the preservation of the flow of water in Rock Creek, and in the discretion of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission the extension of the Anacostia park system up the valley of Indian Creek, the Northwest Branch, and Sligo Creek, as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the State of Maryland or any political subdivisions thereof: Provided, That in the acquisition of lands for the purposes of this paragraph one-third of the cost thereof shall be borne by the United States and two-thirds by the State of Maryland or other public or private source: Provided further, That in the discretion of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission upon agreement duly entered into by the State of Maryland or any political subdivision thereof to reimburse the United States, as hereinafter provided, it may advance the full amount of the funds necessary for the acquisition of the lands referred to in this paragraph, such agreement providing for reimbursement to the United States to the extent of two-thirds of the cost thereof without interest within not more than five years from the date of any such expenditure. The title to the lands acquired hereunder shall vest in the United States, but the development and administration thereof shall be under such local authority as shall be approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and in accordance with regulations approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The United States is not to share in the cost of construction of roads in the areas mentioned in this paragraph, except if and as Federal-aid highways, but such roads, if constructed, shall be with the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and in accordance with plans duly approved by said commission.

SEC. 2. Whenever it becomes necessary to acquire by condemnation proceedings any lands in the States of Virginia or Maryland for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, such proceedings shall conform to the laws of the State affected in force at that time in reference to Federal condemnation proceedings. No payment shall be made for any such lands until the title thereto in the United States shall be satisfactory to the Attorney General of the United States.

SEC. 3. Whenever the use of the Forts Washington, Foote, and Hunt, or either of them, is no longer deemed necessary for military purposes they shall be turned over to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, without cost, for administration and maintenance as a part of the said George Washington Memorial Parkway.

SEC. 4. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated the sum of $16,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the acquiring of such lands in the District of Columbia as are necessary and desirable for the suitable development of the National Capital park, parkway, and playground system, in accordance with the provisions of the said act of June 6, 1924, as amended, except as in this section otherwise provided. Such funds shall be appropriated in the fiscal year 1931 and thereafter as required for the expeditious, economical, and efficient accomplishment of the purposes of this act, and shall be reimbursed to the United States from any funds in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia, as follows, to wit: $1,000,000 on the 1st day of January, 1931, and $1,000,000 on the 1st day of January each year thereafter until the full amount expended hereunder is reimbursed without interest.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. ELLIOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOAD-LINE LEGISLATION

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report of the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report see proceedings of the House of February 26, 1929, p. 4450.)

Mr. ABERNETHY and Mr. WHITE of Maine rose.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the point of order that the report contains matter not the subject of difference between the two Houses, and I call the Chair's attention to section 9, which says this:

The Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a comprehensive study of load-line legislation in the coastwise and intercoastal trade on the Great Lakes, and all types of vessels, and shall submit his report to the Houses of Congress in the month of December, 1929, accompanying such report with tentative draft of a bill to effectuate the recommendations embodied in said report.

I am a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and was one of the proponents of the exceptions that were contained in section 9 as the bill passed the House. I was not on the conference committee, but I feel that the conference committee has gone out of its way, and by an agreement have stricken out section 9 as it passed the House and have inserted section 9 as I have heretofore read. I want the Chair and the House to hear this. The new section proposes that the Secretary of Commerce shall make a comprehensive study of this matter and prepare a bill and report it to the December, 1929, session of the Congress. Neither the Senate nor the House ever considered any such thing, and it does seem to me that this is entirely foreign to what either House considered. We are asking somebody who is not even a Member of the Congress to prepare a bill and send it back here for us to pass it at the next Congress, and I cite, Mr. Speaker, in support of the point of order, House Manual, paragraph 540; Hinds' Precedents, sections 6409, 6410, 6414, 6416; and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixty-second Congress, first session, page 7427, and Sixty-third Congress, page 5208.

Now, Mr. Speaker, because of the legislative situation here, it does seem to me that when the conferees bring back matter entirely foreign to what either House has considered it is going far afield.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, the bill as it came from the Senate dealt only with vessels in foreign trade. As passed by the House it dealt not only with vessels in foreign trade but it dealt specifically with vessels in the coastwise trade, making exception, however, of certain vessels in the coastwise trade which otherwise would be within the terms of the bill, and excluding also vessels on the Great Lakes, whether foreign or coastwise.

The conferees have omitted from the bill the House provision which covered coastwise vessels, and we have requested the Secretary of Commerce to make a study of load-line legislation with respect to coastwise vessels and with respect to vessels in trade on the Great Lakes, and report to Congress and transmit to Congress a tentative draft of a bill. It seems to the conferees that a request for the recommendation as to these matters was clearly within the province of the conferees.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman does not insist that the action of the House included anything with reference to the Great Lakes—I think that is foreign matter.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, first, with respect to the suggestion by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], I wish to state that the amendment to the Senate bill adopted by the House did in general terms not only include coastwise, but also vessels operating on the Great Lakes, by the amendment striking out the word "foreign" in the first section, and by an amendment striking out the word "salt" and inserting the word "sea," so as to make it "sea water" instead of "salt water." With the exception of section 9, which is in controversy, the House bill made the load line law applicable to all vessels of over 250 tons, whether they were in the foreign trade or the coastwise trade or on the Great Lakes.

Section 9 excludes from the provisions of the act vessels operating exclusively on the Great Lakes, still leaving within the provisions of the act vessels on the Great Lakes which go into the Atlantic Ocean.

It also excluded from the provisions of the act certain types of coastwise vessels, to wit, barges which would otherwise come within the provisions of the law, and lumber schooners operating between points in the United States and contiguous territory.

Now, the House yielded on that amendment. In other words, the conferees agreed to an amendment striking out section 9, with an amendment, which is now in the conference report and which deals with the identical vessels which were dealt with in the original section 9, which was a House amendment. Instead of applying the load line to all vessels in coastwise and Great Lakes trade, except those named in section 9, it strikes out section 9 with an amendment which directs the Secretary of Commerce to make a study of the application of the load line to these classes of vessels and make a recommendation to the next Congress.

It is germane not only to the subject matter in the bill, but to the specific matters dealt with in section 9, to which this is an amendment. I think it is clearly not subject to a point of order.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I differ with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS]. It seems to me that the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate are attempting here to write a new bill. I have in my hand the original Senate bill as it passed the Senate and the House bill as it passed the House. The House put in the bill section 9, exempting the Great Lakes from the provisions of the act. The conferees are attempting to write a new bill and put into the conference report new matter that they did not have any authority to do under the Senate or the House bill. I claim that the conference report is clearly out of order. I think that matter of this kind and of this importance, that takes in the great interests of shipping on the Great Lakes, ought to be considered by a committee before we attempt to write a law on this subject. I do not think the conferees ought to attempt to write a law here until it has been considered by the proper committee.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, a question has been raised as to whether there was anything about the Great Lakes in either the House or the Senate bill. The bill as it passed the Senate provides for a foreign voyage by sea. A decision of the United States Supreme Court holds in terms that the Great Lakes, within the contemplation of the navigation laws of the United States, are at least for certain purposes seas, and that a voyage on the Great Lakes is a voyage by sea, and a foreign voyage by sea, of course, therefore, may be a voyage from a port in the United States to a port in Canada on the Great Lakes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. We do not question but that the Great Lakes are inland seas, but the question that we are raising is the fact that the conferees are attempting to write new matter into the conference report, and it seems to me that it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I contend that the Senate bill applied to a foreign voyage upon the Great Lakes. The House bill excluded the Great Lakes from the application of the load line law either in voyages between ports of the United States or to any foreign port. The conferees have stricken from the bill the reference to the Great Lakes, except as we have provided for a study of the load-line legislation on the Great Lakes, as in the coastwise trade, and it seems to me clear that what we have done falls within the extremities of the House and Senate bills.

Mr. CHALMERS. The conferees have stricken out the House amendment, section 9, and have written a new amendment that is not in either the Senate bill or the House bill.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. It was not in either bill in precise language, but the subject of load lines upon the Great Lakes was covered by the Senate bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, the conferees have agreed upon and report another amendment to section 1 of the bill. In other words, we receded on the House amendment striking out the word "foreign" with certain amendment to the same section specifically "excepting the Great Lakes" from the provisions of this bill. If the other is new matter, this is new matter also.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. The gentleman does not claim, because I know he is a good parliamentarian, that you can strike out the section put in in the House and write a new section in place of it which has not been considered by the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I say that you can strike out a section with a germane amendment in lieu, and that is what we have done.

Mr. CHALMERS. I claim that the conferees have put in extraneous, outside matter.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, it is a little difficult in discussing this report to ignore the statement of the conferees, although under the parliamentary rules the statement is not subject to the point of order. It is certainly an innovation that the conferees should have the assurance to adopt a set of resolutions and report them to the House laying down the future policy of the Government. However, that is not subject to the point of order.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] in my judgment is entirely correct in his point of order. The conferees, when they took up the amendment of the House to the Senate bill, did not have before them the entire bill. They are not authorized to report back amendments simply because they are germane to the bill. They must be germane to the amendment for which they are to be substituted. That is to say, the conferees on this bill, when they were considering section 9, could only agree upon an amendment to section 9 which would be germane to section 9 and within the limits of disagreement. Section 9, as it passed the House, simply excluded vessels on the Great Lakes and other schooners and barges from the operation of this law. The amendment that is agreed upon by the conferees is not germane to that section 9. It brings in matters that were not in disagreement. It brings in new matter entirely. That is to say, it directs the Secretary of Commerce to take certain action. There is nothing in this section as passed by the House about any activity by the Secretary of Commerce. There is nothing in section 9 as it passed the House about any investigation of the subject by anybody, and hence the provision of the conferees directing an investigation of an important question with a report at a specified time, is not germane to section 9 and was not within the scope of the work of the conferees, and the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, one bill provided for a load line for ships in foreign voyages, exclusively. The bill as it passed the House included the coastwise trade, but by section 9 excluded certain types of vessels from coastwise load-line legislation, which was one of the points in difference. What the conferees did was, in place of excluding them from coastwise legislation, to direct a certain official, to wit, the Secretary of Commerce, to give us information as to the coastwise proposition generally, which was in difference, and whether there should be distinctions of certain types of vessels, which is expressed in the substitute for section 9, in regulating coastwise legislation. Thereupon all coastwise load-line legislation was eliminated by the conferees. It is both pertinent to the section and to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair realizes the gravity of outlawing a conference report at this stage of the session, but the Chair is called upon to decide whether the conferees have exceeded their power in putting in the amendment referred to. Section 9 of the House amendment provides:

SEC. 9. This act shall not apply to vessels operating exclusively on the Great Lakes or to barges otherwise coming within the provisions of this act or to lumber schooners operating to and from territory contiguous to the United States.

The Senate disagreed to that.

The conferees have brought in an amendment directing the Secretary of Commerce to make a comprehensive study of those lines. The Chair can not see in either the Senate bill or the House amendment any proposition that would direct the Secretary of Commerce to make an investigation. The House evidently never thought of it, and the Senate evidently never thought of it. While it might be vaguely germane to the purposes of the bill, the Chair thinks it is entirely new matter, never contemplated by either body. The Chair thinks the conferees exceeded their authority. Therefore the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

RADIO CENTER AT BOLLING FIELD

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13931, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13931, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill title and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, District of Columbia.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am now advised that these items that were added by the Senate have come to Congress with the approval of the department and with the approval of the Budget, and have been reported to the House by the proper committee. In these closing days we have to cut some corners. I shall not object to the consideration of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

Amend the title.

BATTLE FIELD OF MONOCACY, MD.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11722, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11722, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill by title and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11722) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Monocacy, Md.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

Amend the title.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 8305.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following report of the Committee on Military Affairs:

[H. Rept. 2564, pt. 2, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. MORIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 8305):

H. R. 8305 should not be agreed to because of serious objections to the measure. As Congress under the Constitution has unlimited power in the disposition of public property, no court could reform or relieve the Government from a foolish or unwise contract directed by Congress itself relative to the disposition of public property. Hence this contract should be clearly understood and carefully studied, as once enacted into law the Government is without redress.

In preparing the following information for the House, data and information from the War Department, Federal Power Commission, and others in various official documents submitted to Congress and in hearings before various committees are referred to for facts and figures so that Congress may have the benefit of information from official sources.

THE PROPOSAL HAS BEEN REJECTED FIVE TIMES

It is interesting to note that in reporting H. R. 8305 favorably that, of the 21 members of the Committee on Military Affairs only 12 were actually present, and of these only 10, not a majority, voted for a favorable report. This is especially significant in view of the fact that since the proposal has been before Congress it has been rejected by congressional committees on five different occasions, first by the Joint Congressional Committee, once by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, and three times by the House Military Committee.

AN UNWISE CONTRACT

This report states my objections to the pending measure and discusses each objection. I also offer a substitute bill which, if accepted, will serve all the purposes of Muscle Shoals, be in accord with the views expressed by Secretary of Agriculture Jardine (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1927, p. 1042), will do no violence to the national policy expressed in the Federal power act, avoid favoritism, and require no further appropriations for additions to the Muscle Shoals project.

Under the bill as drafted the rights of the Government and the lessee are in sharp contrast. The obligations of the Government are fixed and determined, the obligations of the lessee are vague and shadowy. There are no provisions protecting the rights and interests of the Government, while the rights and interests of the lessee are fixed and determined.

For example, assuming that within the first 10 years the Government performed all of its agreements as to the construction of Dam No. 3 and Cove Creek Dam at a cost estimated to be $88,576,222, the lessee during all that period would have paid to the United States only the limited rentals accruing during the first 10 years of the contract, i. e., $200,000 for 6 years and $1,250,000 per year for the next 4 years, a total of $7,200,000, this being the rental for Dam No. 2 and other existing property. No rentals for Dam No. 3 would accrue until after its completion. In exchange for this payment of $7,200,000 during the first 10 years of the contract the lessee would have available for its use or sale the total present power output of the existing hydroelectric and steam plants, for which a contract can be entered into bringing an average return of $2,000,000 annually, or $20,000,000. There is no legally enforceable requirement that the lessee make any relatively large investment in properties passing to the United States in the event of termination for default. The maximum amount required is but $10,000,000. Hence, the lessee may commit any gross and willful default after 10 years of operation and legally escape with several million dollars profit without recourse by the Government.

In the light of sound business procedure, which should govern the administration of public property the same as if it were privately owned, no board of directors of a private corporation with due regard to the interest of its stockholders would seriously consider imposing obligations upon the corporation that are sought to be placed on the United States by the terms of the Air Nitrates Corporation offer.

OBJECTIONS

The proposed lease is unsatisfactory and inadequate for the following reasons:

1. National defense does not demand nor justify the further expenditure of public funds, approximating $88,576,222, for new dams, power plants, and power facilities at Muscle Shoals. (For estimates of cost see H. Doc. No. 185, 70th Cong., pp. 77–99.)

2. The lease contains no binding guaranty to engage in quantity production of fertilizer. It assumes no obligation to produce fertilizer at competitive prices. The company engages to manufacture fertilizer only on condition that it makes a profit. Failure to manufacture fertilizer in commercial quantities, at competitive prices, with or without profit, would not forfeit the lease.

3. The lessee will be the exclusive beneficiary of tremendous blocks of power for its private use developed at public expense, free of restrictions and regulations of the water power act. This is a subsidy favorable to one corporation engaged in business in competition with other citizens and corporations.

4. The contract proposes inadequate payments for power and for valuable properties for private use and private gain, amounting to about 2½ per cent annually without obligation that it will be used for fertilizer manufacture or made available for public service.

5. While the United States must agree to spend an amount estimated at $88,576,222 additional on Muscle Shoals in order to accept the contract, under the recapture clause, it must spend the further sum of $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 to recover its properties if fertilizer production is suspended because of failure of the lessee to produce it successfully.

The proposed expenditures to be made under the bill H. R. 8305 are taken from War Department estimates, House of Representatives Document No. 185, Seventieth Congress, first session, pages 77 and 99.]

OBJECTIONS DISCUSSED

1. National defense does not demand nor justify the further expenditure of public funds, estimated by Government engineers at $88,576,222 for new dams, power plants, and power facilities at Muscle Shoals. (For estimates of cost see H. Doc. No. 185, 70th Cong., pp. 77 and 99.)

Confronted with the desire, if not the necessity, to protect the taxpayer from profligate expenditure of public funds, it is impossible to reconcile the views of the Reece report No. 2564 with an imperative necessity to pour into the Muscle Shoals situation more public funds for the construction of additional power plants, bringing the total investment at that development to at least $216,019,518.40. Testimony before the committee by representatives of the War Department is to the effect that the use of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of nitrates for national defense is not so important as in 1916, when the act creating Muscle Shoals was passed. They have repeatedly testified that if the Muscle Shoals plant were not in existence there would be no occasion at this time to construct nitrate plants for the production of explosives. Two years ago General Williams, Chief of Ordnance, testified before the Military Affairs Committee in response to a question by Mr. WAINWRIGHT for his views of the necessity of maintaining Muscle Shoals as an element of national defense, as follows:

"I think I will start my statement by going back to the beginning of the war, in 1914, and I will call to the attention of the committee the fact that overseas transportation, in so far as Germany was concerned, was cut off very soon after the war opened in 1914.

"Germany, at the beginning of 1914, had nitrogen-fixation plants of a total capacity of 19,000 tons of nitrogen per year. They had four plants, one using the Haber process, with a capacity of 8,000 tons, and three using the cyanamide process, which had a capacity of 11,000 tons of nitrogen.

"Bear in mind the fact that Germany fought the war for four and a half years, and for four years of that time, anyway, the importation of sodium nitrate, which was essential for making nitric acid, was cut off.

"Now, let us go to the existing conditions in the United States as of to-day. As of to-day, there are eight plants in the United States using various modifications of the Haber process that have a total annual capacity of 30,000 tons of nitrogen * * *.

"In other words, there exists in the United States to-day a total capacity of 78,000 tons of fixed nitrogen per year, which is almost four times the capacity that existed in Germany at the beginning of the war. Germany fought the war.

"The inevitable conclusion from that, to my mind, is that in so far as the fixation of nitrogen alone is concerned the United States to-day is very well off; and if we compare the condition of the United States to-day with that existing in 1914 before the war, we are many, many times better off than we were in 1914 * * *.

"The essential part of nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2 at Muscle Shoals, as of to-day, and in so far as national defense is concerned, is in their oxidation plants for the conversion of the ammonia into nitric acid. We can go out into the market and buy ammonia without any trouble at all and put it into these oxidation plants, and they are valuable and very essential to the national defense to-day.

"How long they will remain as essential as they are to-day depends entirely upon the commercial production of the oxidation of the ammonia into nitric acid." (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Affairs Committee, vol. 2, 1927, pp. 1055, 1056.)

In March, 1928, Major Miles, representing the Ordnance Department, in response to a question by the chairman of the importance of Muscle Shoals from the national-defense standpoint, testified as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. Then you think it would be advisable to keep them there in a stand-by condition?

"Major MILES. Yes, sir; to keep them in a stand-by condition until such time as the synthetic industry has reached the point where it can produce nitric-acid plants more quickly than we can bring in the nitrate plant from stand-by into real operation.

"The CHAIRMAN. Would you say there is the same need for nitrate preparedness to-day that existed when the section 124 of the national defense act was enacted?

"Major MILES. No, sir; I do not think so. The synthetic process has placed us in a position which, in a few years, will make us independent of the Chilean nitrates for commercial needs; and it would greatly facilitate the production of nitric acid and other nitrates in case of war, so that I do not think we are in the same position at all.

"The CHAIRMAN. Then Muscle Shoals would not be so important as a national-defense proposition when this development has arrived at what you expect it will produce?

"Major MILES. No, sir; I think that is true * * *.

"Mr. JAMES. How long will that be?

"Major MILES. Probably it will be within the next 10 years. The production of synthetic ammonia, per annum, now is around 30,000 tons, and it will go to 84,000 tons by the end of this year, which gives you some idea of the rate at which the industry is increasing." (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Affairs Committee, 1928, pp. 442, 443.)

In the light of this expert evidence by War Department officers it is submitted to the judgment of Members of the House that national defense does not justify the United States in turning valuable properties over to the exclusive use of the lessee or to expend additional large sums to induce the lessee to maintain the nitrate plants in stand-by condition or for the period remaining when they will have become unnecessary for national-defense purposes. Indeed, the proposed lease contemplates their maintenance in equivalent condition for national defense only until the Congress shall declare such maintenance is no longer necessary; neither does it clearly set forth whose duty it is to replace machinery or equipment which 50 years of active operation will entirely wear out.

2. The lease contains no binding guaranty to engage in quantity production of fertilizer. It assumes no obligation to produce fertilizer at competitive prices. The company engages to manufacture fertilizer only on condition that it makes a profit. Failure to manufacture fertilizer in commercial quantities at competitive prices, with or without profit, would not forfeit the lease.

LIMITED QUANTITY OF FERTILIZER TO BE PRODUCED

In consideration of turning over tremendously valuable properties to the lessee, representing an eventual investment of Government funds of more than $216,000,000, it agrees to manufacture and sell fertilizer to farmers, beginning with a small amount and increasing only as and when it is purchased by the farmer on condition that it is able to do so and make a profit of 8 per cent. (Art. F, subsec. 1, p. 16.) In event the lessee's cost of production plus the stipulated profit, or in event the quality or grade of fertilizer should be such that the farmer does not buy the entire output of the first unit, the lessee is permitted to suspend production by retaining in storage fertilizer containing only 2,500 tons of nitrogen. (Art. F, p. 20.)

The lessee agrees to produce at plant No. 2 or at its option, at other plants it may provide, "ammonium phosphate or other nitrogenous concentrated fertilizer * * * in the form of ammonia and/or phosphoric acid and/or potash."

The contract recites that—

"production of such concentrated fertilizer will be commenced at said United States Nitrate Plant No. 2, by using the cyanamide process." (Sec. F, subdivision 1, p. 16.)

It is impossible to state positively how much nitrogen for fertilizer purposes the lessee is obligated to make. The lessee agrees that not later than the third year of the leased term the first unit will be operated at full capacity for production of fertilizer, but does not say how long this operation will continue. Possibly one day at full capacity would satisfy the obligation as written. Nor is there anywhere in the proposed lease a definite provision that the lessee will produce the amount that would be represented by the first unit working at full capacity for one year. The obligation is only to retain in storage at least 25 per cent of the annual capacity of the first unit. Suppose slightly more than 25 per cent is manufactured. The overhead charge, for example, on 30 per cent is much more per pound that 100 per cent. It is possible that the cost of this 30 per cent would be so high it could not be sold in competition with existing fertilizer. What happens? Apparently provision is made for crediting to the cost of the fertilizer the profits from the power made available by the suspension of fertilizer production. However, this is not definitely stated, neither is it stated what amount of fertilizer is meant, although it is presumed to be the amount in storage. The contract as written would permit charging against this fertilizer in storage all the continuing items of cost recited in the contract (covering several pages). These additional costs would constantly increase the book value of the fertilizer held in storage and consequently prevent it ever becoming salable in open-market competition. This would reduce the contract at once to a mere power proposition, in which the Government is to get only $200,000 a year for the first six years and then approximately $1,285,000 a year. Deferred payments of $1,085,000 a year are not collectible until the end of the thirty-fifth year, and it is submitted that in case the lease is terminated before the thirty-fifth year it is probable that these deferred payments would be uncollectible.

Initial production is limited to fertilizer containing 10,000 tons of nitrogen until such time as the full 10,000-ton output has been marketed at cost plus 8 per cent for each of three successive years, whereupon another step up of 10,000 tons will be produced by installing an additional unit. Until the full output of 10,000 tons capacity in the first instance and of 20,000 tons capacity in the second instance has been sold for each of three successive years, respectively, fertilizer production will remain at 10,000 tons or at 20,000 tons annually, as the case may be, and so on up to a maximum of 50,000 tons. Production would never exceed, however, 20,000 tons until the United States has completed and turned over to the lessee the Cove Creek project. Under the most favorable conditions, fertilizer production can not attain the maximum output until after 15 years. However, to do this the full output of each proceeding unit must be sold each year for three years in succession before the obligation attaches to install an additional 10,000-ton unit.

If, however, at any time, the market does not absorb in any year the then capacity output, the lessee is permitted to suspend fertilizer production in which case it would continue in the undisturbed enjoyment of the property and the power by retaining in storage sufficient fertilizer to contain only 2,500 tons of nitrogen. (Sec. F, p. 16.)

COST-PLUS PROPOSITION

The contract is therefore purely a cost-plus proposition, so far as fertilizer production goes, with the control of two factors essential to the success of the fertilizer program in the hands and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the lessee. These factors are the character or quality of fertilizer produced and the manufactured cost, plus 8 per cent, at which it would be offered to the farmer. The so-called farmer board has no power to regulate or control these two important elements necessary for successful fertilizer production at Muscle Shoals. Their authority is limited solely to an ascertainment of the fact that the price offered the farmer does not exceed the items of cost which the lessee is permitted to include. (Subdivision 5, pp. 50–51.) The ability of the lessee to produce fertilizer at competitive prices, including the stipulated profit, for each year, over a period of 50 years, is the only assurance that it will ever be to the interest of the farmer to buy Muscle Shoals fertilizer. In this connection the attention of Members of the House is called to the provisions of the contract (subdivision 2 of sec. 5, beginning at p. 37) which carefully enumerates every possible or imaginable item of production on which the lease stipulates a profit of 8 per cent. Careful reading of this provision must impress anyone that fertilizer production is so hedged about with conditions that it can not be asserted, from any section of the contract itself, that fertilizer production after the first year is assured beyond 2,500 tons of nitrogen in storage.

CHEAPER METHODS AVAILABLE

Contrary to the situation in 1918 when nitrate plant No. 2 was built to use the cyanamide or power-using process, then the most modern method, the industrial fixation of nitrogen has made great progress since that time. The almost universal method being installed in new plants is the synthetic process requiring only small amounts of power. According to testimony before the committee by representatives both of the Ordnance Department and the Department of Agriculture, the synthetic process is now accepted as the cheapest, which accounts for the fact that 75 per cent of the present world's output of nitrogen fixation is obtained through that method. In the United States plants are in operation producing several thousand tons annually built within the last four or five years although at the time the Muscle Shoals plants were built there were no nitrogen plants of any consequence in operation within the United States. According to recent testimony before the committee as well as from current reports in the press and in trade journals, the new plant at Hopewell, Va., is supplying nitrogen in the form of liquid ammonia in large quantities for fertilizer use in competition with other sources of supply even though it has been in operation for only a short time and only the first units are in production.

The lessee does not agree to employ the power-using or cyanamide process if it sees fit to go to some other process. The following is from the testimony of Mr. Bell, president of the company, before the committee:

"I think I get what you are trying to develop. It neither requires us to produce by the cyanamide process during the entire term of the lease, nor does it require us to produce at plant No. 2 should we choose to produce at plant No. 1. In other words, we have been very careful to provide that if we find the cyanamide process in our opinion not the most advantageous process to use, we shall be perfectly free to produce by any other process we see fit." (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1927, pp. 704–705.)

COVE CREEK AND DAM NO. 3 NOT NEEDED FOR FERTILIZER PRODUCTION

Advocates of the bill insist that additional power is needed to manufacture fertilizer containing 50,000 tons of nitrogen sufficiently cheap to attract the farmer market and that in order to employ the electric-furnace method for the necessary amount of phosphoric acid 180,000 horsepower will be required in addition to 100,000 horsepower for ammonia through the cyanamide process. This is urged as the reason for building Cove Creek and Dam No. 3, although it is admitted that chemical engineers differ as to the economy of the electric-furnace method compared with the wet method now successfully employed by the Cyanamid Co. Mr. Bell, testifying before the committee, has never stated unqualifiedly that his company will abandon the present method and employ the electric-furnace method for making phosphoric acid for which the 180,000 additional horsepower is demanded in the bill. In the light of testimony before the committee, it is apparent that when it is more profitable to use this enormous amount of power for private industrial purposes instead of using it through the power-using methods for making fertilizer the lessee will turn to the processes requiring the smallest amount of power and thus release for private use large quantities of cheap power for private manufacture without violating any of the terms of the contract.

The following is from the testimony before the committee:

"I see what you mean, and I think that is true. I had not thought of it in that way, * * * but we did want to preserve elasticity, over a period of as long as 50 years, on the question of whether we should operate by the cyanamide process instead of the synthetic process, and contemplating the possibility that we might want the synthetic process there in plant No. 1, we did not guarantee to do it at plant No. 1 (No. 2). I believe you are right. I had not thought of it from that point of view." (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1927, pp. 670–671.)

On the question of using the electric-furnace method, Mr. Bell testified as follows:

"Mr. JOHNSON. If you do not use the electric-furnace method, then there would be another saving of power.

"Mr. JAMES. Then what would you use?

"Mr. BELL. Oh, the present wet method of producing phosphoric acid requires no power, relatively.

"Mr. JOHNSON. In that event, you would have another 180,000 horsepower?

"Mr. BELL. Well, it would not be quite that much, but we will consider it as 180,000 horsepower which we could use for any of those purposes.

"Mr. JAMES. Would you consider a provision by which any saving could be dedicated to fertilizer?

"Mr. BELL. No; I do not want to do that." (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1927, p. 832.)

NO OBLIGATION OR INCENTIVE

There is no obligation to employ the most economical process nor is there any incentive to engage in fertilizer production to the exclusion of manufacturing other products. It is no answer to this assertion by friends of the bill that the lessee can not abandon fertilizer production if it is to its advantage because it would forego the return upon its investments in fertilizer plants since plants for fertilizer production may likewise be employed for manufacturing other chemicals and electrometals which the lessee and its associates propose to manufacture at Muscle Shoals. The contract contains no provision requiring the lessee to employ the nitrate plants or the plants it may construct exclusively for fertilizer production.

3. The lessee will be the exclusive beneficiary of tremendous blocks of power for its private use developed at public expense, free of restrictions and regulations of the water power act and free from taxation by State authorities. This is a subsidy favorable to one corporation engaged in business in competition with other citizens and corporations.

Section G, page 54, invests the lessee with exclusive control of power obtained from the power plants not used in the production of fertilizer or for operation of navigation facilities. It permits the use of power for the production of electrochemicals and electrometals, or for any other private operation by the lessee, by the American Cyanamid Co., or by a subsidiary of either of said companies, and by the Union Carbide Co. While it recites the manner of sale of whatever power the lessee may see fit to sell to the public for general industrial or commercial use, it does not require the lessee to sell any portion of the power for public consumption.

While the lessee indicates a purpose to devote power to the manufacture of products necessary or valuable in national defense, there is no obligation that the power be so used.

The following is from testimony of the president of the company before the Military Committee:

"Mr. JOHNSON. This whole section G, Mr. Bell, of course, applies to the power covering the entire premises, not only at Muscle Shoals but the Cove Creek Dam and Dam No. 3?

"Mr. BELL. Yes.

"Mr. JOHNSON. And the provisions here about distribution for general domestic, industrial, and commercial use, and the provision for entering into contracts for the construction of transmission lines, with that view in mind, only provides the manner in which it should be distributed in case you decide to distribute?

"Mr. BELL. Yes.

"Mr. JOHNSON. But does not compel any distribution?

"Mr. BELL. No." (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1927, p. 841.)

PURPOSE TO USE POWER FOR PRIVATE OPERATION PERMITTED

Representatives of the lessee frankly admit the purpose to engage in the manufacture of various products other than fertilizer. In a letter addressed to the Joint Committee on Muscle Shoals in 1926 the company explained its purpose to build at Muscle Shoals, in event its offer is accepted, industrial operations, but that if the Congress, in accepting its offer to make fertilizer, should "restrict the company's operation in other fields, either as to character or profit, the company will be unable to proceed with the plan above outlined under such restrictions." (H. Doc. No. 980, 69th Cong., 1st sess., p. 174.)

The company stated to the committee that it has already contracted with the Union Carbide Co. to sell to that company not exceeding 50,000 horsepower, at not exceeding $17 per horsepower, for the private use of the Union Carbide Co.

VALUE OF POWER SUBSIDY

In view of the admission to use power for private operation, it is important to know something of the quantity that would pass into the possession of the lessee for half a century and its value. It would have exclusive control of power-generating plants, constructed at Government expense, according to the testimony of Army engineers (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1928, p. 258), or 1,165,000-horsepower capacity. In addition, it would have the power from three additional dams of about 130,000-horsepower capacity constructed at its own expense under the Federal power act, or a total of 1,295,000-horsepower capacity.

According to the report of the Federal Power Commission in 1926, this capacity would be nearly one-half the horsepower capacity then installed in the States of Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Kentucky, and in output of electrical energy would be more than half the total power output at that time from all sources in these six Southern States. Indicating the value of this power, measured by its market price, after deducting the probable amount that would be used for fertilizer production, the Power Commission estimated that the average annual profit to the lessee would be about $7,750,000 annually. (S. Doc. 209, 69th Cong., 2d sess.) By referring to a recent analysis made by officers of the Power Commission (hereto attached as Exhibit A) of rental payments by the lessee under the so-called recapture clauses, an appreciation may be obtained of the tremendous volume of power that would come into possession of the lessee in comparison with the small payments therefor.

VIEWS OF SECRETARY HOOVER ON VALUE OF POWER

Hon. Herbert Hoover, while Secretary of Commerce, stated to the joint committee:

"Now, it is my belief and the belief of men in the Department of Commerce that that plant equipment, as it stands to-day, with the addition of some more generators, is worth to any lessee as a power business a minimum of $2,500,000 a year net to the Government, and with the additional power that will come down automatically as a result of the development of upper river it might be worth a million dollars more." (Joint committee hearings, 1926, pp. 111–112.)

If these values are even approximately correct, which no one has disputed, they expose the extent of the annual subsidy that will be conferred on the lessee, and doubtless furnish the real reason why the committee has been unsuccessful in securing a satisfactory recapture clause which members of the committee earnestly endeavored to obtain based on the simple condition that if the fertilizer program fails the power plants as well as the nitrate plants would promptly revert to the United States.

Subsidized by the Government with this tremendous block of power at a cost less than it can be otherwise purchased or generated, these companies would be able to establish an industrial empire in whatever character of business they chose to engage and for a period of 50 years could defy any form or manner of competition or of State control.

FEDERAL WATER POWER ACT NULLIFIED

The three large water-power plants constructed at the expense of the Government, totaling 1,165,000 installed horsepower capacity, are to be free of any of the regulations or restrictions of the Federal power act. In addition, the company is granted an exclusive license to construct three water-power plants in the State of Tennessee, but without the requirements, imposed on other licensees, to contribute to the owners of storage reservoirs or other headwater improvements for benefits received from such headwater improvements. (Art. U, p. 75.) In addition to the above, the lessee and all subsidiaries or subtenants escape local taxation for all activities which are located on Government reservation, and if expenditures are anywhere near the amount indicated in the hearings will aggregate a large saving in taxation alone. One State, whose Representatives in Congress urged the development at Muscle Shoals with the utmost vigor, and still do, has protested such action, having already instituted a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States in which suit demand is made for $173,000 tax on the sale of power by the Government at Wilson Dam during the calendar year 1926. This becomes exceedingly important when it is considered that many power sites in the State of Tennessee will be affected by this contract and that State has already served notice of its attitude. (Hearings before Military Committee, not printed.)

This exemption from contribution to upstream improvements in favor of the lessee is not only for the term of the lease, but perpetually as to its own properties. The provision in Paragraph U of the cyanimide bill (H. R. 8305) would exempt the subsidiary corporation, which is to be given a license for three power sites on the Tennessee River, from payment to the United States of headwater improvement charges for the period of its license.

Section 15 of the Federal water power act provides for an offer of a new license to the original licensee at the end of the 50-year period if the properties are not recaptured. It provides that the proposed new license shall be on reasonable terms. That would probably make it possible for the licensee to contend that the proposition of headwater charges would be unreasonable and permit him to decline to accept the license offered, in which event the United States would be required to continue the original license in effect from year to year until it offered something satisfactory to the original licensee or found a new applicant for the site, to whom it may issue license. Under these conditions it is probable that there would be no way of compelling the original licensee to pay headwater charges even after the expiration of 50 years.

The United States further agrees to impose the restriction on future dams on the Tennessee River and each of its tributaries, whether built by the United States or by private parties, that their construction and operation will not "materially impair or detract from the full use and enjoyment" by the Air Nitrates Corporation of the water-power plants under its control. (Art. I, p. 59.) However, the contract contains no provision that if by reason of such construction the company is benefited at Muscle Shoals that equitable contribution will be made, although such payment is required of other licensees of the Federal Power Commission.

The meaning and effect of this provision is not altogether clear, but if enacted would undoubtedly require the Federal Power Commission to place this limitation in all future permits on the Tennessee River and its tributaries. It may mean that every future improvement on the Tennessee River and its tributaries must be operated to the satisfaction and for the benefit of the lessee of Muscle Shoals, and that that lessee could control as to when the waters are to be impounded and when they are to be released. If this is the true meaning of the clause, then so far as Congress can legally do so it will have granted to the lessee of Muscle Shoals a monopoly of the entire Tennessee watershed. Inasmuch as hydroelectric development demands large capital investment, capital can not be invested safely in such enterprises if the control of the works is subject to the whim and vagaries of a possible hostile downstream proprietor. What effect would this provision have on water-power development in the territory affected?

4. The contract proposes inadequate payments for power and for valuable properties for private use and private gain, amounting to about 2½ per cent annually without obligation that it will be used for fertilizer manufacture or made available for public service.

Payments proposed by the lease are as follows: For Wilson Dam, 4 per cent per annum on its cost ($47,000,000), less about $17,000,000 (art. A, subsec. 1), and a like rental on the cost of two additional dams and power plants (Dam No. 3, with an installed capacity of 250,000 horsepower, and Cove Creek, with an installed capacity of 200,000 horsepower). The United States is required to build these additional dams and power houses (art. A, subsec. 2, and art. T, subsec. b), at an estimated cost of $43,035,579 for Dam No. 3 and $37,540,643 for Cove Creek, and to spend $8,000,000 for new units at Wilson Dam. The rental to be paid for Wilson Dam for the first six years, with the exception of $200,000 annually, may be deferred by the lessee to the thirty-fifth year and thereafter paid in 15 annual installments. The amount of rental at 4 per cent per annum on the new dams and power plants is limited to $26,500,000 for Dam No. 3 and to $20,000,000 for Cove Creek, only $46,500,000, regardless of the fact their ultimate cost is estimated by Army engineers to be $80,576,222. The bill provides for no rental whatever for the steam power plant at nitrate plant No. 2, which cost over $12,000,000. In event Cove Creek is not built within 10 years, the rental on Dam No. 3, in the nature of a penalty therefor, would be reduced to 2 per cent on $26,500,000 until Cove Creek is completed. These new plants to be built by the United States will approximately double the water-power output at Wilson Dam without obligation on the lessee to pay increased rental therefor.

The lessee agrees to pay the further sums of $35,000 annually in the case of Dam No. 2, of $20,000 annually in the case of Dam No. 3, and of $50,000 annually in the case of Cove Creek for repairs and maintenance. It would also pay approximately $38,000 annually in the case of Dam No. 2, $26,000 annually in the case of Dam No. 3, and $20,000 annually in the case of Cove Creek as a so-called amortization payment which amounts the United States is expected to set apart and compound annually for a period of 100 years for the alleged purpose of amortizing its investment in Muscle Shoals. Mathematically these amortization payments of about $84,000 annually must be continued and compounded each year for 100 years in order to amortize the investment. The lessees agree to pay for 50 years.

INTEREST RETURN ONLY ABOUT 2½ PER CENT PER ANNUM

Under the offer the total investment of the United States will be more than $216,000,000. The present investment in power plants at Muscle Shoals is about $54,500,000. (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1928, p. 258.) The most recent official estimate of the cost of new structures, including navigation facilities, is $43,035,479 for Cove Creek, $37,540,643 for Dam No. 3, and $8,000,000 for new units at Dam No. 2. (H. Doc. No. 185, 70th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 77 and 99.) This amounts to $143,076,232 to be invested in power plants by the Government.

According to an analysis of H. R. 8305 made by Major Coiner, of the office of the Chief of Engineers, on a basis of cost less than the above estimate, the annual return for the use of these properties would be the equivalent of 1 per cent per annum if compounded annually. In the same analysis and on the same basis of cost he reported the annual return on the cost of power projects alone would be the equivalent of only about 2.6 per cent per annum. (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1928, pp. 427–429.)

OFFER TO PAY MORE FOR MUSCLE SHOALS POWER PENDING

That the above payments for power are grossly inadequate and that the estimate of Hon. Herbert Hoover, when Secretary of Commerce, was accurate and reasonable is shown by a recent offer from Power Transmission Co. to the War Department. This offer was submitted in response to a letter from the Secretary of War in July, 1928, requesting to be advised what arrangement could be made under the present temporary situation to increase the revenue from sale of power at Muscle Shoals. For the power output at Wilson Dam and for the right to use the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 it proposes a guaranteed minimum of $1,360,000 for the first 16 months, $1,720,000 for the next 12 months, and $2,220,000 for each subsequent year for a period of five years, with adequate bonded security. The contract provides that it may be canceled at any time or any portion of the power may be withdrawn at any time before the expiration of five years upon 18 months' notice in order to afford the purchasers opportunity to provide power in substitution.

These payments, which exceed by $1,000,000 annually the rental proposed by the Air Nitrates Corporation for Muscle Shoals power, are the yardstick by which its value may be accurately measured. Attention is invited to the fact that this is for power at Wilson Dam alone.

LOSS OF PROFIT FROM POWER RELEASED FROM FERTILIZER PRODUCTION NO PENALTY

Emphasis is placed by supporters of the bill on the provision that profits from power released from fertilizer production through suspension must be applied to the credit of fertilizer. Since it is admitted that only a portion of the power will be employed directly in fertilizer production, which is especially true if nonpower-using methods are adopted, it follows that the profit on power released by such suspension will be small and perhaps insufficient to counterbalance interest accruing during such suspension under article 5, paragraph 2, subdivisions (h) and (i).

In this connection it should be remembered that the company declined to incorporate an amendment providing that profits from power not used for fertilizer should be under the control of the Government. The following is taken from the testimony before the Military Committee:

"Mr. JOHNSON. * * * In case you were to begin operations under the cyanamide process, and maybe in 5 years or 10 years would decide that you were going to produce under the synthetic process, if the statements about the power required are true, that would release three-quarters of the power. This lease is undoubtedly drawn from the company's standpoint upon the view you are going to require the power necessary under the cyanamide process. Now, if that contingency should arise, what would be done under the amount of power that would be saved by the use of the synthetic process? Would the profits from that go to the Government?

"Mr. BELL. No; they would not. * * *

"Mr. JOHNSON. Would you have objection to an amendment to that effect?

"Mr. BELL. We would." (Muscle Shoals hearings, Military Committee, 1927, pp. 706–707.)

5. While the United States must agree to spend $88,576,222 additional on Muscle Shoals in order to accept the contract, under the recapture clause it must spend the further sum of $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 more to recover its properties if fertilizer production is suspended because of failure of the lessee to produce it successfully.

INVOLVED RECAPTURE CLAUSE

In order for the United States to accept the contract it must expend large additional sums on Muscle Shoals, estimated at $88,576,222. In order that the Government may recover these valuable properties under the recapture clause it must spend the further sum, $40,000,000 to $50,000,000, according to the testimony of representatives of the lessee, in reimbursement of the investments of the lessee and its tenants and subtenants, including the Union Carbide Co., for whatever amounts that may have been expended for any purpose on additional structures, additions, extensions, and improvements.

The recapture clause provides that in event fertilizer production is suspended "for as much as 18 months in the aggregate during any period of 36 months" but not sooner than 15 years and not then unless the Cove Creek Dam has been built by the United States and turned over to the lessee can the properties be recaptured either in whole or in part.

If production shall suspend for an aggregate of 18 months out of 36, the farmer board "may within 60 days" certify to the Secretary of War that in its opinion "it is reasonably to be expected that the suspension" will be permanent. Whereupon the Secretary of War and the lessee shall each select an arbitrator and a Federal judge shall select a third arbitrator. These arbitrators shall hear the parties and determine "whether or not in their opinion under all the circumstances it is reasonably to be expected that suspension of the commercial production of such concentrated fertilizer by the lessee will be permanent." If they so find they shall certify the fact to the Secretary of War, who in turn will notify the Congress. Whereupon the Congress, by joint resolution, must elect which one of three alternatives it will pursue. Failure of Congress to so elect permits the Secretary of War to make such election. The alternatives are:

1. Abandon the plan of fertilizer production, permit the lessee to retain the properties for private use and collect additional rental, not less than 4 and not more than 5 per cent.

2. Recapture only the nitrate plants upon reimbursing the lessee for whatever investments it has made in additional plants, extensions, and improvements for the manufacture of fertilizer. Should the United States then desire power for future operation of the recaptured nitrate plants it must at that time elect the amount of power, both primary and secondary, it expects to use from the power plants retained by the company for each year for the remaining period of the lease, but not to exceed 100,000 horsepower if Cove Creek has not been built, and not to exceed 200,000 horsepower if Cove Creek has been built. The United States must pay until the expiration of the lease the lessee's cost of generation for such power it engaged, whether delivery of the same is actually taken or not. (Muscle Shoals hearings, 1929, p. 68.)

3. Recapture the entire properties by paying "the lessee and each of its subtenants the amount of the actual investment of the lessee and its subtenants" theretofore expended in plants, buildings, machinery, extensions, etc., of every character, whether for fertilizer production or for private use located on the leased properties.

The very lengthy and involved recapture provisions by which the United States may secure either a small increased rental or repossess Muscle Shoals, either in whole or in part, in case of an alleged permanent suspension of fertilizer production, comprising 15 pages of the bill, resolve every contingency in favor of the lessee. In effecting either of these alternatives the adjustments are indeterminate and subject to the rulings of a board of arbitrators and the benefits which would accrue to the United States are very doubtful. One provision illustrates how the interest of the lessee is carefully guarded. Under the additional rental alternative the lessee may at any time, in its discretion, restore the contract by resuming fertilizer production. The effect of this provision is to preclude the United States from making other disposition of the nitrate or fertilizer plants though standing idle. Furthermore the United States must assume the difficult burden of convincing the arbitrators that "under all the circumstances it is reasonably to be expected" that the suspension will be permanent before it can exercise either of the three recapture alternatives. While the bill recites that the finding of the arbitration board may be certified by two members, the section is not clear that the findings must not be concurred in by all three (p. 23, line 22, to p. 24, line 7).

The attention of Members of the House is directed to the recapture clause (beginning at p. 21) by which the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of War, and members of the Judiciary, including members of the United States Supreme Court, are required to comply with a maze of specific detailed conditions, each within stated limitations of time, in order that the United States may protect its property rights. It is submitted that this unprecedented procedure required of the United States is beneath the dignity of the sovereign.

In so far as the recapture of the nitrate plants in time of war is concerned (art. E, subsection 3, p. 15), the attention of the House is invited to the fact that under the decision of the courts the term "just and reasonable compensation" includes the enhancement due to war conditions, and therefore this clause is susceptible of meaning that if the Government did take this property for war purposes that the lessee would be entitled to remuneration for the enhancement in the price of nitrogen caused by the war condition.

While the United States was building the plant at Nitro, some worthless farm land was purchased for less than a thousand dollars. The purchaser contemplated building bungalows to accommodate the workers for the plant. Before any real development work had been done, the farm was taken over and made a part of the Nitro project. The purchaser recovered $100,000 damages as "just and reasonable compensation." (5 Fed. 2d 99.)

That the market value with the enhancement caused by war conditions is the guide is shown in United States v. New River Collieries Co. (276 Fed. 690; affirmed 262 U. S. 341); Dester & Carpenter v. Davis (281 Fed. 385); Prince Line (Ltd.) v. United States (283 Fed. 535).

PLAN FOR DISPOSITION OF MUSCLE SHOALS RECOMMENDED

It is the view of the chairman of the committee that the property at Muscle Shoals should be turned over as it stands to the Agricultural Department with authority to use the property as an experimental station for the development of processes and for experimental operation of plants in the manufacture of nitrates for war-time use or for fertilizer by the most economical method. That the result of these experiments be made known to the public and to citizens of this country engaged in the manufacture of fertilizers for production by private initiative. In addition, provision should be made for practical experiments in the use of fertilizer at experimental farms throughout the country where the farmer could learn at first hand how to use these fertilizers, manufactured as the result of the processes developed by the experiments at Muscle Shoals.

As for the power developed at the existing plants, a sufficient quantity should be allocated for use for the purposes stated above and the remainder sold or leased under contracts that will secure the maximum return to the Government from the sale of such power.

If this plan is followed, the Government will comply with the provisions of the national defense act by maintaining the plants in satisfactory condition for immediate use in time of emergency, will help the farmer not only in securing needed fertilizers but teach him the use of the same to the best advantage, and make possible the Government assisting in the building up of a standard industry by its citizens.

The following bill, proposed by the chairman of the committee, if enacted into law, will accomplish these results:

A bill to safeguard national defense; to authorize, in aid of agriculture, research, experiments, and demonstration in methods of manufacture and production of nitrates and ingredients comprising concentrated fertilizer and its use on farms, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to construct, maintain, and operate, or cause to be constructed, maintained, and operated, experimental plants of modern type and design on the property of the United States at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and in his discretion at other places in the United States, suitable for the manufacture of nitrates and other fertilizers with a view to promoting production of concentrated fertilizer, to lessening its cost to consumers, and to providing additional facilities for the manufacture of explosives or other munitions of war in periods of emergency.

That the Secretary of Agriculture, for the purposes of this act, may take over plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals, together with such buildings, equipment, material, or other properties either at plant No. 1 or plant No. 2 necessary for the construction, maintenance, and operation of such a plant.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to lease for not to exceed 20 years the power-generating properties of the United States at Muscle Shoals, Ala., including the steam power plant at nitrate plant No. 2. In event the Secretary of War is unable to secure a satisfactory lessee within a reasonable time, he is authorized to operate the said power plants and to contract for the sale of power for a period not to exceed 20 years: Provided, That in a lease or in a contract for sale of power reasonable provision shall be made for taking over by the United States when in the opinion of the President the national welfare or safety requires.

That in any lease hereunder, or in a contract for sale of power, it shall be the purpose to secure the largest reasonable net return with due regard for the purposes of this act, but not less than 4 per cent per annum of the reasonable value of the properties so used, and, as near as may be, to secure equitable allocation of Muscle Shoals power between local industrial developments and distribution, under adequate public regulation to sections within transmission or relay distance of the plants. Such leases or contracts for sale of power shall provide that upon reasonable notice the United States may, at any time after the expiration of 10 years, cancel any contract for sale of power or recapture the leased property, and, in the event the United States exercises such right, it shall pay to the lessee the reasonable value of any improvements which may be made by the lessee with the approval of the Secretary of War. If not recaptured or the contract canceled, such lease or contract shall provide for readjustment of charges at the end of each 10-year period. In the disposition of power or power facilities adequate provision shall be made for necessary power for use by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes of this act and for lighting and operation of locks and dams or other facilities maintained or used by the United States at Muscle Shoals.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is authorized to lease or sell nitrate plant No. 2 or such portions thereof as may not be needed for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 4. That the money received for lease of such plants or for sale of power under this act, less the expense of operation, maintenance, and upkeep, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as a special fund, until otherwise directed by Congress, for use by the Secretary of Agriculture, as the same shall be annually appropriated by Congress, for scientific research, investigation, experimentation in improving fertilizers, fertilizer practice, and soil management, including experimental operation of plants in cheapening fertilizer production and its sale, distribution, and demonstration use on farms in different sections of the United States, it being the purpose of this act to provide for investigations and experiments to determine the most practical and economical methods for the commercial production, distribution, and use of high-grade concentrated fertilizers and other soil amendments and their relation to soil management, in order that the most modern developments in relation to the fixation of nitrogen and the production of other fertilizer ingredients and chemicals or other products useful for national defense and fertilizer shall be made available to the people of the United States for such purposes.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to so regulate the price and distribution of the products sold from plants experimentally operated for use as fertilizer that the farmer may obtain the same at the lowest net cost but, if possible, for an amount sufficient to pay the cost of production, including a reasonable interest return on amounts invested in plants and equipment constructed from the special revenue fund herein created.

SEC. 5. That for the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, engage the services and facilities of skilled, unskilled, and scientific experts or persons, firms, companies, or corporations experienced in the production or marketing of fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients or other similar products, and may utilize the various agencies of the Department of Agriculture, in cooperation with such private agencies as he may approve, and also may detail for the purpose expert personnel or other employees of the Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, not otherwise appropriated, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act from the Treasury of the United States, to be returned to the Treasury from the special fund herein provided for: Provided, That said appropriations shall not become available to the Secretary of Agriculture until the Secretary of War shall have certified to the Treasurer of the United States that a lease or a contract as herein provided has been made and guaranteed by a surety bond.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of War shall each submit annual reports to Congress of operations and results obtained and of receipts and disbursements.

SEC. 8. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

APPENDIX

MEMORANDUM ON PROPOSED "RECAPTURE ALTERNATIVES"

(As set out in letter of American Cyanamid Co. of January 19, 1929, to chairman House Committee on Military Affairs. By O. C. Merrill, secretary Federal Power Commission)

Under the provisions of article F the lessee proposes to produce fertilizers at nitrate plant No. 2 and/or at nitrate plant No. 1 and/or at other plants near by which the lessee may construct at its option, such fertilizers to contain at least 40 per cent of plant food in form of ammonia, phosphoric acid, or potash. Production is to commence at plant No. 2 by the cyanamide process, and the lessee agrees that within two years it will—

(1) Make such alterations in said plant as it may find necessary.

(2) Build on Government land a phosphoric acid and an ammonium phosphate plant to produce—

(3) Concentrated fertilizer containing 10,000 tons fixed nitrogen and 40,000 tons plant food.

The first fertilizer unit is to be operated to full capacity not later than the third year of lease. When, thereafter, the lessee succeeds in selling approximately the full output of such unit at cost plus 8 per cent for three successive years, it will on request of farmer board place a second unit of same capacity in operation.

Under the same conditions the lessee will place a third unit into operation if meantime the Government has constructed and delivered to the lessee the Cove Creek Dam and power plant.

Under the same conditions as immediately above the lessee will place a fourth unit in operation and likewise a fifth.

All of the above proposals are limited by the proviso that no production shall be required so long as fertilizers containing an aggregate of 2,500 tons of fixed nitrogen remain unsold.

If fertilizer production is suspended, any profit from the sale of power made available by such suspension is to be credited to the cost of fertilizer production; such credit, however, is not to be made if the lessee pays additional rental under alternative (A) hereinafter discussed.

The above are provisions of paragraph (1) of article F of H. R. 8305. Beginning with the words "Provided, however," on the third line from the bottom of page 5 of American Cyanamid Co.'s letter are 13 pages of new matter proposed to be added to paragraph (1) of article F and which would be inserted at the end of the first paragraph of page 20 of the House print of H. R. 8305. The added language covers three proposed alternatives, which are to be available to the United States in event of permanent suspension of fertilizer production by the lessee. These are:

(A) Additional rental alternative; (B) fertilizer recapture alternative; (C) total recapture alternative; and are subject to the conditions and limitations prescribed, to become effective for acceptance by the United States if the production of concentrated fertilizer is suspended for as much as 18 months in any consecutive 36 months' period. None of these alternatives becomes effective, however—

(a) Unless Cove Creek Dam and power house are built by the United States and delivered to the lessee; or

(b) Unless the United States Supreme Court shall forbid its construction as without constitutional authority; and

(c) Until 15 years after delivery to the lessee of all existing Government property at and in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, consisting (with minor exceptions) of the following:

	Cost
Nitrate plant No. 1	$12,888,000
Nitrate plant No. 2	55,229,000
Steam plant	12,326,000
Waco quarry, etc	1,273,000
Dam No. 2 (excluding locks)	43,388,000
Total cost to date	125,104,000

(d) Unless a majority of the President's appointees on the farmer board shall, within 60 days after the expiration of such 36 months' period, file a certificate with the Secretary of War that it is their opinion that the suspension of commercial production will be permanent; and if they so find;

(e) Unless a board of arbitration after hearing shall likewise reach the conclusion that such suspension will be permanent; and

(f) If (b), (c), and (d), together with either (a) or (b), are fulfilled, until 60 days after the next succeeding adjournment of a session of Congress.

Selection of an alternative must be on certificate of the Secretary of War and must be served on the lessee within the last-named 60-day period.

ALTERNATIVE (A)

The "additional rental alternative" provides for payment to the United States annually of an amount to be determined by a board of arbitration as "the fair annual rental value of the demised premises, less all sums provided by other provisions of lease to be paid by the lessee as rental," such "fair annual rental value" in no event to be less than 4 per cent or more than 5 per cent of the following:

(1) The cost, less $16,282,000, of Dam No. 2, power plant and accessories, locks, and navigation facilities.

(2) The cost, less $6,000,000, of Dam No. 3, power plant and accessories, locks, and navigation facilities.

(3) The cost, but not exceeding $20,000,000, of the Cove Creek project less locks and navigation facilities.

The estimated costs and the amounts upon which the original and the additional rentals would be paid are as follows:

	Estimated cost completed without locks	Amount on which rental to be paid	Difference
Dam No. 2	$51,673,000	$40,306,000	$11,367,000
Dam No. 3	34,875,000	30,875,000	4,000,000
Cove Creek	34,140,000	20,000,000	14,140,000
Total	120,688,000	91,181,000	29,507,000

Upon the items specified immediately above the lessee is required by the existing provisions of H. R. 8305 to pay (subject to certain deferments during the early years of the lease) annual rentals of 4 per cent. Alternative (A) would, therefore, in return for a further payment by the lessee of not to exceed 1 per cent upon the amount above listed in column 2, free the lessee from any further obligation to produce fertilizer, and would leave it in possession of the entire power and nitrate properties, with no restrictions whatever upon its right to use all the power developed for any purpose it might choose.

Since the original plus additional rentals under alternative (A) are not to exceed 5 per cent on the items in column 2, and since such payments would be less than 4 per cent of the items in column 1 which represent the actual cost of the hydroelectric properties without locks or navigation facilities, and since no rental at all is to be paid for the $12,326,000 invested in the steam plant (or for the $69,390,000 invested in nitrate properties), the maximum rentals that would be payable in any year with alternative (A) in effect would be less than 3¼ per cent on the actual cost to the United States of the power properties alone without locks or other navigation facilities; and the maximum "additional rentals" would amount to slightly more than two-thirds of 1 per cent upon the entire power properties.

Since the total rental payments under alternative (A) for the use of the power properties would be from 2 to 3 per cent less per annum than the company would have to pay for interest alone had it built the properties at its own expense, the use of the words "the fair annual rental value of the demised properties" can hardly be deemed to have any real meaning.

The additional rentals are not to begin to accrue until 30 days after the certificate of the Secretary of War. Since the long-drawn-out procedure for determining whether any one of the alternatives may be exercised might readily be prolonged for two or three years, during which time the lessee would have the option of electing to resume operations, and thereby effecting a stay to all proceedings, and since if resumption of production should again cease the proceedings would have to be started anew, it would appear possible for the lessee by alternately resuming and ceasing production to maintain its original status with only intermittent production. Since, however, the additional payments, which would not exceed $1,000,000 per annum, would secure the release to the lessee of several hundred million kilowatt-hours of energy otherwise obligated for fertilizer production and would relieve the lessee of all subsequent liabilities for fertilizer production, the exercise of this alternative by the Secretary of War would, unless fertilizer production and sale should be profitable of itself, appear to be distinctly advantageous to the lessee.

While the language covering the right to resume operations and to stay proceedings is written into the paragraphs covering alternative (A), it is not clear from the general language used that it might not likewise be held to apply to the other alternatives.

ALTERNATIVE (B)

Fertilizer recapture: If the Secretary of War elects alternative (B), provision is made for the selection of a firm of certified public accountants who will—

(a) Make an inventory of all properties built or acquired by the lessee for the production or shipment of fertilizers.

(b) Determine the investment of the lessee in such properties.

(c) Determine how much depreciation on such properties has been charged to the cost of fertilizer production.

(d) File with the Secretary of War certificate showing such investment less such depreciation.

In order for action under this alternative to be effected the United States must make payment "in cash" of the amount so certified within 90 days of the filing of the certificate. While it is not definitely so stated it would appear that failure to make this payment within the 90 days would void not only alternative (B) but would also make any other action by the Government impossible. To make such payment for the properties would, of course, require an appropriation by Congress. Ninety days might be a short time for action even if Congress were in session and if it were not in session might make any action impossible.

If purchase of the nitrate properties of the lessees is effected, the lessee is obligated to sell to the United States such amount of power, up to specified limits, as may be requested by the Secretary of War within the same 90 days after filing of inventory.

If Cove Creek has been built and delivered to the lessee the maximum amount that the Secretary may demand is 200,000 horsepower-years; otherwise the maximum is 100,000 horsepower-years. The amount that the lessee is obligated to deliver, whether of primary or of secondary power, must, when original demand is made, be specified for each year of the unexpired term of the lease, can not be changed thereafter, and must be paid for whether used or not. That is, if the alternative should be exercised at the end of the 15 years, the Secretary would be required to contract for specific amounts of electric energy for each of the succeeding 35 years of the lease, could get no more in any year than as originally specified, and would have to pay each year for the amount thus contracted for, even though fertilizer production might have been abandoned.

The price to be paid by the Secretary is "the cost of such power, computed as provided in subdivision (2) of this article F." Such cost prorated to the amount of power purchased is to include with respect to the entire power properties:

(a) All expenses of administration.

(b) All rentals.

(c) All payments, or expenses, paid or accrued, by the lessee for (1) maintenance and operation of dam, power houses, locks, and other navigation facilities; (2) interest, if any, on Government's investment in power and navigation properties; (3) amortization, if any, of same properties.

(d) Contributions of power for operation of locks.

(e) Interest on lessee's investment in power properties.

(f) Amortization of the same.

(g) Depreciation upon the same.

(h) Cost of production of steam power to supplement hydro power.

(i) Cost of maintaining auxiliary steam plants in stand-by conditions.

(j) Cost of any power purchased to supplement hydro power.

(k) Any other items which have been overlooked, or can not be included, in (a) to (j), inclusive.

The estimated average annual output of Dams Nos. 2 and 3 when completed and with the steam plant increased to 120,000 horsepower of installation and used only as an auxiliary is 3,550,000,000 kilowatt-hours. With Cove Creek added the estimated average annual output is 4,490,000,000 kilowatt-hours. The maximum amount which the Secretary of War may demand under alternative (B), if Cove Creek is not built, is 100,000 horsepower-years, which is equivalent to 653,500,000 kilowatt-hours, or only 18½ per cent of the average annual energy available. The maximum amount which the Secretary may demand if Cove Creek is built is 200,000 horsepower-years, equivalent to 1,307,000,000 kilowatt-hours, or 29 per cent of the average annual energy available. Under alternative (B), therefore, the lessee would be fully recompensed for (a) all investments made in nitrate properties; and (b) the entire cost of power delivered, or contracted and not delivered, to the Secretary of War; it would be relieved of any further responsibility for nitrate production; and, for the payment of rentals averaging less than 3 per cent on the Government's investment in the power properties, and with an investment of its own in such properties of some $5,400,000, would have complete possession of such properties and would have left for its own unrestricted use 2,896,500,000 kilowatt-hours per annum, if Cove Creek is not built and 3,183,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum, if Cove Creek is built, all at an estimated average cost of less than 2 mills per kilowatt-hour.

Unless fertilizer production and sale would be of itself a profitable undertaking, the exercise of this alternative by the United States would appear to be distinctly advantageous to the lessee.

ALTERNATIVE (C)

Total recapture alternative: As indicated by the provisions of article 6 and of paragraph (3) of article H of H. R. 8305, it is the intention that the lessee will use or sell power not required by it in fertilizer production for electrochemical or other manufacturing operations, such operations to be conducted by the lessee or by allied or subsidiary corporations, or subtenants; and that the manufacturing plants for such purposes will be located on the "leased premises."

By the provisions of alternative (C) it will be necessary for the United States, if it wishes to secure possession of its own plants and properties, not only to recompense the lessee for all capital costs less depreciation incurred by it for any purposes in connection with the power and nitrate plants, but also to purchase at cost less depreciation all manufacturing plants and equipment placed on the "leased premises" by the lessee, by its allied or subsidiary corporations, or by its subtenants, all community or service plants, and all structures or improvements of every kind and character, regardless of their value or lack of value to the United States.

Since no alternative proposal is made that in case of total recapture the United States may continue to supply the power by means of which such manufacturing plants might continue in operation, it must be assumed that the requirement of purchase of all such properties by the United States as a condition of recapture of its own properties is intended to prevent, as it would in fact prevent, the exercise of alternative (C) by the Secretary of War.

As in the case of alternative (B) elaborate machinery is provided for determining the amount to be paid by the United States in event of recapture, and only 90 days is allowed after the date of determination for action by Congress, and for the payment "in cash" of the amount involved. Under all the circumstances it is believed that alternative (C) must be ruled out as of no practical value or effect.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On February 23, 1929:

H. R. 11469. An act to authorize appropriations for construction at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.;

H. R. 11510. An act for the relief of Montana State College;

H. R. 12809. An act to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in a certain case;

H. R. 13199. An act authorizing the payment to the State of Oklahoma the sum of $4,955.36 in settlement for rent for United States Veterans' Hospital No. 90, at Muskogee, Okla.;

H. R. 13692. An act authorizing the Coos (Kowes) Bay, Lower Umpqua (Kalawatset), and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians of the State of Oregon to present their claims to the Court of Claims;

H. R. 8901. An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved March 3, 1925, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any and all claims, of whatever nature, which the Kansas or Kaw Tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States, and for other purposes";

H. R. 9737. An act for the relief of Herman C. Davis;

H. R. 11064. An act for the relief of F. Stanley Millichamp;

H. R. 13251. An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 418. Joint resolution to provide for the quartering, in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia, of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies.

On February 25, 1929:

H. R. 11616. An act to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels;

H. R. 16422. An act making appropriations for the Government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13582. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey title to Lucie Scarbarough for section 29, township 26 south, range 37 east, New Mexico principal meridian, upon the payment to the Government of $1.25 per acre; and

H. R. 13825. An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

On February 26, 1929:

H. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution for the relief of special disbursing agents of the Alaska Railroad;

H. R. 924. An act for the relief of Joe D. Donisi;

H. R. 4084. An act for the relief of the persons suffering loss on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917;

H. R. 7452. An act for the erection of a tablet or marker to be placed at some suitable point between Hartwell, Ga., and Alfords Bridge in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the national highway between the States of Georgia and South Carolina, to commemorate the memory of Nancy Hart;

H. R. 10191. An act for the relief of G. J. Bell.

H. R. 10304. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of soldiers who served in the Confederate Army and to direct him to preserve in the records of the War Department the names and places of burial of all soldiers for whom such headstones shall have been erected, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11385. An act for the relief of Dr. Andrew J. Baker;

H. R. 14153. An act to authorize an additional appropriation of $150,000 for construction of a hospital annex at Marion Branch;

H. R. 14466. An act to provide for the sale of the old post-office property at Birmingham, Ala.;

H. R. 16568. An act to repeal that portion of the act of August 24, 1912, imposing a limit on agency salaries of the Indian Service;

H. J. Res. 425. Joint resolution providing for an investigation of Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York;

H. R. 8551. An act to create an additional judge in the district of South Dakota;

H. R. 9200. An act to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York;

H. R. 9659. An act for the relief of F. R. Barthold;

H. R. 10374. An act authorizing the acquisition of land and water rights for forest-tree nurseries;

H. R. 11285. An act to establish Federal prison camps;

H. R. 12811. An act to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina;

H. R. 15849. An act authorizing Richard H. Klein, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the borough of Liverpool, Perry County, Pa.;

H. R. 15918. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize credit upon the construction charges of certain water-right applicants and purchasers on the Yuma and Yuma Mesa auxiliary projects, and for other purposes";

H. R. 16270. An act to revise and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the St. John River between Fort Kent, Me., and Clairs, Province of New Brunswick, Canada," approved March 18, 1924;

H. R. 16306. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.;

H. R. 16524. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va.;

H. R. 16920. An act authorizing E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River approximately midway between the cities of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind.; and

H. R. 17024. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo.

On February 27, 1929:

H. R. 14924. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the city of Salt Lake, Utah, a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, for street purposes.

OUACHITA NATIONAL PARK, ARK.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Public Lands, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 675 and pass it, a similar House bill being on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 675) to establish the Ouachita National Park in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a privileged matter. The bill is not properly on the House Calendar; that is, the bill reported by the Public Lands Committee is not properly upon the House Calendar.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you are acquainted with the provisions of paragraph 729 of the House Manual, which provides that a bill that appropriates either money or property of the United States directly or indirectly should be upon the Union Calendar. The only question, then, is: Does this bill appropriate either money or property of the United States?

The Chair will bear in mind that that appropriation may be made either directly or indirectly. I call the attention of the Chair to the provisions of the House bill on two points. I am referring now to the bill H. R. 5729, which reads as follows:

That there is hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal under the laws of the United States and dedicated, set apart, and established as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, under the name of the Ouachita National Park, the tract of land in the State of Arkansas particularly described by and included within metes and bounds as follows, to wit:

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may sound academic to define the word "appropriated," but it means to set apart for a particular purpose, to the exclusion of other purposes. In express terms this bill does that. In this particular case the lands are now embraced within a forest reserve. They are, in other words, liquid assets of the United States, where the timber may be sold and the lands used for commercial purposes. This sets them apart as exclusive for a particular use, and comes squarely, in my judgment, within the definition of the word "appropriated."

But, Mr. Speaker, there is an even stronger point than the one to which I have referred. If you will notice, section 3 of the bill refers in express terms to the act of August 25, 1916, which is the basic act for the creation of the national-park system.

Now, it is a well-known rule of statutory construction that if one law in express terms refers to another law and makes the provisions of the first statute apply to the second one, the two must be construed together.

In this particular case the bill now on the calendar and up for consideration expressly refers to the general act creating the park system and makes the provisions of that general act applicable to this bill, and, therefore, the two must be construed together. The act of August 25, 1916, which is expressly made a part of this act, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to employ whatever help he needs in the administration of a park. In other words, it is a general authorization act for the use of money, and the bill under consideration places the administration of this park under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. The act of August 25, 1916, confers upon the Secretary of the Interior the right to incur necessary expenses in the administration of the act, to employ help, to sell timber, to remove timber, and do whatever is necessary for the proper administration of a park.

This bill is bottomed upon that one. This act, if enacted into law, could only be construed in conjunction with the general authorization act and is clearly, Mr. Speaker, an act appropriating property and money of the United States.

For the reason that the bill appropriates and sets apart exclusively a great area of land now belonging to the United States, it not only indirectly but directly appropriates property of the United States. Moreover, by making direct reference to the act which authorizes the use of money, it appropriates money indirectly to be used by the Secretary of the Interior; and because it does appropriate property and money of the United States, it should be upon the Union Calendar and not upon the House Calendar.

I take it the Speaker is, of course, bound by the decisions of the House which have heretofore been made. I am not unmindful that the House on a bill somewhat similar to this overruled the Speaker, but the Speaker will recall that it was contended in that case by those who disagreed with the position the Speaker took that the appropriating words must appear upon the face of the bill. I call the attention of the Speaker to the difference between that ruling and the measure now before the House for consideration. This bill in express language does refer to and makes a part of it another act, which is clearly an authorization for an appropriation, so it is a direct authorization for an appropriation in this case in express terms; and, as I have pointed out, the act before the Speaker is bottomed upon an act that no one would question should be on the Union Calendar if it were before the House in the first instance.

For these reasons I submit that the point is well taken, that this is not a privileged matter, and this bill should be upon the Union Calendar and not upon the House Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is, of course, not a new question, but it has arisen upon what I suppose is insisted to be a new state of facts. I respectfully submit to the Chair that under the precedents fixed both by the rulings of Speakers and in one case at least by the House itself, the real test of parliamentary legitimacy is whether the bill upon its face shows an expenditure of public funds or a disposition of public properties other than a mere transfer from one jurisdiction to another.

The first suggestion offered by the gentleman from Utah, it seems to me, is not well taken, namely, that this is improperly on the House Calendar because of the fact that the Senate bill, similar precisely, as I understand, to the House bill as amended, transfers certain lands from the Forestry Service to the Park Service. That, Mr. Speaker, is merely a transfer from one department of the Government to another of property which the Government already owns and is not a disposition of public property in the sense contemplated by the rule.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. The point went further than that. I maintain that it sets apart for an exclusive purpose lands that are now subject to disposal.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I do not understand that forestry lands are subject to disposal. The gentleman says the timber can be sold from them. That is the extent of it, is it not?

Mr. COLTON. Oh, no; homesteads may be made upon forest reserves and mineral locations may be made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, well, that would not affect the fundamental proposition involved here. If the Congress sees fit prior to any homestead having been set apart to transfer these lands now belonging to the Government, with all their appurtenances, from one department of the Government to another, I do not think the rule would apply as insisted by the gentleman from Utah.

Now, as to the second suggestion offered by the gentleman from Utah, directing attention to the section of the bill specifically referring to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, I think there is a ruling directly in point which is adverse to that contention. On the 24th of August, 1921, a bill was called up by Mr. Sinnott to accept the cession by the State of Arkansas of exclusive jurisdiction over a tract of land within the Hot Springs National Park, and for other purposes.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Walsh—who will be remembered as one of the excellent parliamentarians of the House, but on this occasion proved to be wrong—made the point of order that that bill was improperly on the House Calendar and stated that it appeared upon its face to be a charge upon the Treasury. Then he proceeded to argue that the taking of additional lands would necessarily, by inference, increase the expense of the maintenance of the park. Mr. Speaker GILLETT made a very brief ruling, as follows:

> The Chair thinks that ceding lands to the Government is not a charge on the Government. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Now, the point is, Mr. Speaker—and it was not fully covered by the ruling of Mr. Speaker GILLETT—that the argument there made was that while in that bill there was no specific reference to the general park act by date, yet lands ceded and becoming a part of a park or, I mean, lands acquired in any way and becoming a part of a park, pass, for administration purposes, under the park act and add to the maintenance expense. That was the gravamen of the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I respectfully submit that that case is in principle precisely on all fours with the case at bar.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. COLTON. I call the attention of the Speaker and the gentleman from Tennessee to this distinction. In this case the express reference is made to the general act creating the Park Service, and that act expressly authorizes the incurring of expenses. So it is not altogether a question of land involved; it is a question of the act authorizing expenditures, and that act made a part of this act by express reference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that a specific reference is made to the act does not distinguish it in principle from a bill which we all know, without any specific reference, would bring a particular parcel under the jurisdiction of the parks in the national park system.

This was a ruling by the Chair. I can quote older rulings. I know the Chair is familiar with them.

Hind's Precedents, volume 4, paragraph 4809:

> A bill which might involve a charge upon the Government that does not necessarily do so, need not go to the calendar of a Committee of the Whole.

Again, section 4810:

> A bill that may incidentally involve expense to the Government, but does not require it, is not subject to the point of order that it must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Paragraph 4811:

> To require consideration in Committee of the Whole a bill must show on its face that it involves an expenditure of money, property, and so forth.

Paragraph 4818:

> Where the expenditure is a mere matter of speculation, the rule requiring consideration in Committee of the Whole does not apply.

These are all rulings by different Speakers of the House, but there is a ruling by the House itself. On January 6, 1927, this question arose upon a bridge bill in which it was proposed to add the heads of two departments other than the War Department to the commission to take some action relative to a bridge out in Oregon or Washington, or somewhere in that section. The gentleman from Oregon, Mr. Sinnott, made the point of order that that bill was not on the proper calendar. It was debated at some length. The Chair made a ruling to the effect that the Chair would take judicial knowledge, so to speak, of the fact that expenses might be engendered by the addition of these two officials in the way in which they were brought into the program by that bill—I do not recall now just how it was—and so sustained the point of order after there had been a very good tempered and a very elaborate argument here before a very full House, as I now remember. Thereupon an appeal was respectfully taken from the decision of the Chair and the House in as quiet a moment as I have ever known it to be in and with as large an attendance as I have ever known it to have in passing upon a point of order, failed to sustain the decision of the Chair.

I think this is thoroughly analogous in principle to the case now before the Chair, and I respectfully submit that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] has presented an argument in support of his point of order that covers the ground so well that I have not in mind to take more than a couple of minutes on the matter. But I do feel it is a matter of so much importance that the fundamental principles underlying the rules ought to be emphasized.

First, I would like to raise this question as to the precedent——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to call attention to one other case. When the Shenandoah National Park bill was brought in—I have not the page of the RECORD before me—the very argument was made then that has been made by the gentleman from Utah now.

Mr. CRAMTON. Was a point of order raised on that bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; the point of order was made, but let me say, in fairness, that the Chair did not pass upon the merits of that question. The Chair held that the point of order came too late, so that he did not rule upon that precise matter, but the argument was made then just as it is being made now.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the precedent cited by the gentleman from Tennessee with reference to the Hot Springs National Park, as I caught the reading of the title of that bill, it was a bill to accept the cession of exclusive jurisdiction over the park.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is an entirely different question from a bill accepting cession of lands within a park.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, he is in error about that. It was to accept lands that were within a park.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman, when he read the title of the bill, referred to acceptance of a cession of exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was to accept the cession by the State of Arkansas of exclusive jurisdiction over a tract of land within the Hot Springs National Park.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, that is not a cession of lands at all. The lands did not come from the State of Arkansas, but, in accordance with the practice in many parks, the State cedes jurisdiction over them. That is not ownership that they are ceding. It is simply the right to administer law over that area.

The Supreme Court of the United States within the week has made a decision with reference to such cession of jurisdiction, and the precedent cited by the gentleman from Tennessee, of course, would have no weight because it does not apply to a kindred proposition. The ceding of title to lands is entirely different from the cession of jurisdiction of a State to administer laws over a certain area.

What I want to emphasize is this: The rule says that we must go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—for that purpose the bill goes to the Union Calendar—"on bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character, directly or indirectly appropriating money or property."

The purpose of that is that we will not lightly impose taxes upon the people or take money or property of the Government and devote it to any particular purpose without giving the representatives of the people gathered here an opportunity to scrutinize that proposed expenditure and make sure of its wisdom. Hence we are required to consider it in Committee of the Whole, where you have debate, discussion, and opportunity for amendment. When it comes up on the House Calendar that opportunity does not exist. I want to urge on the Speaker the fundamental importance of not restricting that public protection of the Public Treasury.

Now, there have been unfortunate decisions—the one referred to as the Bridge case. The argument of the gentleman from Tennessee carried out to its length would mean that the Speaker must cease to have any knowledge of anything except to read some words in the bill. I do not admit that the House accepted that view, but when the House does accept that view, when we get to the point where a bill may go through here at a whirlwind speed without going to the Union Calendar that does mean a great expenditure from the Public Treasury, and does not say in so many words on the face of it that there is going to be an expenditure—in other words, when it gets so that the Speaker can not take notice of that which is really apparent from it, although not expressly stated, then we have lessened the safeguards of the Treasury.

This bill, if it becomes law, does not become effective until the private lands are ceded to the Federal Government. However much there is of the public land does not appear on the face of the bill, but the Speaker knows that we are not now administering these private lands. The Speaker knows from the face of the bill that this bill does not become effective until the lands are ceded to us. The Speaker knows from section 2 that when the private lands are ceded to the Federal Government, that the administrative protection and promotion of those lands become a responsibility and a financial obligation of the Federal Government.

There is no such financial obligation now as to these private lands. There is that financial obligation under this bill when the law becomes effective. Therefore it does show on the face of it that it is indirectly an appropriation of public funds, and if we are to properly safeguard the Treasury there needs to be a construction of this rule that will make it effective. Under such a construction of the rule it seems to me that the point of order is well taken. On the other hand, the doctrine that has been urged by the gentleman from Tennessee, if that becomes the parliamentary law of this body, then it will become very necessary that we have a change in our rules, otherwise there is lacking proper protection for the Treasury.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, one further thought in answer to what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has said. It is my position that by reference to the act of August 25, 1916, you make that act a part of this measure and thereby indirectly you make an authorization for an appropriation whenever you make the provisions of that act applicable to this act. It may be distinguished from the ruling on the bridge bill because in that case there was no direct reference as in this case where indirectly at least another statute is made a part of this bill.

I may say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has pointed out, if the House did err, and proceeded to make a wrong ruling, we ought to be given a chance to correct it. In other words, if we erred once, we ought to be allowed to repent and correct that error. I think this act itself brings forcibly to the House the necessity of a ruling that the Speaker himself may take judicial notice of some things that are within the purview of the Speaker and even of all of the Members of the House. It is no argument that because we have heretofore made an error we ought to continue to perpetuate that error. However, I maintain that by reason of the direct reference to a statute which authorizes an appropriation this bill should be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course the gentleman understands that I do not concede that the House made an error. I think the House held in accordance with the precedents. I have no doubt the Speaker has the cases before him. I could give the gentleman a number of cases. The general principles were stated in the rulings which I read. I did not state the facts of those particular cases, because I am sure the Speaker has them before him. One of the early rulings cited was on a bill to change a judicial district in some way. Mr. Speaker Carlisle overruled the point of order and held that possible expense thereunder was too remote. Another one of the cases in which one of the precedents cites is laid down was the bill providing 8-hour days for letter carriers. A point of order was made that it should go to the Union Calendar, because it necessarily, as everybody knew, would increase the expenses. They would have to increase the number of clerks. However, that did not show on the face of the matter.

Mr. COLTON. But, Mr. Speaker, I am trying to distinguish. In this case we are not left to an inference. I recognize that all of the rulings that the gentleman from Tennessee has cited hold to the doctrine that it must show upon its face. I maintain this does so show upon its face by directly referring to a bill that authorizes an appropriation and expenditure. It is itself an indirect authorization in this measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. Were it not for the decision cited by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and others, wherein the House decided the question, the Chair would feel himself in some doubt about this bill, as he did on the bridge bill. With all due humility, the Chair still thinks that he was right in his decision in that case, although he bows, of course, to the combined wisdom of his colleagues in the House. The Chair believes that some day this decision of the House is going to come up to plague us, but for the time being he feels bound by it, and he feels that this case is on all fours with it.

May the Chair revert for a moment to that bridge bill? In the first place, unlike any other bill the Chair has ever seen, the bridge was to be completed under the jurisdiction of three different Cabinet Secretaries. There was in it a provision as follows:

The said Secretaries, acting jointly, are empowered and if requested to do so are directed to hold public hearings for full and complete determination of said precedent requirements.

The Chair thought at that time, and he still thinks, that this provision shows on its face that certain charges on the Treasury were bound to follow from the passage of the bill. Of course, nobody contends now that these charges did not follow. A letter read into the RECORD by the gentleman from Oregon from the War Department called specific attention to the expenditure that would have to be made, but the decision of the House went to the full extent of holding that in determining whether a bill involves an expenditure the Chair is confined to the face of the bill itself, and not to facts which may have come to his knowledge from any other source, no matter how authentic.

The Chair has before him a letter received to-day from the War Department, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 26, 1929.

The SPEAKER HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In reply to telephonic request, it is estimated that the expenses incurred in connection with the investigation of the Longview Bridge across the Columbia River amounted to $1,650.

This estimate includes costs of hearings by representatives of joint commissions of the Departments of War, Agriculture, and Commerce at Portland, Oreg., and Longview, Wash., the hearing in Washington at the office of the Secretary of War, the travel expenses of engineers sent to bridge site to observe tests of foundations, incidental expenses, and miscellaneous office expenses at Portland, Oreg., and Washington, D. C. In addition to the above expenses the cost of the services rendered by Government employees in this connection may be estimated at $1,250.

Further additional expenses in connection with the investigation will probably not exceed $25, and salaries for additional time to be spent on the investigation by Government employees are estimated at $400.

Very sincerely,

HERBERT DEAKYNE,
Brigadier General, Acting Chief of Engineers.

It appears to the Chair that this result was entirely obvious on the face of the bill itself. But under the decision of the House the Chair was not permitted to use such practical knowledge as he might have of the situation, no matter how authentic it might have been.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] in his argument at that time, after the Chair had stated that in his opinion it was obvious that that would cost money and that he knew from hearing a letter read from the Secretary of War that it would cost money, said:

Mr. Speaker, take my own situation. The Chair speaks of the knowledge that the Chair has of the controversy. The Chair, I know, is perfectly familiar with it. Now, I am not. It may be that inasmuch as there have been various publications in the papers in connection with this bill that I ought to have known more of it, but all I know of the matter, except what has been developed here this morning, I derive from the reading of the bill itself and from the bill only, and I dare say that every Member of the House who has not had personal touch with the situation, such as naturally comes to the Chair, derives his information from the bill, and the bill does not show upon its face the fact that expenditures will be engendered.

In other words, as the Chair understands, it was the position of the gentleman from Tennessee that ignorance upon his part, which would lead to a parliamentary conclusion such as he contended for, was better than information on the part of the Chair which might lead to a different conclusion. The Chair may be permitted an illustration rather more personal in its nature. If the Chair should receive a written invitation, say, from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to indulge in a friendly game of cards, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] would not permit the Chair to make use of information gathered from sad experience in the past that a charge upon his personal treasury would inevitably follow. [Laughter.] That is the exact effect of the decision of the House heretofore rendered.

The Chair thinks that he is bound by that decision, that he must examine the face of the bill alone, and not use any discretion or judgment or knowledge or information of any kind. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

A FAREWELL

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, owing to the illness of Mrs. Berger, I have to leave the city this afternoon. I can not leave without expressing my sincere thanks for your uniform courtesy and kindness in these latter years, after you had excluded me twice before. [Applause.]

I also want to express at this time my thanks for the fair treatment I received at all the executive departments, and especially in the Department of Labor. I hope that Mr. Hoover will see fit to retain that fine gentleman, Mr. James J. Davis, in the job he now holds as Secretary of Labor. [Applause.] And I hope, too, that Mr. Harry E. Hull, Commissioner General of Immigration, will be retained for his splendid service in that position. Mr. Davis is a true and living example of what immigration can do for our country. He is an immigrant from Wales. Surely he is a benefit to the Nation. [Applause.]

That is all I have to say, and I thank you, one and all. [Applause.]

OUACHITA NATIONAL PARK, ARK.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLTON. I understand the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] will have control of the time. I desire to ask him what is the time that may be used by this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington will have one hour, from which he can yield time, and at the end of the hour he can move the previous question.

Mr. COLTON. I want to ask if any time will be allotted to the opponents of the bill?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire if I can yield a portion of that time to the gentleman from Utah without waiving any right of myself to control the balance of the time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that of the hour allotted for debate on this bill one-half may be controlled by the gentleman from Utah and one-half by myself, and at the end of that time the previous question may be considered, as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to yield for debate only to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] 30 minutes, and at the end of one hour the previous question may be considered, as ordered on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 675) to establish the Ouachita National Park in the State of Arkansas

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal under the laws of the United States and dedicated, set apart, and established as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, under the name of the Ouachita National Park, the tract of land in the State of Arkansas particularly described by and included within metes and bounds as follows, to wit:

All lands included within the exterior boundaries of that part of the Ouachita National Forest being in the following land divisions and subdivisions: Sections 35 and 36, township 2 south, range 31 west; east half township 3 south, range 31 west; sections 1, 2, 12, 13, and 24, township 4 south, range 31 west; township 3 south, range 30 west; north half of township 4 south, range 30 west; sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, and 28, township 4 south, range 30 west; south half of township 3 south, range 29 west; sections 17 and 18, township 3 south, range 29 west; north half of township 4 south, range 29 west; sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26, township 4 south, range 29 west; south half of township 3 south, range 28 west; township 4 south, range 28 west; sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, township 5 south, range 28 west; south half of township 3 south, range 27 west; township 4 south, range 27 west; sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, township 5 south, range 27 west; sections 31 and 32, township 3 south, range 26 west; sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, township 4 south, range 26 west; sections 4, 5, and 6, township 5 south, range 26 west; sections 7, 18, and 19, township 4 south, range 25 west; all of said lands being in the State of Arkansas and west of the fifth principal meridian in said State.

SEC. 2. That the administration, protection, and promotion of said Ouachita National Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes."

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right of way, or any other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land: Provided, That this act shall become effective to create the area herein described as a national park only when the title to all of the lands within such area and now privately owned shall have been vested in the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pass upon and accept title to said privately owned lands on behalf of the United States: Provided further, That the United States shall not purchase, by appropriation of public moneys or otherwise, any land within the aforesaid area, but that such land shall be secured by the United States only by public or private donation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] is recognized.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to myself five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill proposes to create a national park in what is now the Ouachita National Forest, in the State of Arkansas. The proposed park comprises an area of about 163,000 acres of land. Of this acreage of 163,000 acres, about 35,000 acres are in private ownership and about 128,000 acres are owned by the Federal Government and are within the Ouachita National Park.

The bill provides that before it shall become effective to create the area a national park, all of the land in private ownership shall have been acquired and deeded or donated to the Government, without cost to the Government. Only upon that condition is the bill to become effective; so it is not to cost the Government any money for the acquisition of these private holdings, and the act does not become effective until those private holdings are extinguished and the title vested in the United States Government.

Now, the Park Service and the Forest Service are opposed to this bill. Their principal objection to it is that it does not come up, as they say, to the standard set by the Congress as to national parks. They do not set out specifically in what particular it fails to reach that standard, but they make the point that the main feature of a national park should be its scenic beauty or scenic grandeur, and that all other considerations are incidental and secondary to this primary consideration. I submit to you that this is one of the most scenically beautiful spots in all America. [Applause.]

It rises from the coastal basin and the plane of the Mississippi Valley at a level of about 400 feet above the sea and stands out as a rugged mountainous country, having all the wildness that nature could provide. It towers to a height of 2,700 feet above sea level, rising practically from the sea level. It stands out in that great plain as something unique and it is the only mountain system and has the only mountain peaks between the Appalachian system and the Rocky Mountains. It is one panorama of beauty. As described by the Forest Service itself, it is a jumble of hills with narrow valleys and with beautiful, limpid streams flowing down those valleys. More than two dozen mountain peaks within this area rise to a height of more than 2,000 feet. They are covered with verdure, with trees, and with a vegetable growth that completely covers them. There is a panorama of beauty that is not paralleled in any national park in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the legislation before us is of such great importance that there should be a full attendance of the Members of the House, and therefore I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 31]

Anthony	Beck, Wis.	Britten	Carley
Auf der Heide	Blanton	Buckbee	Casey
Bacharach	Boies	Bushong	Connolly, Pa.
Beck, Pa.	Bowles	Butler	Crisp

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and fifty Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

LAKE OF THE WOODS ACT

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a bill I have introduced today regarding the Lake of the Woods.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker, in May, 1910, the International Joint Commission was created for the purpose of investigating claims arising out of disputes in connection with boundary waters. To this commission was referred the investigation regarding the damages caused the owners of lands bordering on the Lake of the Woods which is situated along the northern boundary of Minnesota in my district. These damages resulted by reason of raising the water levels in that lake caused by the construction of a dam at Kenora, Ontario. The first dam was built in 1887 and stop logs were placed in 1898. This dam was replaced in 1905 by a new dam. This dam in turn was improved in 1925.

On July 17, 1925, a treaty between the United States and Canada known as the Lake of the Woods treaty was ratified. The purpose of this compact was to provide authority to regulate the level of the Lake of the Woods. It also provided for the acquisition by purchase or condemnation of flowage easements up to elevation 1064 sea level datum upon all lands bordering on Lake of the Woods and tributary streams.

ACTION BY CONGRESS

Congress passed an act (Public, 269, 69th Cong.) to carry into effect provisions of this treaty. I introduced an amendment to this act which was enacted into law on April 18, 1928 (Public, 280, 70th Cong.), providing that any condemnation proceedings instituted for acquisition of flowage easements should be carried on—in accordance with the constitutional provisions of the State of Minnesota, which provides that private property shall not be taken, destroyed, or damaged for public use without just compensation therefor first paid or secured.

Condemnation proceedings have been instituted and three commissioners were appointed by Federal Judge W. A. Cant, of Duluth. The commissioners are Nels S. Hegnes, William Taber, and E. I. Brandt, all of Minnesota. They have already studied more than half of the 522 claims submitted by the property owners. It is understood that the proceedings with regard to the acquisition of easements are progressing as rapidly as the scope and work involved in the undertaking warrants.

CLAIMS FOR PAST DAMAGES

In the act of Congress (Public, 280, 70th Cong.) above referred to is a section which deals with the claims for past damages. I will place the present provisions of this law in the RECORD in order to make clear the purpose and intent of the amendment to the present act which I have introduced:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated, as soon as practicable, all claims for damages caused, prior to the acquisition of flowage easements under this act, to the inhabitants of the United States by fluctuation of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods due to artificial obstructions in outlets of said lake, and after due notice and opportunity for hearing, shall ascertain and determine the loss or injury, if any, that may have been sustained by the respective claimants and to report to Congress for its consideration the amount or amounts he may find to be equitably due such claimants, together with a statement in each case of the substantial facts upon which the conclusion is based: Provided, That all claims not presented to the Secretary of War under this provision prior to the expiration of 30 days from the date of the passage of this amendatory act, shall not be considered by him and shall be forever barred.

The investigation of claims for past damages submitted by property owners around Lake of the Woods involves a study beginning at the time the first dam was built in 1887. The International Joint Commission, created in 1910, for the purpose of investigating these claims, recommended in their report that a settlement be made with the claimants. While the claims are being made against the United States, Canada will share in the payment up to one-half of the awards ordered for the flowage easements if the expenditure be incurred before July 17, 1930, five years after the coming into force of the present convention. This is in addition to a payment already made by Canada of $275,000 for protective works and the acquisition of easements.

The treaty provides that the two governments shall each on its own side of the boundary assume responsibility for any damage or injury which may have hitherto resulted to it or to its inhabitants from the fluctuations of the level of the Lake of the Woods or of the outflow therefrom.

TIME LIMIT SET

It should be observed here that the present proceedings with respect to payments for the acquisition of easements should be expedited in order to be completed before July 17, 1930, a year hence. There is no time limit set for the payment of past damages, but it is urged that the payment of these claims be expedited.

Considerable discussion and correspondence have been carried on with respect to the manner of handling the claims for past damages. In this connection I quote from a letter dated February 20, 1929, written to me by Brig. Gen. Herbert Deakyne, Acting Chief of Engineers:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 20, 1929.

Hon. C. G. SELVIG,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SELVIG:

* * * * * * *

A total of 495 claims have been presented to the district engineer for investigation and report. Reports have been prepared on 122 of these cases, but all may have to be revised in some elements, depending on the law laid down by the court in the related condemnation cases. Tentative awards, together with a statement of the substantial facts upon which the conclusions are based, are included in these reports. Reports on field examinations, containing information collected by agents of the department and suggestions as to awards, have been compiled in 144 additional cases, but the reports on these have yet to be prepared.

With the exception of one case (that of the claim presented by independent school district No. 12—Warroad High School) no hearings have been given. In the hearing given the Warroad High School, claimants were represented by counsel.

Claimants have not been notified as to the awards recommended, except in the case of the Warroad High School, referred to above. It is not considered desirable to notify the claimants as to probable awards until the facts in each case can be presented and the award passed on by the department. The awards, together with the supporting facts, will be placed before the claimants when the matter is open for hearing, and they will then be given every opportunity to present, either personally or by counsel, orally or in writing, any data or arguments in favor of a different award than has been recommended.

As required by the law, and as dictated by justice and equity, the claimant will have opportunity of refuting statements contained in the district engineer's report and of introducing any evidence he may have at his command to contradict statements regarded by him as incorrect. Any evidence submitted by the claimant will receive careful consideration. Written testimony—and oral testimony, in so far as it is practicable to do so—will be embodied in the final report to be submitted to the Secretary of War. Under the law Congress has reserved to itself final action on these claims; and should claimants be dissatisfied with the final awards recommended by the Secretary of War, they can appeal to Congress for a further hearing by congressional committee.

In addition to the employee referred to in paragraph 2 of my letter of February 8, the employment of another man, who, by relieving pressure at another point, will thus aid in the investigation of these claims, is pending, and a third man is being sought for employment directly on this work. By thus increasing the force engaged in this work, and with reasonable success in collecting data and facts, it is expected that final reports in all cases may be completed within the next 12 months. The securing of facts in many cases is most difficult.

Very respectfully,

HERBERT DEAKYNE,
Brigadier General, Acting Chief of Engineers.

COURT REVIEW OF CLAIMS

I introduced H. R. 17276, on February 26, 1929, which amends section 3 of the amended Lake of the Woods act. This bill provides that the Secretary of War shall file a certified copy of the report of past damages and awards with the clerk of the United States district court, in the district and division of the district in which the lands involved are situated and thereupon the same proceedings shall be had in such court on such report and awards as upon awards of the commissioners in the case of condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of flowage easements.

I introduced this amendment because the claimants should have full and free opportunity to avail themselves of the court procedure in case the award proposed by the district engineers' office is not considered satisfactory.

A thorough study of the proceedings of the International Joint Commission leads me to believe that the members of that commission intended that the settlers whose lands have been overflowed by reason of the higher lake levels should have every opportunity to present their claims under the regular procedure in a court with jurisdiction. This is a measure of justice to which each man is entitled.

The judicial machinery of the land should be made available to these settlers, many of whom, on account of the long delay and innumerable setbacks and discouragements encountered, beginning nearly 30 years ago, are rightfully insistent that Congress by appropriate legislation give them their day in court.

JOINT MEMORIAL BY MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

The Legislature of the State of Minnesota adopted a joint resolution on February 8, 1929, memorializing Congress to give to the settlers the right to appeal to the court and to give said courts jurisdiction to hear and determine the appeals so taken. This memorial is on file with the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A study of the Lake of the Woods levels reveals that the first dam raised the water 18 inches, the second dam 3 feet, and at the present time, under the final report of the International Joint Commission, a 5-foot increase in the lake level is allowed.

Many settlers were adversely affected and have suffered losses from these high levels. These losses are now being investigated. Ample and valid reasons for court review of the engineers' findings in regard to past damages have been advanced.

The bill which has been introduced (H. R. 17276) provides that the report of the engineers shall be filed within 90 days after the passage of the act. The bill will be reintroduced next December, which will give the engineers the necessary time suggested in the letter received from the Acting Chief of Engineers for the final report to be made.

OUACHITA NATIONAL PARK, ARK.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to create a new national park. The Ouachita National Park in the State of Arkansas proposal is urged by people in that vicinity and in that State. The proposal is opposed vigorously by the National Park Service, both under Director Mather and under Director Albright. It is opposed by the United States Forest Service, both under Colonel Greeley and under Major Stuart. It is opposed by the Secretaries of Interior and of Agriculture. It is opposed by the National Parks Association, by the American Civic Association, and all other organizations I am familiar with that are concerning themselves about the proper standards for and use of our national parks. The area concerned is contended by those who are familiar with our national parks and have seen this area to be of an attractive character, suitable for recreational purposes, but not outstanding and not reaching up to present national-park standards. We have municipal parks, county parks, State parks, and national parks. The sole responsibility for maintaining public parks should never be placed on the National Government. The words "national park" in the United States stand for that which possesses such great merit as to scenery that it challenges the attention of the world and by intrinsic interest attracts visitors to the area from all over the world. The name "national park" to-day means something that is outstanding and that challenges admiration. It does not mean that a certain community wants a good commercial investment. It means there is an area there which invites and warrants the inspection of the world, whether it be Yellowstone, with its scientific wonders; whether it be Crater Lake, with its unrivalled blue of the lake in the old crater; whether it be Glacier Park, with the greatest collection of peaks and glaciers anywhere in the world; whether it be Mount Rainier, where a rugged, beautiful, all-the-year-snow-capped peak rises eight or nine thousand feet above all around it; whether it be Yosemite, with the famed Yosemite Falls and Bridal Veil Falls and Half Dome; or the Grand Canyon, great eroded chasm. "National park" is the hall-mark of outstanding merit in natural beauty and interest.

The great question to-day is not just whether we will add one national park to the list, it is whether we will maintain a standard for national parks that will preserve for these areas the fame that now attaches to the words "national park."

It was not long ago that Lindbergh made that wonderful flight across the Atlantic. The greatness of his achievement joined with his wonderful personality, won the hearts of America, and this House voted to pay him honor, and we voted him a congressional medal of honor. I do not know how many times individuals have been so honored by the Congress, perhaps one hundred times in all our history; but, in any event, to hold a congressional medal of honor—oh, intrinsically it has no great value, but it does mean outstanding accomplishment. But if we were to pass a multitude of bills giving every aviator to-day a medal who was to fly 1,000 miles even in the stress of storm and danger—oh, his accomplishment is commendable, it is interesting, it is worth while; but if we were to give the congressional medal of honor for every such flight, we would cheapen the medal we gave to Lindbergh and the others who hold it.

There is a standard to be maintained and that is what we are appealing to you to-day to do—maintain the national-park standard. [Applause.] If you do not, if you pass this bill on the plea that every State is entitled to a national park, you invite a flood of such bills. If you are going to pass this bill because it means something commercially to a community, that is unfair to the lovers of nature who cherish the name "national park."

I hope this House will consider this with great care, because the standards that have been built up here for years are now under attack. The passage of this bill means a lowering of the standards, a flood of other bills that means a still greater lowering of the standards. [Applause.]

The following reports adverse to this proposal should challenge our consideration. The report of the Secretary of the Interior February 1, 1928, said:

It is shown by the records of this department that the area described in this bill was inspected by representatives of the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture and the National Park Service of this department on May 7, 1926. From a joint report rendered by the representatives of these bureaus it would appear that this area should not be made a national park for the reason that it contains no distinctive scenic or other features comparable with the standard set for the establishment of national parks, and that the area has nothing of outstanding or national significance which would warrant placing it in a national-park category.

Very significant was the action of the National Conference on State Parks in refusing approval to this bill. In a letter to the House Public Lands Committee March 26, 1928, the following action by this body of disinterested experts, including the report of an inspection of the area by such an expert, was given:

MARCH 26, 1928.

Hon. NICHOLAS J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Public Lands Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: The National Conference on State Parks is interested in H. R. 5729, a bill to create the Ouachita National Park in Arkansas since at the time of its 1926 national conference at Hot Springs, Ark., it was asked to pass a resolution favoring the creation of the proposed national park. Believing that it did not measure up to the recognized standard for national parks the conference acted adversely on this request.

At that time the conference had in its service as field secretary Mr. Raymond H. Torrey, of New York. Mr. Torrey was asked to make an inspection and report to the chairman his judgment of the area's possibilities for a national park. His recommendations were as follows:

"My opinion of the portion of the Ouachita National Forest which is proposed as a national park is that it does not measure up to the high standards now set for such preserves. It seems to me it is in good hands in the National Forest Service and such recreational values as it possesses can be developed by that service.

"In scenic values, forest cover, and water resources it is about on a par with some of the larger State parks and forests. It is about on a par with some of the Pennsylvania State forests, for example, and resembles them in elevations and timber, but is not so well watered. It is also like the Allegany State Park in western New York. It is not as good as two large State preserves that come to mind, the Custer State Park in South Dakota and the Adirondack State Park in New York. Several of the State preserves in the Northwest and on the Pacific slope, such as the State forests in Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, the California and Redwood State Parks in California, and the Lake Itasca State Park in Minnesota far surpass it in scenic values and recreational resources.

"The Ouachita National Forest area, if it were now in private hands and were being purchased for public purposes, would be good average State park material. But it is in good hands, and will eventually receive all the recreational development of which it is capable."

In view of the foregoing we respectfully urge that the committee do not report favorably on the bill.

Very truly yours,

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON STATE PARKS.
STEPHEN T. MATHER, Chairman.
BEATRICE N. WARD, Executive Secretary.

Mr. Arno B. Cammerer, Assistant Director of the National Park Service, a lover of nature, devoting his life with notable unselfishness and unusual ability to the cause of parks, recreation centers, and conservation, inspected the area and reported:

However, in my opinion, the scenic offerings in this area are not so distinctive or of such a character as should receive recognition for establishment as a national park. There are many other areas of a similar nature and character in other States which compare well with this, and if this area were to receive national-park status, it would set a precedent for other States to insist upon their areas being taken over as national parks as well. Such areas, you have often pointed out, are more suitable for State park creation, and it is my opinion that if the local people of Mena are insistent upon creating a park it should be a State park.

Colonel Greeley, at that time Chief Forester, joined in this adverse report on this area for national-park purposes:

It is our judgment that this area should not be made a national park for the reason that there are no distinctive scenic or other features comparable with the standards set for the establishment of national parks, and that the area contains nothing of outstanding or national significance which would warrant placing it in the national-park category.

We consider it unnecessary for this reason to elaborate on any other objections that might appear to the establishment of the park, even though the area measured up scenically to national-park standards, such as the existence of the large area of private holdings.

The final inspection of the area by the National Park Service was by Roger Toll, one of their ablest and most experienced men, then superintendent of Rocky Mountain National Park and now superintendent of Yellowstone National Park. And his report should convince anyone of the undesirability of this bill. In part he said:

National-park policy: Congress, through the past 50 years, has established a national-park policy, as is evidenced by the existing national parks and also by the many areas that have been proposed as national parks but have not been accepted as such by Congress. Congress has created as national parks those areas that were of outstanding phenomenal character and, with three exceptions, has refused to create as national parks numerous other areas that have been proposed. During the past 20 years, all parks that have been created have been of high standard and exceptional quality. During that period, Congress has rejected all areas that were unsuitable for national parks, even though many of these areas have beauty and attractiveness, but not scenic supremacy.

The Department of the Interior has frequently been called upon to submit to Congress its recommendation as to the suitability of various areas proposed for national parks. In order that these recommendations might conform with the established policy of Congress, the department has tried to put this policy into words and to make its recommendations consistent therewith. It is the policy of the National Park Service and of the Department of the Interior to maintain the standard established by Congress and to recommend as national parks only those areas which have the most remarkable and superlative scenery in the country or other unique features so extraordinary as to possess national interest of the highest order.

Congress has the right at any time to raise or lower the standard that it has set. It may raise the standard by eliminating the national parks of lowest rank or it may lower the standard by adding any number of new areas that are inferior, from a national standpoint, to existing parks.

The people of the country judge the congressional standard for national parks by means of the existing parks, and they have come to feel that the national parks are the Nation's superlative natural attractions, selected because of the unique features they contain or because of their remarkable scenic qualities. People in all parts of the country are confident that a visit to a national park will repay the necessary expenditure of time, money, and effort, even for a long trip. It is believed undesirable to destroy this confidence by establishing a national park that will not repay this expenditure in an equal degree, or that will prove disappointing to those who are familiar with the existing major national parks. Every national park should be worth traveling across the country to see. If an area is not of that quality, it is not of national-park type.

Scenic regions of the United States: Many States comprising "America the beautiful" have areas that equal the Ouachita area in beauty and attractiveness and many States have scenic areas on a grander scale and of a more magnificent type that would be entitled to precedence over the Ouachita area if future national parks are to be created in order of scenic supremacy.

Geographic distribution of national parks: Congress has not shown an intention of creating inferior national parks in order to secure a uniform geographic distribution of parks throughout the country. Even if the thought of "a national park for every State" were to be given any consideration, Arkansas already has one national park, while 35 States have none.

Relation of national parks to density of population: If the density of tributary population were the primary consideration in the selection of national parks, there are a number of other regions in the United States that would claim precedence over the Ouachita area, on this basis. The use and accessibility of an area are important secondary considerations for a park, but they are secondary, not primary, considerations.

Mountains of the United States: One of the principal features emphasized as an argument for the Ouachita area is its mountains. More than two-thirds of the States in the Union have points of greater elevation than the Ouachita Mountains. This group of mountains is far down on the list of mountain ranges of the country. The State of Arkansas has a number of mountains higher than any in the proposed area.

Controlling features versus incidental features: The decision as to the suitability of an area for a national park rests primarily on the supremacy of its chief feature, usually scenery. All other considerations are incidental. Perfect weather conditions, large tributary population, remarkable accessibility, and other features that may be important assets in determining its recreational use or possibilities, will not make a national park out of a scenically unsuitable area. An area capable of the greatest recreational use, is not necessarily suitable for a national park. The Palisades Interstate Park has greater accessibility, a larger tributary population, and greater volume of visitors and recreational use than any national park, but though it has beautiful scenery, fully equal to that of the Ouachitas, and of greater variety, it is not of national-park type. In some of the national parks, such as Mount McKinley, the recreational use is still very small, but the areas have such scenic qualities as to make them very desirable for national parks.

Proposed Ouachita National Park: The area is in the Ouachita Mountains, a few miles southeast of Mena, Ark. The proposed park has a maximum length of 33½ miles east and west, and a maximum width of 13½ miles north and south. The proposed boundaries include some 163,000 or 170,000 acres.

The proposed park area is primarily a region of hills or mountains of moderate elevation. It is an attractive region, well wooded, has many clear streams, a number of cascades or low waterfalls, and numerous springs.

Arkansas already has a number of attractive recreational areas that offer to the people of southern Arkansas, eastern Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi an opportunity to reach, with a comparatively short and inexpensive journey, a pleasant region where the temperature is cooler and where they may enjoy life in the open, under conditions superior to their own less favored summer climate. The Ouachita area has considerable possibilities for recreational use and, if developed, would form an important addition to the present recreational attractions of Arkansas.

The area is now a part of the Ouachita National Forest. The Forest Service has made a careful and detailed study of the recreational possibilities of the region, and has made plans for the accomplishment of this development. It would seem that a united effort on the part of the citizens and their Representatives in Congress would be certain to secure the appropriation of funds to continue this development at a faster rate in the future than has been possible in the past and to insure the completion of any reasonable program within a short period.

If the State of Arkansas wishes to expedite this development and give it additional publicity, it could establish a State park in this area to include at first perhaps only a few tracts in the most strategic locations. The State and the Forest Service could well cooperate in the development of this area.

It would seem that the recognition of this area as a State park, and the expenditure of a moderate amount of State funds or the investment by individuals or corporations in the erection of hotels, lodges, or camps, would not only render a public service to the people of the adjacent region but would also bring to the State and the community a revenue from tourist travel far in excess of the required expenditure.

There is a need for municipal parks, for county parks, for State parks, and for national parks. It is not, I believe, the policy of the Federal Government to undertake projects that can and should be carried out by the individual States. There is no important feature in this area that requires conservation by the establishment of a national park. The area is now being administered by the Federal Government, through the Forest Service, primarily for the purpose of conservation of its timber resources, for present and future economic use, and secondarily for recreational use. The Forest Service is ready to develop the recreational use of the area far beyond its present extent. This area is in good hands and through cooperation of the Forest Service, the State, and the community the result that is desired by all may be speedily accomplished.

Even if the area were of supreme scenic quality, the fact that some 35,000 or 43,000 acres within the boundary of the tract are in private ownership presents a serious obstacle to national-park status. The private property, however, does not prevent the further development of the region by the Forest Service, with or without the aid of the State.

The development of the Ouachita area for recreational use, is and should be, regarded with friendly, sympathetic interest, but this development can be adequately provided by the Forest Service, with Federal funds, with or without the aid of the State. Those who are interested in securing the development of this area, have expended money and energy for several years past without results in their efforts to have the area established as a national park. It seems probable that if a fraction of this effort had been directed toward cooperation with the Forest Service, and aiding it in securing necessary appropriations, that the desired development would now be under way at a highly satisfactory rate of progress.

The Ouachita area does not contain features nor scenery on a scale equal to, nor even approaching, the majority of the national parks that have been established by Congress. The area would not add any new feature of importance to the national-park system that is not already represented in a higher degree in the existing parks. In my opinion, the National Park Service can not consistently recommend consideration of this area for a proposed national park.

The Members of this House who have joined in the adverse minority report are devoted conservationists, have a wide familiarity with our national-park system, are men whose judgment in such a matter is unbiased and worthy of special consideration—Representatives COLTON, of Utah; HOOPER, of Michigan; LEAVITT, of Montana; WINTER, of Wyoming; and DOUGLAS, of Arizona. They close their very effective minority report:

The minority believe that a recreational center should be established and maintained in the Ouachita National Forest. In fact, the Forest Service is developing that region rapidly now. During the last year considerable money was spent in road building and in providing conveniences for the traveling public. We believe that this class of service can be and will be better performed by the National Forest Service than the Park Service.

If the Ouachita National Park is created as provided for in this bill, it will be a departure from the long-established practice which has been consistently followed since 1872. It will mean that we shall create parks based upon the theory of local demand or general distribution. This we believe to be a serious mistake. We believe that Congress should either appoint a commission of experts to study this matter or should be governed by the Department of the Interior, which now has charge of the Park Service. It is our belief that no park should be created in the future that is not carefully examined by men thoroughly familiar with the park system and the standard of national parks. In other words, we believe that an architect should be consulted before a building is commenced.

The minority members of this committee stand ready to join in any movement which will more rapidly develop this area in the Ouachita National Forest as a great recreational center, but we do not believe that it measures up to the standard of the national park and therefore should not be created into one.

A report on this proposal worthy of most thoughtful consideration is that by Miss Harlean James, secretary of the American Civic Association. Miss James spent four days in a most careful inspection of this area. She is recognized as an enthusiastic conservationist, an authority of wide reputation on park questions, and her analysis of the proposition is illuminating:

DESCRIPTION OF THE AREA

The Ouachita Mountains near Mena, Ark., are of the mound type, forming groups of broken chains similar to some of the foothills of the Pacific coast; and though some of the rounded peaks reach an altitude exceeding 2,000 feet, they rise from a plateau of considerable height. The view from Eagle Mountain is quite extensive, because it tops the surrounding knobs, but there is no spectacular mountain scenery. Dark, stately pines and brilliantly green hardwoods clothe the slopes with good forest cover. The tops of the mountains are formed of white and colored rock which breaks into beds of small, sharp stones when trails are cut. The timber on the mountain tops is small and straggling. The dogwood was in bloom, and we saw violets, trilliums, and other woods flowers. Almost every intervale between the wooded mountains has been partly cleared and is occupied by cultivated fields and scattered groups of cabins and farm buildings.

From the fire tower on Eagle Mountain we could see the furrows being turned in the fields of the valleys below. Within the borders of the proposed national park the forest roads are literally lined with private holdings, cultivated fields, land cut over by private lumber companies, and privately owned standing timber. The forest roads—which, though narrow, are perfectly traversable in a pouring rain—are bordered by private land for about two-thirds of their length. Access to many drainage areas containing national-forest land is controlled by private land.

In addition to the very pleasing sylvan and pastoral views from the vantage points of the rounded mountains, the Little Missouri Falls and Standing Rock are points of local fame. The Little Missouri Falls are rather rapids than falls, as the water flows over a series of rocky ledges between banks marked by stone outcroppings partly covered with a straggly growth of shrubs and trees. It is a delightful picnic spot, such as can be found in the headwaters of many of the mountain and hill streams in the United States.

On our drive and tramp to the Standing Rock we found cultivated fields alternating with the wooded banks and rocky ledges of Board Camp Creek. The Standing Rock itself is interesting, having the aspect of a high masonry stone dam across the creek, which might have been partly demolished or possibly left in an unfinished condition—just the right sort of spot to offer an interesting objective for pleasure-seeking parties or solitary ramblers.

The water in the streams of this part of the country presents an oily appearance which is slightly greenish and opaque. The great beauty of the clear sparkling water of the Rocky Mountains is lacking.

Most of the best forests have been cut over. The forest land held by the National Forest Service under its system of harvesting the forest crop is capable of furnishing a good commercial cut every 30 or 35 years on a rotation of tree life of about 140 years. Under the principle of selective cutting the pine forests under the ownership of the United States Government present always a very good appearance, but, of course, even where this form of cutting has occurred the primeval forest and the natural ground cover no longer exist. The shaley character of the soil leaves the pine needles and leaves quite dry even after a heavy rain, adding to the difficulty of protection from forest fires. The local settlers are firm in the belief that burning over their fields will destroy the boll weevil and the chiggers and ticks but their fires often get away from them and cause great damage to the surrounding forest.

On the whole it may be said that the area, in the section which I traversed, contains good cover forest, yet, even as a forest it is far less impressive than many of the forests in the White and Green Mountains in New England, the Adirondacks and Catskills of New York, the Blue Ridge in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, the Appalachians in North Carolina and Tennessee, the Rocky Mountains in Colorado, and the Cascade and Coast Range in Washington, Oregon, and California.

WHAT THE PEOPLE HOPE TO SECURE BY CONVERTING THE NATIONAL FOREST INTO A NATIONAL PARK

From accounts in the local newspapers, from statements before the committees of Congress, and conversations with a few local people it would seem that the following advantages are being set forth as sure to follow the establishment of a national park—

(1) It is hoped that 100 miles of hard surface wide road would be built by the National Park Service within the area, though at present these roads would not form links in any important national highway.

(2) It is hoped that the establishment of a national park would bring increased business to Mena and help to rehabilitate it. Mena, a town of some 4,000 inhabitants, lies on the Kansas City Southern road, which runs south from Kansas City to the Gulf. The town was once a division headquarters, but the railroad has moved these headquarters away. I observed in the town of Mena a good many deserted buildings in the business part of the town.

(3) The private owners of cut-over land hope that the consolidation of a national-park area and the elimination of private holdings within it might lead to exchange of cut-over land within the area for standing timberland in other national-forest areas to the north.

(4) Owners of private lands within the proposed park hope that they could develop patronage of camps and inns either on their own land or secure concessions from the National Park Service which would be profitable.

(5) It is hoped that with improved roads, hotel and camping facilities great numbers of visitors would come to the area seeking recreation.

HOW FAR WOULD THESE HOPES BE REALIZED?

In the existing national parks expensive roads have been built only as the number of visitors to the parks justified the expenditures. In most of the parks an admission fee is charged. At the present time there are several very good camping grounds in the Ouachita National Forest area, but they are very little used. A resort hotel built on the mountains north of Mena proved an utter failure and is now crumbling in ruins. As a matter of fact, there is very little camping out in these mountains after June, because of the chiggers and ticks.

As a national park, hunting, trapping, and commercial fishing would be prohibited. The settlers, as they are called, who live within the proposed park grow a little cotton, a little corn, have a few cows and pigs, produce a little garden truck, and depend for the rest of their living on hunting, trapping, and fishing. The sale of pelts of fur-bearing animals brings in each year to these settlers a small cash income. Therefore, even if the area could be made into a national park, there is every reason to suppose that the local people would find that they had paid a very high price for the name of national park. Visitors from other parts of the country might be lured once by advertising, but the scenic attractions, in my opinion, are not sufficient to draw and hold large numbers of visitors from the United States as a whole. Some of those who might come in to the national forest to hunt and fish would not care to come to a national park where hunting was prohibited. Except in the spring, I can hardly believe that many people from other parts of the country would care to camp in the Ouachita Mountains.

The resort hotels in Hot Springs bring large numbers of persons suffering from rheumatism and other ailments. It may be that resort hotels in this area for people in good physical condition would in the future receive patronage, but so far the experiments along this line have proved failures. There is no reason to suppose that the name of national park would fill such hotels. The proposals to enhance the scenery by artificial lakes show a lack of appreciation of what a national park should be. Indeed, a private venture has resulted in the creation of an artificial lake at Bethesda Springs, near Mena; but we could not observe a single building on the cottage sites thus provided.

WHAT WOULD BE SACRIFICED IN GIVING UP THE NATIONAL FOREST?

Under the present policy of the United States Forest Service this area is yielding a good income on a 30-year harvesting cycle, which maintains the steady growth and good appearance of the forest. Of the receipts from timber sales, 10 per cent is returned to the Forest Service for the building of roads within the forest. An additional 25 per cent is returned directly to the State, which in turn distributes it to the counties in which the national forests are located for upkeep of county roads and schools. Under an Arkansas statute three-fifths of this 25 per cent item is expended for the support of the schools within the counties in which national-forest land is located. The money is apportioned to the school districts in proportion to the number of acres of national-forest land lying within the boundaries of each school district. This gives the little country schools amounts which range from $75 to $150 and $300, and in one case as high as $700 a year. An amount as large as the last figure covers far more than 50 per cent of the teacher's annual salary. Some of the mountain schools are maintained very largely by the apportionment received from the national-forest receipts. If this area were made into a national park, about 40 schools would lose this income.

With the closing of the area as a game preserve the economic loss to the community would be quite considerable, and there is very little evidence that the economic gain, even to the few who would share in it, would equal the losses. The creation of limited game preserves within the forests would result in increasing the game.

CONCLUSIONS

My conclusions therefore are—

(1) The area, even if it were in its primeval state, does not qualify as a national park, which should be characterized by natural conditions of scenic beauty and scientific interest of nationally outstanding importance.

(2) In its present state, with many acres of cut-over lands and many more acres being logged under scientific forestry management, with a great number of cultivated farms and private holdings honeycombing the entire proposed park and lining the existing roads, the area as a whole is not suited for a State park.

(3) Under a careful classification of lands for their highest use the management of the land as a national forest seems to promise a more valuable return to the United States and the State of Arkansas than any other feasible use.

(4) In view of the fact that the United States Forest Service recognizes the desirability of restricting timber cutting to areas where there would be practically no conflict between its timber-utilization policies and its plans for recreation purposes, it would seem that all recreation needs can be met without sacrificing the economic income from the thousands of acres of forest land over which only an occasional hiker may roam. Areas such as those surrounding Missouri Falls, Standing Rock, and in Mine Creek would not be cut over under this policy.

(5) The creation of the Ouachita National Park from existing forest lands and cultivated farms would open the door to the inclusion in the national park system of hundreds, if not thousands, of similar areas in all parts of the country. This would result in the weakening of the present national park system and in the administration by the Federal Government of recreation areas which could be much better managed by local authorities.

HARLEAN JAMES,
Secretary American Civic Association.

Scenery can not be made by act of Congress. Passage of this bill will not cause Ouachita to become of world-wide fame or to rival Yosemite or the Grand Canyon. It does tend to lower the standards and invites a flood of other bills to promote local interests while jeopardizing the value of the name "national park."

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LETTS].

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, I am glad to say a few words to-day in behalf of this bill because I have seen the area and am tremendously impressed with it.

I wonder if the Members of this House know that we already have a national park in Arkansas almost contiguous to the territory here described? The Hot Springs National Park is right at hand, and I have felt that in reporting this bill we should have provided that the administration of this park should be placed upon the superintendent already there at Hot Springs.

Talk about something unique, where would you find anything more unique than the Hot Springs of Arkansas?

Mr. CLARKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. No; I can not yield until I finish my statement. I am sorry.

The question of standards is urged. Of course, standards are relative according to the interpretation men place on their own experiences. What is standard for one person is not the standard recognized by another man or some other community.

Those who have traveled through the West and have seen the great national parks in the Rocky Mountain region know immediately that this area in Arkansas does not measure up to the Rocky Mountain standard; but here in this vast territory of the Mississippi Valley and the great Southwest and, if I may say so, to the east of that area, nothing can be found to compare with the great Rocky Mountain parks. Now, are we to say that there shall be no national parks unless they are out in one of the Rocky Mountain States? Are we to foreclose against other parts of the country?

I would have preferred rather than to designate this area as a national park to authorize something in the nature of a national recreation area, with a service that would enable the people of this vast area—Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, and all of that extensive country—devoid of anything like the strange beauties of nature found in the Rocky Mountains, to get a full measure of enjoyment out of what they have with roads built by the National Park Service or the Forest Service, permitting the people of those States to go up into these mountains and follow the streams and enjoy camping places provided by the service, and thereby to preserve and make practical and wholesome use of this very unique mountain and wooded area, surrounded by a vast territory that is flat and level and almost devoid of natural changes and breaks which gladden the hearts and eyes of men.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. My thought has always been that we could well afford to make some characterization, something different from that designated as a national park, if you please, and give the people in areas like the Ouachita Mountains the opportunity to enjoy the grandeur of nature that has been placed for them, ever though it does not compare with the areas out West. It means, perhaps, a classification of parks and should involve a policy which meets the requirements of the whole country.

I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BOWMAN. What are the physical characteristics of this territory?

Mr. LETTS. The physical characteristics are unique in many respects. There are found many varieties of trees and foliage and flowers, and as it is proper to distinguish one area for one thing and another for something else, the Ouachita Mountain area has its distinct charms.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LETTS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Are not all of these facilities now available under the National Forest Service?

Mr. LETTS. No; there are no suitable roads, there are no camping places provided, and the National Forest Service does not care to render the service it might. Out in the West the Forest Service has done a great deal; it has established camping spots and invites the people to come there, but it is not done in the Mississippi Valley, and the Southwest is entitled to something of this public service. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I shall preface what I have to say in opposition to this bill by the statement that I have not been in the area. I was requested to go with the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am a member, but I felt, and I think quite justly, that unless a person could spend weeks within the area and make a complete examination, do it thoroughly, so as to arrive at an intelligent opinion of his own, it would be infinitely wiser to investigate the report of experts on the subject and examine topographical maps. So what I have to say is not predicated on personal observation, but rather upon observation by those who are considered to be—in fact, are acknowledged to be—experts on the subject.

The issue is not whether there should be a recreational area established in the State of Arkansas. It is not whether this particular area included within the central part of the United States should have a playground. The fundamental issue is, Does this particular area measure up to the standards and requirements of the National Park Service as established by a policy of 50 years' standing?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I will be delighted to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Has the gentleman ever visited this particular area?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I have just spoken about that for about three minutes. The fundamental issue is, Does this particular area measure up to the standards and requirements of a national park?

That leads naturally to the question, What is a national-park standard? What are the requirements for a national park? An area to be set aside as a national park should have in it some distinctive—some scenic—feature of outstanding grandeur, some extraordinary natural phenomenon. I need only cite a few cases, which will probably be more effective in defining national-park standards or requirements than any verbal definition.

The Grand Canyon of Arizona was set aside as a national park, first, because of its extraordinary beauty—remarkable colors in the canyon—and because it is in an example of erosion unequaled in the world.

The Yosemite Park, Calif., was set aside for the general public because, silhouetted against the snow-capped Sierras, there are great granite monoliths rising thousands of feet perpendicularly from the floor of the valley.

The Yellowstone was set aside because of the variegated colors to be found, and because of the unique effects of the action of thermal waters.

I could go on and enumerate the parks—every national park—and cite the existence within each of these parks of some natural phenomenon which is peculiar and extraordinary and not to be found elsewhere.

That, then, is the definition of national-park standards or requirements. A mere demand for a recreational area does not come within the scope of national-park standards or requirements.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman speaks of a national-park standard. What is the standard for national parks?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I have just been talking about that for three or four minutes.

The question is, Does this particular area measure up to the requirements? What is there in the area? A geologist of the United States Geological Survey has testified that there are sediments, folded and deformed, standing on end. If that be anything extraordinary, then the person who cited them can not have had much experience traveling throughout the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Has it not been brought out that there are 57 varieties of trees in this area?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I shall come to that in a moment. If sediments standing on end be considered as falling within the requirements of national parks, then I can show every Member in this House at least three areas in my State on the desert where sediments 200 feet or more in thickness are deformed, folded, and standing on end in the middle of a cactus forest. Yet I do not think, nor would anyone else think, that that particular area should be set aside as a national park. It has been claimed that there are 57 or more different flora in this Ouachita area and that because there are that many the area comes up to the requirements of a national park. In a similar area or an area of similar size, on the desert, I can point out over a hundred different flora and yet no one here would contend that any portion of the Great American Desert should be set aside as a national park.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the gentleman not think that the very number itself, 57, suggests a variety of pickles more than it does nature's laboratory?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Would it not be a good thought to spread these parks out a little bit and put some of them in other parts of the country than the West?

Mr. DOUGAS of Arizona. I am in hearty accord with the theory of setting aside recreational areas scattered throughout the United States, but I am not in favor of passing any legislation which will result in the degeneration of our national-park standards. [Applause.]

What is there, then, within this area? The lowest elevation is between eight and nine hundred feet. The maximum elevation is 2,450 feet. The maximum difference in elevation can not, therefore, exceed 1,550 feet. Surely a rise in elevation of only 1,500 feet, and not an abrupt rise, as indicated by the topographical maps, can not be considered as being an outstanding feature. I submit that the evidence of the experts is adverse to setting this area aside as a national park. There is nothing in the area which distinguishes it sufficiently to justify its being set aside as a national park, and I trust that the House will not pass this legislation. I trust that the House will not set a precedent which will as the years go on result in a complete and thorough degeneration of the national-park standards which have been established through the course of a half century of our history. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I had not thought of saying a word on the pending legislation until a moment ago, and had not asked for time, but as a member of the Public Lands Committee, who attended practically all of the hearings, I just want to make a brief statement concerning this proposed national park bill. I have been amazed at some of the propaganda and misinformation that has gone out against this measure. These untruths were broadcasted by one who never visited this proposed park, a man who knows nothing about it, with the deliberate intention of misleading Members of Congress into voting against this bill. I openly charge that statements in the propaganda sent you against this proposed park are false, and the author knows them to be untrue. I do not refer, of course, to any Member of Congress, but I am speaking of an outsider, who sent this propaganda to you and has declared, among other things, that he was not permitted to be heard before our committee in opposition to the pending bill. As a member of the Public Lands Committee I know our committee heard all who asked to appear for and against the proposed park. I assume that the gentleman who now complains did not wish to testify, else he would have done so. The fact is, he knew nothing about the matter. I know further that the most courteous treatment was given every one who appeared or who desired to do so.

I am not surprised that the able and distinguished gentleman who just preceded me, my good friend from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS], is opposed to this kind of legislation. I realize full well that gentlemen who have parks do not desire competition. The gentleman from Arizona evidently believes that the thirty to forty millions of people in the southwestern part of the United States are not entitled to a park; that our people ought to go to Arizona; but may I call attention to the fact that neither the able gentleman from Arizona nor anyone else who has spoken thus far in opposition to this measure has even so much as seen this wonderful spot of scenic beauty. They have never seen those beautiful falls and gazed at those wonderful mountains. No, gentlemen, the opponents who have raised their voices thus far against this bill really know nothing firsthand about it. Yet they come here and tell you that it is not unique. They say it is not standard. The opponents of this measure make much ado about national-park standards. The gentleman from Kansas has asked the opposition to state what a national park is, and it seems they can not agree on what it is or ought to be. Let me suggest that they ought to get their heads together on this overworked and much-abused statement. [Applause.]

Might I not suggest for your consideration that a national-park standard in one part of the country is not at all the standard in another. May I add further in this connection that practically every member of the committee who saw this beauty spot agreed that it is not only standard but that it can be matched nowhere in the country.

I realize full well that certain departments at Washington—and I refer especially to the Forestry Service—is very much opposed to this legislation. I have no quarrel with this or any other department of Government, but I submit for your consideration that the people of the great Southwest, aggregating some thirty to forty millions of people, should be given consideration. Our citizens down Southwest in Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and Louisiana are not jealous of those of you who have parks. But our farmers and wage earners can not possibly go to visit them. The United States Senate has passed this bill unanimously. The Public Lands Committee, after extensive hearings, made a favorable report. I appeal to you not to deprive our people of this park which they want and so richly deserve. [Applause.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, the people of the southwestern part of the United States are unquestionably entitled to consideration by this House. I believe that they are entitled to a recreation area, but I do not believe it would be wise to put the national park label on everything that is set apart as a recreation area, irrespective of its scenic beauty and its outstanding features that will attract the attention of the world.

For a good many years a national-park policy has been forming. Its development has been slow, and some of the parks created early can hardly be said to conform to the standards which now ought to be maintained. Stephen Mather, for a good many years Director of the National Park Service, appointed first by his college chum, Franklin Lane, Secretary of the Interior in the administration of Woodrow Wilson, is the man most of all responsible for the development of a high standard. It has been my good fortune to be somewhat closely associated with him and to have visited not only areas that are now included under the supervision of the National Park Service but others that were being contemplated. One of the principles involved in the national park policy at the present time is that there ought not to be duplicates. We have the Grand Canyon of Arizona, the greatest example of erosion that is known to the students of the surface of the earth. We have the Yellowstone, with its geysers and hot springs, not paralleled anywhere in the United States. We have the volcanoes in the Hawaiian Islands, we have Mount McKinley in Alaska, we have Glacier National Park, and the Crater Lake Park. Recently we have set apart a most remarkable wooded area where, I believe, the best surviving example of hardwoods found in all of the United States can be found, down in the Great Smokies, where we were told by the botanist of the exposition that there are 108 varieties of hardwood timber.

I believe, from the examination of all the evidence that I have been able to get—photographs, topographic sheets, records of the Forest Service—that there are many places in the United States both in the Appalachian Mountains and in the Rocky Mountains where more impressive and more beautiful mountain scenery is found than in this proposed mountain area.

As a recreational area I would be in favor of it. The National Forest Service sets apart recreational areas, with camps and hotels meeting the requirements of visitors and tourists, I think, in many respects just as well as the National Park Service. The region now under consideration might well be such a recreational area, but it has no great outstanding scenic feature, there is no great outdoor museum to be preserved.

A recreational area for all of the people of the United States? Yes. [Applause.] But if you put the national-park label on this area, if we adopt the principle of selecting national parks in accordance with the idea of geographical distribution, it will not be long until we are considering a bill that is already pending before the committee, to establish a national park in every State of the Union in which a national park does not now exist. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Campaign Expenditures may have from March 1 to March 3 in which to report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Campaign Expenditures may have from March 1 to March 3 in which to report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OUACHITA NATIONAL PARK, ARK.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself the balance of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, my interest in this matter lies in my desire to bring the issues squarely before you in such a way that your decision will decide between two policies. When I shall have done that I shall have performed my duty.

The Government has followed the policy since 1872 of setting apart areas for park purposes because of something distinctive in those areas. Do not confuse distinctive with recreational features. We are asked to embark on a policy of establishing national parks in accordance with geographical location or on some theory of local distribution. If that is the policy you desire, you can register your vote in favor of that policy by voting for this bill. There are now pending in the Public Lands Committee some 12 bills to establish national parks in every State in the Union. If that is the policy to be adopted, we should enact this bill to-day. If not, we ought not to open this Pandora's box and create all these parks. National parks have been created on the theory of preserving something distinctive in nature and not on the theory of local desires.

The question was asked over here, Do we want park areas for the West and not for the Middle West? Not at all. There is one park now in Arkansas, one distinctive and unique area, which is really worthy of preservation as a national park.

But we have not proceeded on that theory of general distribution. We have proceeded on the theory that we would have something inspirational, distinctive, or outstanding. I have been over this area. I have gone through it by automobile, and I have flown over it by airplane. I want to be frank and say two things: First, it is a beautiful wooded area; and, second, the people of that section are entitled to a recreational center. I have offered time and time again to join in a movement to secure an appropriation to create there a great recreational center. But we ought not to label it "national park" if we are going to have the term "national park" mean something distinctive in the United States.

Moreover, the Forest Service is now expending large sums of money in building roads in that area and are spending money in providing camps.

I speak as one who has lived in an area where there are forest reserves, and I assert that the Forest Service can better supervise the recreational features of this area than can the Park Service. The Park Service could undoubtedly preserve the area as a park alone, but the Forest Service can also arrange for recreational features and encourage them just as well as the Park Service. That is all there is to it.

If we want to engage in the policy of selecting parks by reason of geographical location and recreational centers, then we ought to vote for this bill. We can make of it a recreational center without making it a park. If we believe a park should be something distinctive or unique we ought not to put the stamp of approval on this bill and say that national parks shall not mean something distinctive and that those who visit a national park need not expect to see something new and unique. There are beautiful flowers and beautiful trees in this area, and there are mountains, yes; but I do believe honestly, Members of the House, that you can go to a hundred places in the United States and duplicate this area so far as scenic beauty is concerned.

Mr. LETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. For a brief question.

Mr. LETTS. Will not the defeat of this bill give encouragement to the Park Service and the National Forest Service to believe that their policy of excluding everything that does not reach their standard has the approval of this Congress?

Mr. COLTON. I am glad the gentleman asked that. No; it will not, but if their standard is correct it ought to have the approval of Congress. We have always required the examination of an area, either by a commission or have accepted the recommendation of Park Service experts. The Great Smoky area was examined by a commission; the Appalachian Park was examined by a commission, and we have never acted except upon the report of park experts or a commission created by this Congress. We have, in some cases, acted upon the recommendation of the Interior Department. The Interior Department is against this bill and so also is the Department of Agriculture. We have had no commission examine it, and we must decide to-day whether or not we are going to inaugurate an entirely new policy in the creation of national parks.

Are we to embark on a policy of building without plans and without an architect? That is what this means. We should appoint a commission to study the area and make a recommendation. There should be cooperation if we are to build a great park system and we should not create a park without careful consideration and should, as far as possible, work with those whom we intrust the responsibility of administering our parks.

The great civic organizations who are laboring to maintain the standards of our parks are all against this bill. Let us not disregard the recommendation of practically every expert in the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. I wish I had the time and the strength to answer the misleading propaganda that has inspired a lot of telegrams and letters that have come to you gentlemen against this proposal, but I have neither. The man who inspired it has never seen the area. He has issued and sent to each Member of the House a slanderous attack not only upon the committee but upon me, among other things, saying we would not let him be heard. I and one member of the committee objected to his being heard except in person, so that we could question him about the false statements he had made, but we could not get him to appear. But enough about that.

What does this bill do? Is it local? Does it come up to the park standards? That is what you want to know. These are some of the objections.

The people of Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and that area comprising 44,000,000 people do not envy the parks in the States of the gentlemen who signed this minority report, but they say to those gentlemen, "We can not all go out to your national parks in the Rocky Mountains, and you should not be selfish; give us this distinctive beautiful mountain area that is within one or two days' travel of us 44,000,000 people so that in the coming years, when the crush of industry that is sweeping into the Mississippi Valley shall demand that we shall be able to get out not only of the Mississippi Delta and the swamp lands of eastern Arkansas and of Texas and of Louisiana but out of the mills and factories, that those of us who are not able to go and view the bald peaks of the Rockies may go and view these wonderful mountains that are unsurpassed in the world in scenic beauty."

This is admitted by every man who has ever seen them who is impartial. I have been to Nikko, in Japan, and standing on her mountain heights have marveled at the view. I think the only thing comparable that I have ever seen to this Ouachita Mountain Range are the mountains of Nikko in Japan, said to be the most beautiful park in the world.

Oh, no, gentlemen, this is no freak. We have no 5-legged calf which we ask you to make a national wonder. If this had a freak geological formation like the Garden of the Gods, we would have had this made a national monument; but it is an ideal natural park, with beautiful timber and foliage clear to the crest of the wonderful mountains, wonderful stone cliffs, wonderful waterfalls, distinctive of that region, the highest range that lies between the Rocky Mountains and the Appalachians. Compare it with something else? You can not do it. Why, parks in beauty are just like women—they are of different types; no two of them exactly alike; but they are all beautiful. This may not be a Rocky Mountain brunette, but it is a Mississippi Valley blonde. [Applause.]

It is formed of novaculite, the only novaculite formation in the United States or on the American continent, so the United States Geological Survey reports. At the hearing I challenged gentlemen who opposed it to name one distinctive feature of the Shenandoah or of the Smoky Mountains that could not be matched by this area, and they could not do it.

Heights are relative. Two thousand seven hundred and sixty feet is high to those people who come from the swamps of Louisiana and eastern Arkansas and eastern Texas or from the plains of Oklahoma.

Oh, they say, develop it as a recreational area. This has been the red herring that has been drawn across the trail for two years in an effort to defeat this bill. The only development, except a few trails, that has been made has been made by the people of Arkansas in that area. Five dollars and fifty cents was spent out of the funds of the Forest Bureau and that was for a wonderful folder describing the scenic beauty of this range which I wish I had the time to read to you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Gentlemen, this bill passed the Senate unanimously after two hearings and a hard fight in the Senate committee. All but four or five gentlemen on the Public Lands Committee of the House approved this bill after two years of hard fighting and long repeated hearings. We do not ask it as a local proposition for Arkansas, but Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, and the whole Mississippi Valley, with this great distinctive mountain range lying just near that great city national park, the Hot Springs health resort, should be given this park.

The gentleman from Utah admits that it is all right and says, "I am willing to give it to you except that I do not want the name park to be used." He is objecting to the name. They simply do not want competition with the parks of Utah, Montana, and Wyoming.

Why, the whole fight has come from two sources, the concessionaires in the national parks in the Rocky Mountains and the timber men who sent telegrams here saying they want the timber in these mountains. We want to preserve this timber and all the natural scenic beauty of the region for future generations, and the way to do it is to transfer it to the Park Service.

Gentlemen, we have won the fight upon its merits. We have made our case after lengthy hearings where the opposition was fully heard. We satisfied the Senate of the United States unanimously. We satisfied the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives, all but four Republicans and one Democrat. You can rely upon such a record, can you not, and approve the judgment of the committee after a long fight and a long hearing?

I ask for a vote. [Applause.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLTON. I am sure that the Committee on Public Lands has recommended a bill that is amended. Now, if the previous question is ordered, may we have the bill as amended or will it be on the bill as it was introduced?

The SPEAKER. On the Senate bill.

Mr. WINGO. The Senate bill is exactly as the House committee reported it, line for line. If you vote for this bill it will be the identical bill that the House committee recommended.

The SPEAKER. By agreement the previous question is ordered. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLTON) there were 164 ayes and 71 noes.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HILL of Washington, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

WINDING UP THE AFFAIRS OF THE WAR FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5684) to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 5684) to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide for the liquidation of the assets and the winding up of the affairs of the War Finance Corporation after April 4, 1929, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the War Finance Corporation act of April 5, 1918, as amended be, and the same is hereby, further amended so that at the close of April 4, 1929, the liquidation of the assets remaining at that time and the winding up of the affairs of the corporation thereafter shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury, who for such purpose shall have all the powers and duties of the board of directors of the corporation under said act, as amended. For carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury may assign to any officer or officers of the United States in the Treasury Department the exercise and performance, under his general supervision and direction, of any such powers and duties. He shall from time to time pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts any moneys belonging to the corporation which, in his opinion, are not required for carrying on and completing the liquidation of its remaining assets and the winding up of its affairs, including reasonable provision for the further expenses thereof. Nothing in the said act, as amended, or this act, shall be construed to affect any right or privilege accrued, any penalty or liability incurred, any criminal or civil proceeding commenced, or any authority conferred thereunder, except as herein provided in connection with the liquidation of the remaining assets and the winding up of the affairs of the said corporation, until the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that such liquidation will no longer be advantageous to the United States and that all of its lawful obligations have been met, whereupon he shall retire any capital stock then outstanding, pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts the unused balance of the moneys belonging to the corporation, and make the final report of the corporation to the Congress. Thereupon the corporation shall be deemed to be dissolved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McFADDEN, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRINTING HEARINGS ON THE BILLS H. R. 7895 AND H. R. 11806

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Concurrent Resolution 37, providing for the printing of additional hearings during the Sixty-ninth Congress on the question of the stabilization of the price level of commodities, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Concurrent Resolution 37, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Reserving the right to object, how many copies have been already published?

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand 2,000, and this provides for 5,000.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. What was that second provision?

Mr. McFADDEN. That was to increase the number of copies of the last bill. There will be 5,000 copies of each available.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. When does the gentleman expect to call up the Norbeck bill, proposing an amendment to the Federal farm loan act in respect of loans made to citizens of Porto Rico?

Mr. McFADDEN. If the Speaker will recognize me, I will call it up now, if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. I do not ask the gentleman to call it up now. I simply want to know when he will call it up. I want the information, if the gentleman will give it to us.

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not want to avoid the question, and I will call it up any time.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman call it up to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will attempt to do it to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency I call up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 5302, a similar bill (H. R. 13936) being on the House Calendar and which passed the House January 21, 1929.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 5302) to amend the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish in each Federal land bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico and the Territory of Alaska; and the Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in Porto Rico and a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in the Territory of Alaska. Loans made by each such branch bank shall not exceed the sum of $25,000 to any one borrower and shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act, except that each such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and, subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe, the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal land bank with which such branch bank is connected: Provided, That no loan shall be made in Porto Rico or Alaska by such branch bank for a longer term than 20 years."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill is not privileged, and I would like to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to know the exact circumstances.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. This is a Senate bill that increases the loan limit of any one Federal farm loan in Alaska and Porto Rico from $10,000 to $25,000. The House, in a bill which we recently passed, increased the loan limit from $10,000 to $15,000.

Clause 2 of Rule XXIV reads as follows:

But House bills, with Senate amendments thereto which do not require consideration in the Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills, substantially the same as House bills.

Mr. Speaker, the very essence of this bill is the loan limit. The present loan limit for Alaska and Porto Rico under the Federal farm loan act is $10,000. The House Committee on Banking and Currency reported out a bill which the House passed raising that loan limit from $10,000 to $15,000. The Senate bill which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] has asked to be called up seeks to increase the loan limit from $10,000 to $25,000. I submit that inasmuch as the very essence of the bill is the amount of the loan limit, the bills are not substantially the same, and, therefore, the Senate bill is not a privileged bill. I feel that the House bill increasing the loan limit for Alaska and Porto Rico from $10,000 to $15,000 for any one farm loan should be adhered to. Those Territories are somewhat remote from the United States, and I feel that we should not be too hasty in increasing the loan limit.

The SPEAKER. The question is as to whether those bills are substantially the same. It occurs to the Chair, although he is not familiar with the circumstances, that the limit of the loan is quite fundamental, and as there is the difference between $25,000 as the limit in one bill and $15,000 in another, the Chair feels that the bills are not substantially the same. The Chair sustains the point of order.

ADDRESS OF HON. GEORGE C. PEERY

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing therein an address delivered by our colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PEERY] when acting as temporary chairman of the Democratic State convention held in Roanoke, Va., on June 21, 1928.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address, delivered by Hon. GEORGE C. PEERY, temporary chairman, before the Democratic State convention at Roanoke, Va.:

THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY

We meet to-day to take stock of our political situation and to plan for the future. We come together not only as members of a great political party but as citizens of a great State and a great Nation, to deliberate for the good of the Republic. Political unrest is abroad in the land; a limited number, who happen to enjoy special privilege and governmental favor, prosper; while economic distress is the portion of the farmer and unemployment is the lot of many. Corruption has appeared in high places, official integrity is under suspicion, and faith in popular government is being tested and sorely tried.

Government must be administered through the agency of political parties. There are but two major political parties to-day. One of the two must perform this function. In this solemn hour, in the light of past experience and in consideration of the actualities of the present, to which of the two parties may the people of this Republic look for guidance, and to which one should they intrust the administration of the affairs of government? When called to power in the past the Democratic Party has responded with a record of splendid achievement. We confidently maintain that it offers to-day the surest hope for the solution of the problems of the present and for the honest and efficient administration of the Government in the future.

The need for the application of the principles of Democracy to the affairs of our National Government was never greater than it is to-day. In our early history it was a conflict between two theories of government—Jefferson, the founder of Democracy, believed in the rule of the people; Hamilton, the pioneer in Republicanism, believed in the rule of the few. Jefferson advocated the largest measure of local self-government. Hamilton advocated a strongly centralized national government. Democracy demands equal rights for all and special privileges to none. Republicanism stands for a distribution of special privilege to the favored few. It believes in allowing the privileged few, under the processes of law, to exact toll from the many. Jefferson won his fight for popular government and Democracy. But the conflict did not end there. A little later on, and still in his lifetime, it was renewed. An organized and defiant money power sought to perpetuate a banking monopoly upon the people of the Nation; and Andrew Jackson, the crusader from Tennessee, took up the challenge, rallied the legions to his cause, and won another glorious victory in the cause of the people.

But the conflict in other ways continued and is with us with unabated vigor to-day. The proponents of special privilege, like the poor, are always with us. They neither slumber nor sleep. They are as insistent in their demands for special favor to-day as of old. And the call to battle in the cause of the people is as urgent to-day as it ever was in the past.

The Democratic Party is a free party. It is unfettered by embarrassing obligations. It owes no governmental favor to any group or class. It is free from any strangle or under hold. Its animating desire is to protect the interests of the Nation and to insure honest and good government to the people as a whole.

Its record in the past is the surest guaranty of its ability and purpose to give to the American people honest and efficient service in government. We need to look only to the record of recent years.

In the elections of 1912 the American people committed the affairs of our Government to the Democratic Party. Quickly following the accession of our party to power began a record of legislative achievement unexcelled by any like period in all of our history.

Men of wealth and large income had not, in the past, borne their just share of the tax burden. The Democratic Party gave to the country, under proper constitutional amendment, the income-tax law. Under it the principle of the graduated income tax became a permanent part of our national taxing system. As a result, the man of large income contributes proportionally more to the expense of Government than the man of small income.

The business men of our country had suffered from time to time from financial panics. In times past they had been told that there was no such thing as a panic under a Republican administration. But panics occurred and there was no possible chance to pin a Democratic label on them. They were beyond doubt Republican panics under Republican rule. A notable one was the panic of 1907 under a Republican administration. It was aptly termed a bankers' panic. These recurring panics were mainly due to the inelastic and antiquated money system that had prevailed throughout the long years of Republican rule. Complaint had been made and relief had been demanded; but the Republican Party failed to bring to the American people this much-needed relief. The Democratic Party met this issue and solved the problem. Under the leadership of a great Virginian, then a Member of the lower House, later Secretary of the Treasury, and now a United States Senator, the Federal reserve system was enacted into law.

It was enacted in the face of bitter opposition at the hands of the moneyed interests of the country. It is now with general accord acclaimed as one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation ever enacted into law. It stood the stress of war. And there has been no bankers' panic since that time. For the enactment of this measure into law and the benefits that have flowed therefrom, the American people are indebted to the Democratic Party.

Under the leadership of another great Virginian, our beloved senior Senator, whose influence is probably unexcelled by that of any other Member of that body, the Democratic Party gave to our people the Federal good roads law, which helped to quicken a constructive road-building program throughout the Nation and to bring to the people the comforts and blessings that come with good roads.

During the years of Republican rule the farmer had justly complained that the Government had not placed him upon a plane of equality with the average business man. He could not borrow from national banks upon the security of his land alone, the best and most stable security of all. He had complained at this discrimination, but the Republican Party had brought to him no relief. The Democratic Party met this problem also, and solved it, and the Federal farm loan act was enacted into law. Under it the farmers of our country may borrow from the Federal land banks money at a fair interest rate upon long time and upon the security of their lands alone. This law, given to the farmers by the Democratic Party, helped to deliver them from the oppressions of the usurer and brought to them the belated justice that they deserved.

The Republican Party had not given to the laboring man the recognition that he deserved. There was no official spokesman for him in the official family of the President. The Democratic Party brought to him the recognition that was his due. It created the office of Secretary of Labor, thereby giving to the laboring men of the country a representative in the President's Cabinet.

It also enacted into law the Clayton amendment declaring that labor was not a commodity and freeing it from the provisions and penalties of the antitrust laws.

The Democratic Party has been the steadfast friend of the workingman.

It enacted a law creating the Tariff Commission in order that a scientific study of the tariff schedules and recommendations touching the same might be made by a commission charged with this special duty.

It drove from the National Capital a corrupt lobby which infested the halls of Congress for the purpose of influencing legislation in behalf of special interests.

Many other constructive measures were enacted into law during this period of Democratic rule which proved to be for the good of the country and the betterment of our people.

And throughout this period of Democratic rule and splendid achievement prosperity smiled upon our land. It came not to a privileged few but to all. It came to the business man, to the farmer, and to the laborer. All classes of our people enjoyed its blessings.

And during this period of Democratic administration America was called to face the greatest struggle in all of our history. It was the emergency of war, the greatest war of all time. We held aloof as long as it was possible with due regard to our national honor, but at last we were forced to enter the conflict to help save the civilization of the world. We were compelled to send force to meet force and without stint. The force of American arms was quickly felt. A draft law was passed which included rich and poor alike, and which was enforced with justice and impartiality. The resources of the nation were mobilized with incredible swiftness.

We sent food and fuel, money and ships, to our European allies. In two months after declaring war our soldiers were on the battle fields in France; and a year had scarcely passed until more than 2,000,000 soldiers, the flower of American manhood, had been sent overseas in ships convoyed by the American Navy without the loss of a single life. They brought new hope to the embattled soldiers of England and France. They proved to be the most potent factor in turning the tide in favor of the Allies and in bringing glorious victory to the allied cause.

This period was marked by brilliant and mighty achievement. It stood forth in happy contrast with other previous war periods in our history in its freedom from graft or corruption or scandal on the part of any responsible public officials. The whole record withstood the white light of investigation at the hands of some 50 investigating committees appointed by a later Republican administration, and stands forth an unsullied record of honesty and integrity.

Throughout this period, as in other periods, the Democratic Party demonstrated to the world its fidelity to great principles, sound economics, and honesty in government. It proved its greatness by great achievement. It gave to our country unexcelled leadership. In all those days of emergency, stress, and conflict there was a great pilot in charge of the ship of state who successfully charted our course through the storm of war to victory, and who, by his leadership, brought to America the leadership of the world. Born a Virginian, Woodrow Wilson became one of the world's immortals.

Our people during the war followed him with a fine spirit of unselfishness, self-sacrifice, and splendid idealism. We fought without thought of material reward or hope of enlarged domain.

But after victory came reconstruction; and with it came a spirit of captious criticism that so often follows in the wake of great emergency. Under the spell of its influence the people decreed a change in parties and the Republican Party resumed control in 1920.

And what an unfortunate change it has proved to be! A spirit of materialism asserted itself. Selfishness stalked forth with all its sordid demands. The privileged few renewed their demands for special favor. Efficiency gave way to inefficiency. Honesty was supplanted by corruption and graft in official life. It was not merely bribery, corruption, and inefficiency on the part of subordinate employees and officials of the Government, but it was bribery, corruption, and inefficiency on the part of many high in authority—some of them members of the official family of the President.

The Republican Party of Virginia celebrated St. Patrick's Day by holding its convention in this city on March 17. I read with interest the press reports of its proceedings.

They declared for honesty in government. Not only did they declare for honesty, they demanded honesty. The headlines of their platform in bold black letters were: "Honesty in government is demanded by Virginia G. O. P." I read from the text of the platform adopted and near the head of it appears this sentence: "The American people, regardless of party, expect and demand honest government." And then just a little further on I read this amazing sentence: "The present administration of the Government is one of the cleanest in our history.'

Only two days later a great Republican Senator on the floor of the United States Senate, Senator BORAH, of Idaho, in describing certain conditions under this administration, uttered this burning language:

"It has been said this afternoon that this investigation and the corruption which it has disclosed has no parallel or precedent in our history. I doubt if it has any precedent anywhere; I doubt if anything of the same nature and kind has ever happened in any country. When one takes into consideration the purposes of the transaction, the attack upon the security of the Government itself, the high places in which the transaction occurred, and then the ignoble purpose for which the transaction was carried on, I do not know, Mr. President, of anything like it in the history of this country or of any other country.

"I have, as no doubt we all have, looked upon that scene in Rome painted by her greatest literary genius—the scene when Verres came home from Sicily laden with the wealth of a betrayed and plundered people, threatening senators, bribing judges, and conspiring against the very freedom of the city itself. I have read and reread, as no doubt we all have, the burning words of the most gifted tongue of the most eloquent race in history, Edmund Burke, when he raised Warren Hastings to that eminence of infamy from which he has never descended; for slimy, sordid, drab betrayal of a public trust, relieved of every element of vision or ambition, which sometimes adds fascination to crime, I know of nothing in the history of peculation to be compared in meanness of spirit and vulgarity of purpose with the group of men who met in the "little green house" in the very shadow of the Capitol in 1921 and 1922. There was the beginning of the carrying out of the deals which had been made earlier. Those men were there for the purpose of consummating a transaction which had for its purpose the acquiring of vast interests which belonged to the people of this country and which could only be acquired in violation of every rule of decency and every principle of government integrity."

And what are some of the outstanding cold realities of fact now established?

A Republican Secretary of the Interior, charged with the administration and preservation of the oil reserves of our Government, kept by former Presidents as inviolate for the safety and future defense of our country, was caught bartering them away for a money bribe. When suspicion arose there was no prompt or vigorous action on the part of the administration to ascertain the truth. But there was side stepping and shuffling and an attempt to thwart and suppress the development of the facts. It remained for a great Democratic Senator from the West, in the face of bitter administration opposition, to develop the truth and uncover the infamy. His work and service have been gloriously vindicated by a unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court, declaring that the leasing of these oil lands was founded in fraud and corruption, and by a decree of that court the fraudulent leases were set aside and the valuable property was restored to the Government.

A Republican Attorney General, against whose appointment the patriotic press of the country protested, but for whom a Republican President vouched his personal assurance of responsibility and efficiency, brought the administration of his department into utter shame and disrepute. Under his connivance the administration of justice in his department was polluted by the slimy hand of the grafter and persons of the underworld. An investigation of this department was forced at the hands of another Democratic Senator, who sought to uncover the truth and place before the American people the facts. In retaliation, agencies of the Department of Justice, under the direction of this Attorney General, were perverted to assassinate and blackmail the character of the very Senator who forced the investigation; but he, too, was vindicated in a court of law and the unfaithful Cabinet officer was driven from office in shame and disgrace. Yet in the face of the startling facts that were uncovered the Executive, instead of booting him out with a righteous indignation, accepted his forced resignation with an expression of regret.

A Republican Secretary of the Navy who allowed the oil reserves to be corruptly bartered away by an associate Cabinet officer, even though he may not have been a part of the criminal conspiracy himself, was found guilty of such inefficiency in office as to demand his removal from office at the hands of an outraged public opinion, and he, too, was driven from office.

A Republican Director of the Veterans' Bureau, a personal friend of the Chief Executive who appointed him to office, was charged with the public trust of managing the funds and property which a grateful Nation had set aside for the care and comfort of wounded and disabled soldiers of the World War and their dependents. He was found guilty in a court of law of embezzling and misappropriating these funds and given a prison sentence for his infamy.

A Republican Custodian of Alien Property, to whom was intrusted the millions in money and property that were seized from aliens during the World War and held in trust by our Government pending a just disposition thereof was likewise found guilty of embezzlement and fraud in connection with his high office.

The Roanoke Republican platform admitted "deplorable breaches of public trust by a few persons." The record up to this time establishes corruption or inefficiency on the part of 33⅓ per cent of the President's Cabinet following the return of the Republican Party to power, the conviction and sentence of the head of the Veterans' Bureau and the Alien Property Custodian for embezzlement and fraud, yet they are pleased to term these "deplorable breaches of trust on the part of a few Republican officials." How much this percentage would have been increased had the patriotic crusaders and leaders in the Democratic Party been given a free hand in the making of these investigations is open to grave speculation.

Soon after the Republican Party under Harding returned to power the country was shocked by the disclosures of a Senate investigating committee as to the huge expenditures of money in a Republican primary election in the State of Michigan. It was proven that at least $190,000 was spent to bring about the nomination of Truman H. Newberry as the Republican candidate for United States Senator from that State. He was on the face of the returns elected; and by a partisan vote was given his seat with apologies. The committee reported that the expenditure of such excessive sums was "harmful to the honor and dignity of the Senate and dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government." Public resentment and indignation were so great against the offending Senator as to later force his resignation from the Senate.

More recent disclosures under the Coolidge administration as to the Republican primaries in the States of Pennsylvania and Illinois make Newberry a mere piker and the amount expended in his behalf fades into insignificance when compared with the millions expended in these later and more modern Republican primaries in Pennsylvania and Illinois. In Pennsylvania the slush fund exceeded $2,777,000. In Illinois the evidence showed that they distributed nearly a cool million in helping the Republican boys to decide between themselves whom they desired as their candidate for the United States Senate.

And who stood sponsor for these outrageous doings? In Pennsylvania a Republican Secretary of the Treasury, who himself was one of the largest contributors and who openly boasted that such contributions were as virtuous as contributions to a church.

In Illinois the head of the greatest and most powerful Utility Trust in the United States contributed $125,000 to the campaign of the candidate who was then a member of the Public Utilities Commission in Illinois and charged with the responsibility of fixing the power and light rates which his company should be allowed to charge the people of Illinois.

In Pennsylvania the president of a manufacturers' association furnished $300,000 to the campaign fund of one of the Republican candidates.

These are facts of ominous import. Contributions of this character are not made in a spirit of philanthropy or from a sense of public duty. They are made with the very practical idea of securing a "friend at court" and of having a subsidized partisan to assist in the enactment of laws vitally affecting their own interests. They are the price of an underhold for special privilege against the public good.

VARE and Smith were given certificates of election, but so shocking were the disclosures to the public conscience that the Senate of the United States, controlled by a Republican majority, refused to allow them to take their seats in that body. The Senate committee which uncovered the oil frauds followed many devious trails. One of them led to a mysterious corporation, known as the Continental Trading Co. (Ltd.), organized in Canada by Sinclair and a limited number of other high and mighty associates in the oil game. The facts surrounding the transaction were shrouded in mystery. Desperate efforts were made by the parties in interest to suppress the facts. Two of the arch conspirators involved in the transaction, Blackmer and O'Neil, fled the country and sought sanctuary in France. Sinclair, under criminal indictment, refused to talk, and Stewart, the remaining chief conspirator, rather than disclose the truth subjected himself to the penalty of contempt. But the patriotic WALSH followed his quarry with unerring accuracy and relentless zeal.

Sinclair's Continental Trading Co., through a fraudulent purchase and resale of oil, netted Sinclair and his three associates more than $3,000,000 in fraudulent profits. A trail of Sinclair's portion of the loot disclosed that $230,500 in bonds arising therefrom followed a sinister path to the ignominious Fall. Another portion thereof, amounting to $260,000 in bonds, found its way into the National Treasury of the Republican Party.

And through a cryptic memorandum, dug up among the papers of a dead man's estate, containing the four short and significant words "Weeks," "Andy," "Butler," and "Du Pont," it was unearthed that Hays, the former Republican national chairman, after receiving the bonds, had parceled them out to high and mighty Republicans with the request that they dispose of them and contribute in like amount in order to cover up the sinister deal and have it appear that the contributions came from them rather than from the tainted vaults of Sinclair.

When these startling disclosures were uncovered to the public the country witnessed the spectacle of a Republican leader in the United States Senate calling upon members of his party to wash their hands from the stain and taint of fraud and return the tainted money which had been received from the man who had bribed the Cabinet official and despoiled the people of their property and rights, but the call fell on deaf ears, and the stigma and disgrace that came to the Republican Party in accepting such money from such a man, under such circumstances, continues to this day.

This Republican platform of March 17 commended the maintenance and extension of the civil service to promote efficiency in the service; yet it requires but a short memory to recall the fact, now of record in Congress, that under the artful guidance of the skilled political broker who was then and still is the Republican National Committeeman from the State of Virginia, post offices and other Federal offices in Virginia were disposed of, not according to merit even as between Republicans. They were disposed of at auction. But the auctions had to be handled with discretion, for according to the "Dear Ben" letters, also of record, these were very delicate matters; one had to "be very careful" about them in order to avoid "disrepute" and to preserve standing with the people and the administration. When we speak of these unsavory facts our uneasy friends of the opposition reply that guilt is personal and that the Republican Party should not be held responsible for the delinquencies of the individual members of the party. But surely if party responsibility means anything, a political party must be held responsible for the official misconduct and corruption of its own agents, the men whom that party itself, in discharge of its responsibility to the people, elevates to high public office; and where the facts disclose that a group of such men, high within the inner councils of the party, have been guilty of a series of fraudulent transactions and corrupt deals in official life, the American people will not accept the alibi that "guilt is personal," and absolve that party from responsibility and official blame.

Not only do we indict the Republican Party for corruption in high places, we further indict it for the pernicious system of favoritism fostered and practiced by it in the affairs of government.

The recent Virginia Republican platform condemned the recent Lake Cargo coal outrage, but its condemnation was directed against a law that would vest any such power in the Interstate Commerce Commission. The trouble was not in the law, as shown by the recent holding of a Federal court composed entirely of Republican judges, but the trouble arose from the application of political pressure by powerful and financially interested politicians who are within the charmed inner circle of this administration. They sought to pack the commission and effectuate a monopoly of the Lake Cargo coal trade on behalf of Pennsylvania in utter disregard of the rights of the coal producers of Virginia and her sister States, and the administration did not lift a hand to stay the proceeding but became a party thereto.

This administration continues its approval of the exorbitant schedules of the Fordney-McCumber tariff, under which the aluminum and other trusts are enabled to exact millions in tribute from the consumers of America. Rumors of rebellion in Republican ranks come thick and fast from the distressed agricultural sections of the West.

In all recent Republican national platforms the Republican Party has recognized the serious condition of agriculture throughout the country, and for eight long years it has promised relief to agriculture, but the farmer continues in the ditch. The exorbitant tariffs in behalf of the protected and privileged interests continue upon the things he has to buy. Bankruptcy has swallowed many and creeps a little nearer to the remainder with each succeeding year. After eight years of unfulfilled or broken promises to the farmer, it is high time for the Republican Party to either admit infidelity to its promise or inability to fulfill the same.

We condemn this administration for its action in devitalizing the Federal Trade Commission and converting it from an agency for the public good into a subservient instrumentality of the protected interests.

With the record of graft and corruption of this administration and the sinister facts laid bare to the public, can there be any doubt that the people of the Nation, who exalt honor and integrity in public life, will not rise up in their might, rebuke, and drive from power the political party which is responsible for these conditions and which gave high office to the group of men who have betrayed their trust, despoiled our people, and brought ignominy and shame to the Nation? The American people demand honesty in official life. They will be satisfied with nothing less at the hands of any political party in power.

But we are told that whatever may have been the delinquencies of this national administration, and however just the criticism of it may be, the administration has given to the country prosperity and that this should cover a multitude of sins. I have heard from Republican spokesmen on the floor of Congress at each succeeding session the cry of "Prosperity! Prosperity!" Of late years the cry has grown fainter and has found less frequent utterance. A note of discord, increasing in volume, has appeared in the Republican orchestra; and the cry of distress is unmistakably here. To the farmer, the laborer, and the man and woman in the ordinary walks of life the Republican cry of prosperity is like unto the cry of Rachel of old, who cried for her children, and would not be comforted, for they were not.

What are the facts to-day? More than 1,000,000 men out of employment and 3,000,000 more working only part time.

More than 2,000,000 persons have moved from the farms to the cities, towns, and villages each year since January 1, 1922. Hundreds of thousands of farmers have seen their homes and farms sold from them under mortgage or in foreclosure proceedings. Thousands of others have abandoned their farms because they could not make a living on them for themselves and their families.

In the last six years there were 2,944 bank failures as against 746 during the eight years of the Democratic administration.

The coal fields of Virginia are in the throes of depression and distress is the common lot of the producer and the miner.

If there be prosperity in our land to-day it is a spotted prosperity, limited to the favored few. It is not a prosperity that extends to the farmer, the laborer, and the masses of the people.

In happy contrast with the drab and besmirched page in our national life under this Republican administration is the record of Virginia under successive administrations of the Democratic Party. Throughout the long years in which the Democratic Party has administered the affairs of government in Virginia the record is strikingly free from graft or corruption in public office. The men who have been elevated to high office have discharged their duties with honor, integrity, and fidelity. Proud of the splendid part which Virginia played in the founding of the Republic, proud of her glorious history, her splendid traditions and the great contributions which she has made to the cause of liberty and civilization, we are also proud of the unsullied record which she, under the guidance of the Democratic Party, has made in the cause of civic righteousness and honest government.

The present State administration has been marked by splendid achievement. Good roads are being built. The completion of the highway system is being pushed with vigor. Duplications in office have been abolished. Departments are being consolidated. Modern business methods are being applied in government. Greater economy and efficiency are being achieved and our tax laws are being modernized. The old State, at the border line where North meets South and South meets North at the gateway of the Nation's Capital, blessed by Providence with wonderful natural resources, a fine climate and a hospitable people, is attracting the eyes of America and new capital is coming to her borders. We stand at the threshold of an industrial awakening and an enlarged economic development and industrial prosperity.

With common consent we accord the praise therefor to our modest, virile executive, Harry Flood Byrd, who combines in happy fashion in his dynamic personality the ideals of the old Virginia with the keen business acumen of the new.

And so, fellow Democrats, the Democracy of our State and the Nation stands forth in the sunlight to-day. We are called upon for no apologies. We have nothing to conceal. We are unashamed and unafraid.

The blot of Republicanism, which hung like a pall over the ninth district for many years, was removed six years ago and that great district returned to the Democratic fold to which it rightfully belonged. The Democrats of that district are firmly resolved that they will not suffer it to return to the blight of Republicanism.

Throughout the State the Democratic skies are bright and the path is clear. In the Nation we return to battle to drive out graft and corruption in official life, to abolish special privilege and for a return to the fundamental principles of democracy and the restoration of the rights of the common people.

Are there timid hearts who say there are no outstanding issues? What greater issue can confront us than the issue of honesty and integrity in official life? If the political party to which the people intrust the responsibility of government is not to be held responsible for failure to place in high office in the Government honest men, the doom of our Republic is at hand. Let us sound the battle cry from every hilltop and on every plain to put down graft and corruption and exalt honor and integrity in official life.

Let us demand the dethronement of privilege in high places and the insistence upon equal rights and opportunity to all citizens under the law.

Let us insist that the making of laws and the administration thereof be not controlled by a limited oligarchy responsive to the interests of the privileged few. We need to man our Government with men who believe human rights stand above material things—men who can see beyond the skyscrapers of Wall Street and the smokestacks of Pittsburgh and visualize the needs of the laborer, the farmer, the consumer, and the unorganized common people.

Let us demand a revision of the tariff laws that will make it impossible for monopoly to hide behind them and pick the pockets of the people under the guise of law.

Let us advocate the enactment of such laws and the administration thereof as will enable the farmer to prosper in his own right and will place him on terms of economic equality with those engaged in other business and occupation.

Let us voice unrelenting opposition to the further growth of bureaucracy in the Federal Government at Washington. It crowds the pay rolls, promotes inefficiency, and increases the cost of government with each succeeding year.

Let us demand rigid economy in government to the end that the people who pay may receive a dollar's worth of service for every dollar in taxes paid.

Let us advocate that the energies of America be dedicated to the cause of permanent peace throughout the world, and that the Government of America may be so administered as to regain for her the moral leadership of the world.

Let us fight for a return to the fundamentals of Jeffersonian Democracy which have served as a sheet anchor in the past and are so vital to our needs to-day and are so essential to our national security in the future.

The duty immediately before us is to declare anew the creed of the Democracy of Virginia; to restate the principles for which we stand; and to voice our views upon the outstanding issues of the day. When that is done we will commission a delegation from our number to carry those principles and speak for us in the convention of the national Democracy soon to convene in a city of the South which was named in honor of a native son of Virginia.

Our delegates, bearing the commissions which we shall give them, will meet at Houston with the delegates of the Democracy from the other States of the Union to face the responsibilities and discharge the duties devolving upon a convention of the Democracy of the Nation.

Two major and outstanding duties will confront that body.

The chief of these will be to write a platform and declare the principles for which the Democracy of the Nation stands. Let us expect this duty to be performed with fidelity to the time-honored principles of Democracy and that the platform there to be promulgated will ring true in allegiance to the Constitution and regard for law and law enforcement.

I venture to predict that it will make clear that the sober judgment of the Democracy of the Nation will countenance no assault upon the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. It was written into the Constitution by the votes of three-fourths of the States of the Union. It can be taken out only through the same solemn sanction and authority; and this will not be done.

The candidate who espouses to lead the hosts of Democracy must do so with Democracy's declaration on this question before him and with the covenant on his part to abide by the same.

And then will follow the duty of selecting from the many great Democrats under consideration the man who, in the composite judgment of the delegates of the convention, will, upon all of the issues now confronting the Nation, best lead the hosts of Democracy in the coming struggle.

We do not know upon whom the choice of leadership will fall. But it will surely fall upon some great Democrat of honor, ability, and integrity; and when chosen he will be entitled to receive the loyal support of the Democracy of this State and of the Nation. Among the number under consideration for the high honor are great men who, like the stars in the heavens, differ the one from the other. They may differ in temperament and training, but all of them are sons of Democracy. They may differ in religion, but all of them worship the one great and common God.

Upon whomsoever the choice may fall, the result must of necessity reflect some difference in religious views; but surely no Democrat on this ground alone could find justification for refusing his support to the nominee of that convention, unless the creed of Democracy and the Constitution of the United States are to be rewritten and the statute of religious freedom, written by the founder of Democracy, is to be blotted from the statutes of Virginia.

And so, when the delegates to be commissioned by us, with all the delegates of the other States of the Union, have deliberated and made a choice, it will then be the duty of one and all to bear aloft the banner of Democracy and help to carry it to victory and triumph.

And let the message then be:

Back to your tents, oh, ye hosts of Democracy. Strike for the old altars and the old fires. Strike to put down graft and corruption in official life. Strike to divorce special privilege from Government. Strike to insure equal and exact justice to all men. Strike to exalt honor and righteousness in the life of the Nation.

NATIONAL-ORIGINS CLAUSE (S. DOC. NO. 259)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a joint report by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, relating to immigration quotas on the basis of national origin.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 27, 1929.

PENSIONS

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16878) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army, and so forth, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 16878, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, and Mr. HAMMER.

ALONZO DURWARD ALLEN

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12793) for the relief of Alonzo Durward Allen, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12793, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

TO SUPPLEMENT THE NATURALIZATION LAWS

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I present for printing under the rules the conference report on the bill (H. R. 349) to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes.

NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANTS

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the joint congressional committee I call up the bill (H. R. 17212) to alter and amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and to alter and amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. to issue its bonds for the construction of its road and to secure the same by mortgage, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1870; to declare forfeited to the United States certain claimed rights asserted by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., or the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; to direct the institution and prosecution of proceedings looking to the adjustment of the grant, and for other purposes, and ask its consideration.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, is this a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a privileged matter by reason of the resolution creating the joint congressional committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, let us have the bill reported.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a pretty long bill.

Mr. COLTON. It is not a very long bill. The resolution which authorized the creation of this commission and later which extended the life of the commission in express terms made it a privileged matter which could be called up directly by the joint committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My recollection is that a resolution was passed still further extending the time of this commission.

Mr. SNELL. But they got this report in more quickly than they expected, when we extended the life of the commission.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, it was thought at the time that we could not get the report ready at this session of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill. Without objection, the Clerk will omit reading the whereases.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows, omitting the preamble:

A bill (H. R. 17212) to alter and amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and to alter and amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. to issue its bonds for the construction of its road and to secure the same by mortgage, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1870; to declare forfeited to the United States certain claimed rights asserted by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., or the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; to direct the institution and prosecution of proceedings looking to the adjustment of the grant, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That any and all lands within the indemnity limits of the land grants made by Congress to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. under the act of July 2, 1864, and the resolution of May 31, 1870, which, on June 5, 1924, were embraced within the exterior boundaries of any national forest or other Government reservation and which, in the event of a deficiency in the said land grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. upon the dates of the withdrawals of the said indemnity lands for governmental purposes, would be, or were, available to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. or its successor, the Northern Pacific Railway Co., by indemnity selection or otherwise in satisfaction of such deficiency in said land grants, are hereby taken out of and removed from the operation of the said land grants, and are hereby retained by the United States as part and parcel of the Government reservations wherein they are situate, relieved, and freed from all claims, if any exist, which the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. or its successor, the Northern Pacific Railway Co., may have to acquire the said lands by indemnity selection or otherwise in satisfaction of the said land grants: Provided, That for any or all of the aforesaid indemnity lands hereby retained by the United States under this act the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. or its successor, the Northern Pacific Railway Co., or any subsidiary of either or both, or any subsidiary of a subsidiary of either or both, shall be entitled to and shall receive compensation from the United States to the extent and in the amounts, if any, the courts hold that compensation is due from the United States.

SEC. 2. That all of the unsatisfied indemnity selection rights, if any exist, claimed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. or its successor, the Northern Pacific Railway Co., or any subsidiary of either or both, or any subsidiary of a subsidiary of either or both, or by any grantee or assignee of either or both, together with all claims to additional lands under and by virtue of the land grants contained in the act of July 2, 1864, and resolution of May 31, 1870, or any other acts of Congress supplemental or relating thereto, are hereby declared forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 3. The rights reserved to the United States in the act of July 2, 1864, to add to, alter, amend, or repeal said act, and in the resolution of May 31, 1870, to alter or amend said resolution, are not to be considered as fully exercised, waived, or destroyed by this act or the exercise of the authority conferred hereby; and the passage of this act shall not be construed as in any wise evidencing the purpose or intention of Congress to depart from the policy of the United States expressed in the resolution of May 31, 1870, relative to the disposition of granted lands by said grantee, and the right is hereby reserved to the United States to, at any time, enact further legislation relating thereto.

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall not be construed as affecting the present title of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. or its successor, the Northern Pacific Railway Co., or any subsidiary of either or both, in the right of way of said road or lands actually used in good faith by the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in the operation of said road.

SEC. 5. The Attorney General is hereby authorized and directed forthwith to institute and prosecute such suit, or suits, as may, in his judgment, be required to remove the cloud cast upon the title to lands belonging to the United States as a result of the claim of said companies, and to have all said controversies and disputes respecting the operation and effect of said grants, and actions taken under them, judicially determined, and a full accounting had between the United States and said companies, and a determination made of the extent, if any, to which the said companies, or either of them, may be entitled to have patented to them additional lands of the United States in satisfaction of said grants, and as to whether either of the said companies is lawfully entitled to all or any part of the lands within the indemnity limits for which patents have not issued, and the extent to which the United States may be entitled to recover lands wrongfully patented or certified. In the judicial proceedings contemplated by this act there shall be presented, and the court or courts shall consider, make findings relating to, and determine to what extent the terms, conditions, and covenants, expressed or implied, in said granting acts have been performed by the United States, and by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., or its successors, including the legal effect of the foreclosure of any and all mortgages which said Northern Pacific Railroad Co. claims to have placed on said granted lands by virtue of authority conferred in the said resolution of May 31, 1870, and the extent to which said proceedings and foreclosures meet the requirements of said resolution with respect to the disposition of said granted lands, and relative to what lands, if any, have been wrongfully or erroneously patented or certified to said companies, or either of them, as the result of fraud, mistake of law or fact, or through legislative or administrative misapprehension as to the proper construction of said grants or acts supplemental or relating thereto, or otherwise, and the United States and the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., or the Northern Pacific Railway Co., or any other proper person, shall be entitled to have heard and determined by the court all questions of law and fact, and all other claims and matters which may be germane to a full and complete adjudication of the respective rights of the United States and said companies, or their successors in interest under said act of July 2, 1864, and said joint resolution of May 31, 1870, and in other acts or resolutions supplemental thereto, and all other questions of law and fact presented to the joint congressional committee appointed under authority of the joint resolution of Congress of June 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 461), notwithstanding that such matters may not be specifically mentioned in this enactment.

SEC. 6. All lands received by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. or its successors, the Northern Pacific Railway Co., under said grants or acts of Congress supplemental or relating thereto which have not been earned, but which have been, for any reason, erroneously credited or patented to either of said companies, or its or their successors, shall be fully accounted for by said companies, either by restitution of the land itself, where the said lands have not passed into the hands of innocent purchasers for value, or otherwise, in accordance with the findings and decrees of the courts. In fixing the amount, if any, the said companies are entitled to receive on account of the retention by the United States of indemnity lands within national forests and other Government reservations, as by this enactment provided, the court shall determine the full value of the interest which may be rightfully claimed by said companies, or either of them, in said lands under the terms of said grants, and shall determine what quantities in lands or values said companies have received in excess of the full amounts they were entitled to receive, either as a result of breaches of the terms, conditions, or covenants, either expressed or implied, of said granting acts by said companies, or either of them, or through mistake of law or fact, or through misapprehension as to the proper construction of said grants, or as a result of fraud, or otherwise, and said excess lands and values, if any, shall be charged against said companies in the judgments and decrees of said court. To carry out this enactment the court may render such judgments and decrees as law and equity may require.

SEC. 7. The suit, or suits, herein authorized shall be brought in a district court of the United States for some district within the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington, or Oregon, and may be consolidated with any other actions now pending between the same parties in the same court involving the subject matter, and any such court shall in any such suit have jurisdiction to hear and determine all matters and things submitted to it in pursuance of the provisions of this act, and in any such suit brought by the Attorney General hereunder any persons having an interest in or lien upon any lands included in the lands claimed by the United States, or by said companies, or any interest in the proceeds or avails thereof may be made parties. On filing the complaint in such cause, writs of subpœna may be issued by the court against any parties defendant, which writs shall run into any districts and shall be served, as any other like process, by the respective marshals of such districts. The judgment, or judgments, which may be rendered in said district court shall be subject to review on appeal by the United States circuit court of appeals for the circuit which includes the district in which the suit is brought, and the judgment, or judgments, of such United States circuit court of appeals shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases. Any case begun in accordance with this act shall be expedited in every way, and be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable day in any court in which it may be pending. Congress shall be given a reasonable time, which shall be fixed by the court, within which it may enact such legislation and appropriate such sums of money as may be necessary to meet the requirements of any final judgment resulting by reason of the litigation herein provided for.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Attorney General to report to the Congress of the United States any final determinations rendered in such suit or proceedings, and the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall thereafter submit to Congress recommendations for the enactment of such legislation, if any, as may be deemed by them to be desirable in the interests of the United States in connection with the execution of said decree or otherwise.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants under the act of July 2, 1864, and the joint resolution of May 31, 1870, and other acts relating thereto; and he is also hereby directed to withhold the issuance of any further patents and muniments of title under said act and the said resolution, or any legislative enactments supplemental thereto, or connected therewith, until the suit or suits contemplated by this act shall have been finally determined: Provided, That this act shall not prevent the adjudication of any claims arising under the public land laws where the claimants are not seeking title through the grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., or its successors, or any acts in modification thereof or supplemental thereto.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think you have a number of whereases in the bill. Is it necessary to the sense of the bill, the way it is worded?

Mr. COLTON. I think it is not. It was put in in order to assist in passing the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is very unusual, of course, to put whereases into a law.

Mr. COLTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the whereases be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the whereases be stricken out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is a pretty important matter which has been disposed of here. It has required long and ingenious labor to arrive at the conclusions that have been arrived at, as expressed in this bill. I think it would be well for some Member familiar with the measure to ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD, for the benefit of those who are to come after us here, a statement of what this is. I suggest that to the chairman.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that there is a special order permitting the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORTON] to speak for 15 minutes. Does the gentleman from Nebraska desire to speak at this time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Nebraska may have the same opportunity to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORTON] may have the same opportunity to speak to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It will be in order to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

EDUCATIONAL ORDERS FOR MUNITIONS

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 450) to amend section 5a of the national defense act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 450) to amend section 5a of the national defense act.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, would a motion be in order to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. No. It has not been read. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 450.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, is the vote to be on the motion to go into the Committe of the Whole or on the demand for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. On this division the ayes are 25 and the noes are 105.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Those favoring taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifteen Members have arisen, not a sufficient number. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole is rejected.

AMENDMENT OF THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up a privileged report, House Resolution 343.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 343

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2901, an act to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the act and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the act, the act shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the act for amendment the committee shall rise and report the act to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the act and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for the consideration of the Jones-Stalker bill. As I understand it, this legislation simply increases the maximum penalties which may be imposed on violators of the national prohibition act. As I understand it, it is approved and asked for by the Department of Justice. Therefore, it is being presented here at this time.

I reserve the balance of my time. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] desire time?

Mr. POU. I would like to use 20 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I shall have an hour, and I will give the gentleman all he wants.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina 30 minutes to do with as he pleases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, there is a general pretension here that this is most important legislation. In the closing few days of the second session of the Seventieth Congress the most important piece of legislation that can be conceived of for action is the so-called Jones-Stalker bill, which has been pending in this House, I believe, for four or five years and which has been the subject of a great deal of propaganda on letterheads of the Anti-Saloon League and similar organizations. There is no unfinished important legislation pending in this Congress equal in importance to the country such as this! Farm relief, Muscle Shoals, and many other measures fade into insignificance when compared with this overwhelmingly important piece of legislation! What happens with respect to this bill will determine the fate of the Nation! Every babbler on every main street in the country is watching this Congress to see what it does with this bill. The Rules Committee considered the measure of such great importance as compared with dozens of proposals still pending before that committee that it set aside practically a whole day for its consideration.

Many people are acquainted with my determined opposition to prohibition and all measures related to it. This bill will not solve the distressing problems arising out of prohibition. You are going to be told the bill is demanded by the Department of Justice; that this bill is the only solution of that greatest of evils existing in the Nation to-day. Of all the voluminous plans submitted to Mr. Durant this one plan of "increased penalties" is going to solve the entire problem. All you have to do when you have an evil is to increase the penalty to be inflicted on the evildoer and, presto change, you solve the whole thing.

Now, gentlemen, many of you are lawyers. I do not know how a lawyer on the Judiciary Committee or in the House can approach this kind of legislation with a straight face and really advocate its passage. The spirit behind this bill is still that same old spirit that pervades the whole question, the spirit of the witch burner, the spirit of Puritanical zealotry, the survival of the old Anglo-Saxon period of cruel and inhuman punishment as the solution of wrongdoing.

Now, as I started to say, I am, it is well known, against prohibition. I am against the eighteenth amendment. I abhor it. I despise it. I have no respect for it. Words would fail me in expressing my disgust and absolute refusal to adhere to the Volstead Act, and I point to this bill in itself as indicative of the malignant, malevolent witch-burning attitude on this question in America to-day.

This bill prescribes a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment and a $10,000 fine for violation of the Volstead law. I say, with firmness in my belief, that if the punishment prescribed in this bill were capital punishment it would pass this House by 300 votes.

Now, what has been the history of all Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence? Why, the crueler and more inhuman the punishment was made the quicker it defeated the very purpose for which it was enacted. Hundreds of laws centuries ago prescribed the death penalty for hundreds of crimes, and judges themselves soon found that the laws defeated the very purpose of their enactment. Not only would not a jury convict—and will not convict to-day under many sections of the Volstead law—but the judges themselves would not convict. The judges themselves wove and conjured all kinds of rules of evidence to avoid conviction. One rule of evidence built up to meet the situation was the rule against "self-incrimination." Another rule was that requiring corroboration, so that some loophole might be found in order to prevent an unreasonable law from being put into effect.

It is going to be said here to-day that it is significant that the wets are against this bill. It will be said that "the arguments you wets make are not sincere because you are against these laws anyway." Well, I am not arguing the cause of the bootlegger, neither are the men who are proposing this legislation concerned about putting bootleggers in jail. Once the bill is passed their job is done. They are only making a gesture back in the direction of their districts that they are "for" prohibition. Probably they intimately know many a bootlegger whom they would not think of confining to jail for five years or fining $10,000. I contend I am just as sincere in my opposition to this bill as the drys who pretend they want it passed.

Of course, the spirit that permeates this entire subject is obvious. I may be just as vehement about it as the drys are.

Nothing that can be said here to-day will have any effect even on the lawyers who are supposed to use their reason on legislation. If this bill did not pertain to prohibition there is not a lawyer here who would hesitate to vote against it. Let us be sincere about it, please. Here in the year 1929, 435 men who have taken an oath that they are all over 25 years of age in order to be admitted as Members of this body, suggest that the penalties in the Volstead Act be increased from a maximum of two years to a maximum in dozens of instances to five years and a $10,000 fine.

You have also in the bill a ridiculous proviso. Why, if you should take out all of the penalties in the bill, if you should provide that the bootlegger go free and still left that proviso in the bill I would never vote for it.

As I said in some remarks I made the other day, that kind of legislation is unworthy of a board of aldermen. In fact, I do not know a board of aldermen that would adopt legislation such as that proviso which says, in effect, that a judge is going to interpret the legislation as he sees fit. Strike it out, I beg of you. Make it harder for the bootlegger, if you will, but do not vote that provision into a law which will go into the libraries of this country for our children to read and for our young law students to read. I ask you lawyers and ex-judges, "Should a provision like that be enacted in a piece of legislation of the Congress of the United States of America?" leaving the whole matter to the discretion of a judge. In one case he will inflict the maximum, and in another case he need not do it, according to his own idosyncrasy. You make him a legislator.

Now, what is going to happen? Under that "proviso" the dry judge—and there are dry judges just the same as there are dry Congressmen—is going to inflict in every instance the maximum penalty, and the wet judge—and there are wet judges—is going to inflict in every instance the minimum penalty. It invariably happens.

Why, we see it happen every day. The visiting judges who come to New York on a joy ride, who enjoy the glamour and the amusement of our city, partake of all we have to give—they get a little extra money, incidentally, and if they come from a so-called dry State, in every instance, in spite of the fact that they are appointed for life, in spite of the fact that they do not have to cater to an electorate, in spite of the fact that they are not subject to chastisement by their constituents, still because of fear of criticism in their districts, everyone of them inflicts the extreme, the severe, the maximum penalty; and, on the other hand, the wet judge from New Jersey, for instance, who goes down to Texas inflicts the minimum penalty.

Is it intelligent legislation to enact a measure like this, and especially in this body, the national legislative body of the United States?

Oh, it will be said that the Department of Justice represented by a lady up there—a lecturer for the Klu Klux Klan—is for this bill. It is her only contribution to a solution of the problem. She says, "Put all these bootleggers in jail and the problem is solved." Some one suggested to me to-day that the Republican Party should not vote for this measure because it would be a serious loss to their party to put all the bootleggers in jail, a loss not only in votes, but in the "sinews of war" which they received in the last election.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I fully agree with the gentleman's sentiment in reference to this measure——

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I thought the gentleman would.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But I can not let go unnoticed the gentleman's views in reference to the wet judge inflicting the minimum punishment. We have in my district a man who has told me that he is not in favor of the Volstead law, but any man who is brought before him, without exception, where it is shown that a sale has occurred, such a man is sent to jail and must pay a fine besides. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, I do not know who he is, and I do not want to cast any aspersions on the particular judge, but he is probably like a lot of other judges of the Federal court. Immediately after sending this great "criminal," this man guilty of this "high treason" against this sacred eighteenth amendment, to jail, he probably retires to his chambers, telephones his favorite bootlegger and participates in violating this "holy" law.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The one I refer to does not.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, so many do it that it is rather a rare case you cite.

The trouble with all this legislation is the hypocrisy behind it, the insincerity which prompts it. Nobody wants the law put into effect—at least no public official. Only demagogues advocate such legislation.

Oh, 20 years from now, as I have often said before, we will not be appropriating even one dollar to enforce the Volstead law. I would not vote for one penny to enforce it now. I would not counsel anybody to even respect the law. It is not worthy of respect. I do not know anybody, or at least not many, who do respect it. Let me remind you that our forefathers, the colonists, the backbone of our Revolution, violated many a law, and not dissimilar to this. I believe that too much can not be said about the hypocrisy behind it all, the spirit of narrowness, the inheritance from the puritanical zealotry, the inflicting on other people punishment that they came here to escape, the most cruel, inhuman ideas about punishment and infliction of punishment for sin and not for crime, the old thumbscrew and the rack. That is the spirit behind all wet legislation. Many men—on both sides—are hypocrites about it all. I, for one, do not propose to be a hypocrite.

The hypocrite finally spits in the wind.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the adoption of the rule bringing this bill before the House for consideration, and I shall also support the bill. My vote for the bill will be cast without reservations, mental or otherwise, and with whole-hearted approval of the provisions of the bill as it is drawn.

The only thing the bill does, or undertakes to do is to increase the maximum penalties that may be inflicted in the Federal courts for violations of the national prohibition act, and the various amendments thereto as the law now stands upon the statute books.

That the present maximum penalties are wholly inadequate for the proper enforcement of the law is denied by no one who is familiar with the situation and who wants to see the law honestly enforced.

The main argument, if not the only argument against this bill, is that the maximum penalties it provides would be excessive in many, and probably a majority, of the cases reaching the courts, and that harsh and unjust punishment might be inflicted for trivial violations of the law.

This argument is based on a lack of confidence in the courts, and on the assumption that judges who administer this law will abuse their discretion to measure the punishment to the gravity of the offense which is necessarily conferred on every judge who administers the criminal law. Judges of Federal courts now exercise that discretion in administering practically every other criminal statute. What sound reason is there for saying they can not be trusted with that discretion in cases arising out of violations of the prohibition laws?

It does not require a lawyer to know that criminal statutes can not be drawn in language accurately describing every shade of the gravity of an offense involved in the violation of a criminal law. Therefore, judges and juries in every civilized country in the world are vested with the discretion—between the minimum and the maximum provided in the law—of inflicting punishment commensurate with the offense as shown by all the facts and circumstances developed in the trial of cases.

No one objects to the exercise of this discretionary power of the Federal courts in the administration of our whole criminal law except in the case of prohibition. Why this tender solicitude for violators of the prohibition laws?

What just ground is there for fear that judges, who, so far as I know, have never abused their discretionary powers in meting out proper punishment within the minimum and maximum penalties prescribed by law to counterfeiters, mail robbers, smugglers, dope peddlers, and other criminals, will abuse their discretion in dealing with violators of the prohibition law?

Does anyone contend that the maximum penalties of this bill are excessive for maximum offenses committed against the prohibition laws? I have heard no one make that argument.

We all know the purpose of this act. It is not intended for the ordinary offender. The law is already adequate to take care of him. These increased penalties are provided for the higher-ups, for the aristocracy of the liquor traffic.

The people are not being fooled by the weeping, the wailing, and the gnashing of teeth now going on over this alleged dangerous grant of power to the courts.

They know Congress is merely providing adequate punishment for brazen and notorious violators of the laws of the United States.

They know further that the opposition to this legislation, in the main, comes from those who are opposed to the eighteenth amendment, who boldly claim it can never be enforced. [Applause.]

I sometimes wonder how long it is going to take some people to learn that the eighteenth amendment is in the Constitution of the United States to stay.

That the people of the United States have definitely made up their minds that intoxicating liquor will never again be sold in this country under the sanction of law.

The claim often made here that prohibition was written into the Constitution by an organized minority acting under the whip and spur of the Anti-Saloon League is utterly without foundation in fact.

The eighteenth amendment was placed in the Constitution because an overwhelming majority of the American people after long years of discussion and thought deliberately made up their minds the only way to deal with the liquor traffic was to smash it—to make it in law what it had always been in fact—an outlaw. [Applause.]

We hear much these days about the admitted evils that have grown up in the administration of prohibition. No one denies that evils exist. But the people have not forgotten the enormous iniquities of the legalized liquor traffic in the days before national prohibition.

They have not forgotten the days when the liquor traffic practically controlled the politics of the country. When it placed its friends in public office. When it insisted on its right to select sheriffs and prosecuting attorneys, and when no man could remain on the police force who was not its subservient tool.

They have not forgotten the days when in many parts of the country no public man could withstand the enmity of the liquor traffic. They have not forgotten the days when one-half of the pay checks of laboring men were cashed on Saturday nights over the bar of a saloon, whose proprietor was usually the political boss of his neighborhood.

It was to free the American people from these intolerable conditions and to destroy forever the strangle hold this enormous curse had on the political and social life of the Nation that the people rose in their might and wrote the outlawry of booze into the Constitution of the United States.

They intend for it to remain in the Constitution. Notwithstanding the noisy claims of a wet minority in the Congress and throughout the country prohibition is not a failure. It has proven itself a blessing and not a curse to the American people. In spite of inefficient enforcement in many parts of the country, in spite of undeniable corruption and betrayal of trust by many who have been charged with its enforcement, great progress, and in many of the States satisfactory progress, has been made in its enforcement.

The country is infinitely better off to-day than it was before national prohibition. Competent observers say prohibition more than any other one thing has contributed to the postwar prosperity and growth of wealth in the United States.

A great European economist said recently that prohibition was fast making America the economic master of the world.

I want to mention one thing more. The statement is often made that there is more drinking now than before prohibition. This is not true. The most reliable statistics obtainable indicate there is now less than 10 per cent the amount of alcoholic drink consumed than before prohibition.

In proof of this, one significant fact stands out like a mountain peak. Before prohibition there were in the United States 77 great Keeley cure institutes, where alcoholic patients were treated. Since prohibition 74 of these institutions have closed their doors for want of patients.

Will some one who thinks there is more drinking now than formerly tell us where our inebriates are now being treated?

Mr. Speaker, prohibition enforcement has encountered many difficulties. The road ahead will not be easy to travel. But the American people have no notion of turning back. [Applause.] As I said before, they are not going to take prohibition out of the Constitution. They are not going to weaken enforcement statutes. They intend to strengthen them wherever necessary, and they are going to demonstrate to all the world their will and their capacity to enforce that which they by their own overwhelming choice have seen fit to write into their Constitution and to make a part of the fundamental law of the land. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT].

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, three times I have been a candidate for election as a bone-dry, in a supposedly wet district. I believe in prohibition, and I hope to live to see the day when both its observance and its enforcement are uniform throughout the Nation. [Applause.] At the same time, in the campaigns I have made, I have stated repeatedly that, in my judgment, increase of penalties for the violation was an improper way to approach the enforcement of the law. [Applause.]

The places where enforcement is needed particularly are the great wet sections surrounding our great cities. They are not the places where the prevailing sentiment of the people favors prohibition. What does that mean in a nation built on the grand and petit-jury system? It means that in the sections where enforcement is needed, public sentiment resists enforcement—that in the section where enforcement is less needed public sentiment supports enforcement. Any man who has served on a grand or petit jury, as I have, any man who has practiced law in the courts of this country, knows that the minute you increase the penalty on a law which public sentiment does not strongly favor, you vastly increase the difficulty of securing either indictment or conviction.

The average juror, grand or petit, stands against indictment in the first instance, and conviction in the second instance, if he believes that it is within the power of the judge to award what to him seems an improper or undue sentence.

I have seen this thing worked out in my own State in the days before prohibition when we endeavored to enforce a law for Sunday closing of saloons until it reached a point where it was almost impossible to get an indictment, let alone a conviction, because in part of the fact that the law permitted a prison sentence.

My friends, not only because I have stated this position as a candidate but as a man who believes in prohibition, who wants to see it enforced, who even more wants to see it observed throughout the Nation, I hope that this proposed resolution will not become a law, because I believe that it will embarrass the enforcement of the law in those sections which must vitally need such enforcement. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely opposed to this bill, having a strong conviction that it will create an even greater evil than the present law.

We can not legislate morals; the failure of prohibition demonstrates that this is true.

If the provisions of this bill become law, it will cause the United States Government to go into the building business, for we have not now, and could not build enough jails, to provide the carrying out of the law.

As a result of it, class distinctions would be even greater than they now are, the rich continuing to be protected and above the law, while the poor man would be used to demonstrate the efficient manner in which the law would be enforced.

We are tired of this hypocrisy that is ruining our boys and girls, who are cynically watching the farce.

If this bill becomes a law and is honestly enforced, a large part of the membership of this House, and of the State legislatures throughout the country, might find themselves in a very unhappy and embarrassing position. [Applause and laughter.]

Your son or daughter might be among the first to feel the arm of the law; and for a pint of liquor, he or she might have his or her otherwise useful life ruined.

It is a law that would bring shame and sorrow on many a happy home, and would be a disgrace to the traditions of a free country. I earnestly hope the Members of this House will pause before committing so great a crime as to cause the ruin of any man or woman who would become the victim of so monstrous a law.

Those caught buying or selling liquor would be imprisoned, and the countless thousands all over the land who are indulging in cocktail parties and have underground passage to the source of supply would be immune from the law, as they have been during the past 10 years of farce prohibition.

Another reason for my opposition to the bill is found in the following proviso of the bill:

> That it is the intent of Congress that the court in imposing sentence hereunder should discriminate between the casual or slight violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquors or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

"Intent" is an all-embracing word, and could mean anything. I might say that we passed a bill in the last session which was intended to help the Government employees throughout the country, and we all know the construction placed on "intent" in this instance. It is therefore very poor legislation that will permit the use of the word "intent" to govern the meaning of a bill carrying so far-reaching a penalty. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, whatever the views on the question of prohibition may be, surely there should be no difference about the plain English wording of the bill now before the House for consideration. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], in support of the bill, made the definite statement that the bill increases the penalty for second and habitual offenders. Every dry advocate in this House is supporting the bill in the belief that this bill increases the penalty for the second and habitual wholesale offender of the law. That is not the case. This bill does not increase by one day the prison sentence now in the existing law. Any statement made to the contrary is made either in ignorance of what is in the bill or for the purpose of deceiving the folks at home.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; not now. Right here is the present law. Here is section 29 of the prohibition enforcement law. I say that it does not increase by one day the prison sentence of the second and habitual offender. Section 29 of the present law reads:

> Any person who manufactures or sells liquor in violation of this title shall for a first offense be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not exceeding six months—> and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 or more than $2,000 and be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than five years.

And now, listen to this—

Now, look at the bill before you. Oh, you drys, you are either fooling yourselves or you want to fool somebody else. The bill before you provides—> the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

The maximum in the present law is five years. The maximum in this bill is five years. The bill takes away the mandatory prison sentence for the second and habitual offender, and makes it discretionary. You do not increase by one day the prison penalty, because the minimum remains, and it is provided specifically in the bill before us that nothing in the bill shall be construed to repeal the minimum penalties now provided in the law. You have the 5-year maximum penalty in the existing law, and you have the five years here. It is nothing but bunk, and the best proof of the bunk that I can refer you to is the lawyer-like, statesman-like legislative report of the majority in support of this bill. Let me read it to you:

> The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill S. 2901, after consideration reports the same favorably and recommends that the bill do pass.

[Laughter.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Did not the gentleman vote for that report?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no. Here is my own minority report.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, those were all the reasons that we could muster. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Absolutely! A Daniel come to judgment! Those were all the reasons the committee could muster. The bill is being jammed through the closing days of the session without that deliberation and study which its highly penal provisions would require. In fact, the very wording and contents of the bill display a confusion of thought, a conflict of purpose, and a departure from orderly legislative procedure. The bill has been described, advertised, and proclaimed as providing additional prison terms for second and habitual offenders of the prohibition law. It does not add one day to the maximum prison term for second and habitual offenders provided in the existing law. It gives to every judge the vehicle to let off the wholesale habitual bootlegger with a mere fine and to impose heavy prison terms on the possessor of a casual half pint. It is discriminatory in its very discretionary provisions. The bill is unscientific in that it does not define the various degrees of the crime for which punishment is provided in the manner accepted and approved by every known system of jurisprudence. It lumps all violations of the law with a wide latitude of punishments from a fine of $1 to $10,000 and from one day imprisonment to five years. Not the offense but the temperament, feeling, favor, whim, spite, caprice, or digestion of the individual judge is the measure of punishment.

The wide range of attitude of Federal judges, the differences in sentences imposed by the various judges throughout the country are in and of themselves the proof that the policy established in this bill is not only unwise, but dangerous and unjust. Nowhere in the Federal penal laws can be found any such loose and uncertain provisions describing an offense and failure to define the degree of a crime.

As I have just stated, section 29 of the prohibition enforcement law provides that any person violating the law as a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not more than $2,000 and be imprisoned for not more than five years. The present bill increases the $2,000 limit to $10,000, but leaves the maximum prison term exactly where it is. An increased fine will not disturb or perturb the wholesale successful bootlegger. He is not apprehended under existing law, he will not be apprehended if the present bill is enacted into law. It is simply not within the scheme of things to apprehend the wholesaler, the bankers who finance, established corporations that transport, or the wholesale distributors of liquor.

The existing bill would submit, however, any person who has two or more times been apprehended for the mere possession of a hip flash to imprisonment for a term of five years. This is the only class of persons who will suffer under the provisions of this bill. Judges will be quick to impose maximum prison terms on impecunious and helpless individuals in order to make up the total prison years imposed by them when submitting their annual report or making speeches to Anti-Saloon League meetings.

The proviso contained in the first section that "It is the intent of Congress that the court in imposing sentence hereunder should discriminate between casual or light violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquor or attempts to commercialize violations of the law," is indeed a novel principle in penal laws. Where else in the jurisprudence of any civilized country is a judge directed by the law itself to "discriminate"? If the bill has been properly studied and considered, casual and light violations would have been classified and punishment for such light and casual offenses specifically provided.

The law, as it is written, directs the court not to exercise its judgment, not to extend mercy and mete out justice on the merits but to discriminate. This proviso itself, while no doubt hurriedly written with the best of intentions, is indeed discriminatory. It permits the socially prominent and the financially affluent to entertain and lavishly serve to the limit of human capacity liquor and wines of rare vintage with the risk of obtaining a slight fine, while the unfortunate and obscure who happens to sell two or more glasses of California claret at 10 cents a glass faces a prison term of five years.

Section 2 seems to be the alibi for Members who represent divided districts. By voting for this bill they can justify their stand to the drys by reading section 1 and square themselves with the wets by reading section 2. The bill and the proposition submitted is as inconsistent, as impossible, as ridiculous as prohibition itself. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana yield me a minute?

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, our committee had considered the Stalker bill and made a full and complete report upon it. We had only about an hour in which to act when this Senate bill was referred to us, and without multiplying words we put in this short report and gave the House the bill to act on.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I accept the apology. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, gentlewomen, and gentlemen of the House, in the brief space of time allotted to me I desire to direct attention to one of the conditions that will follow the passage of this bill. A year ago in your wisdom you appointed a committee to investigate the Federal penitentiaries and other penal institutions of the country. Our committee made a report recently and we found that at the present time there are over 600 inmates of the two prisons—Atlanta and Leavenworth—who are sleeping in basements, cellars, and in the corridors of the prisons. Realizing this very bad condition, I introduced a bill providing for the erection of two new Federal penitentiaries. I made a request of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to report out the bill. He answered me very courteously and stated that owing to the late period of the session, and so forth, nothing could be done this year.

What is going to happen? You already have overcrowded prisons. You have no new prisons under way. What are you going to do with these men you are going to put away for five years? The only thing that I see that you can do is to establish a tent city somewhere and house them in tents for three or four years until perhaps the prisons are erected; but in the meantime these men, confined in tents, are liable to become afflicted with disease, due to improper housing and sanitary conditions, and perhaps their death might result, but, of course, that means nothing to an ardent dry.

Prisons have never been so full. The different cities and States have served notice on the United States Government that they have no further accommodations for Federal prisoners. This bill will operate to increase the number of such prisoners. All the other criminal statutes of the Government combined call for a far less amount of money to enforce them. In frantic efforts to enforce the law States driven by the bigotry of prohibitionists have inflicted cruel and tyrannical punishments; as in the States of Michigan, a judge sentenced a woman, the mother of 10 children, to prison for life for selling a half pint of gin.

The nine years of prohibition have been nine years of agitation, of outrage, of gross violations of individual rights and open warfare against the citizens. Witness the many incidents that have occurred throughout the country of the shooting to death of innocent men, women, and children on the public highways by Federal prohibition-enforcement officers—committing murder in the sacred name of prohibition.

The forces behind this bill are the same that have been behind similar tyrannical measures during the past nine years. Individual rights, legal procedure, and constitutional protection have been thrown to the winds at the suggestion of the Anti-Saloon League. Without trial by jury injunctions have been freely used, closing buildings and destroying valuable property. They have destroyed Article IV of the bill of rights, which once protected the individual in the security of his home, papers, and effects against unlawful search and seizure. They care nothing for constitutional rights. They would rather have the whole fabric of the Government go down in ruin lest they should be thwarted in their appetite to rule.

Prohibitionists have no regard for well-established rights or well-recognized principles of Government.

Only last week orders were sent to the Congress by two political bishops to vote for the amendment adding $24,000,000 to the prohibition enforcement fund. Many of the Members were in a sorry dilemma; they were between love and duty; love for the Anti-Saloon League and the duty they owed to their party. For the first time in nine years many of them failed to obey the dictates of the political bishops. Now, in the closing days of the session, actuated by a desire to reinstate themselves in the good graces of the political bishops they advocate the passage of this drastic bill.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] states that the defeat of the Democratic candidate in the presidential election was due to his stand on prohibition. From my knowledge of the gentleman I know that he is far too intelligent a man to believe this. He knows deep down in his heart that the defeat of that candidate was due, not to his stand on prohibition, but to the bigotry and intolerance of the Nation. The help of this same bigotry and intolerance was well used by the gentleman's party in the election. The same bigotry and intolerance would, if it could, deny me and others a seat in this House, or a seat in the Senate, while it would raise its hands in holy horror at the mere thought of intrusting us with the executive power of this Government. This, let me repeat to the gentleman from Ohio, was the cause of the defeat of our candidate, and not his stand on prohibition. Gentlewomen and gentlemen of the House, I want to sleep nights, I don't want to wake up thinking that my vote on this bill was the means of incarcerating in a wretched, overcrowded, insanitary prison any of my fellow men or women of this Nation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WHITE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Colorado. Mr. Speaker and Members of the Congress, the nature of this resolution and the character of the report from the Judiciary Committee upon the bill in question (S. 2901) should be sufficient, it seems to me, to impel this body of lawmakers to pause and seriously consider the effect of our jazz rate of speed in disposing of important legislation.

This resolution provides for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill 2901, known as the Jones bill, the "pet" measure of the so-called prohibitionists. A measure which is said to be far-reaching in its scope and effect and yet this special rule, if adopted, permits of but one hour of discussion and consideration of the bill by a body of 435 Representatives of all the people.

I am not unmindful of the fact that proposed legislative measures are supposed to be thoroughly considered by the committee of this House to which they are referred for report after an opportunity has been given proponents and opponents for a full hearing as to the merits and wisdom of the proposed measure.

I am also aware that such procedure seems necessary to progress in a body of so large a membership as has this House. But, fellow Members, it is clear that this procedure has not been followed in this case. On the contrary, 43 Members of this House made a written request of the Judiciary Committee to be heard on the bill in question, but were given no opportunity in that behalf.

This manner of legislating is appalling to me. It is un-American in principle and in my humble judgment can find no approval among unprejudiced people.

Under the Constitution the authority to determine public policy and to enact legislation rests with the Congress, and no authority in that behalf is invested elsewhere. The President does not have this authority, the United States Supreme Court does not possess it, and neither is it lodged in the Department of Justice, nor in the Anti-Saloon League. It belongs to the Congress alone.

How may Congress enact reasonable, sensible, and just laws unless the respective Members thereof in the two bodies of which Congress is composed are permitted to discuss, to criticise, and help mold into shape proposed laws? Without this there is no sure way.

Any law or measure which is formulated and molded into shape by one person or class of persons, seeking a particular end in view, is usually of questionable merit.

It is only through the views and by means of the criticism of those that oppose, as well as of those who favor, a particular measure, course, or remedy, that the best results may be obtained. In other words, a good and workable law may best be molded into shape by and through the composite judgment of all those who make the law.

In fact, many of the defects, imperfections, absurdities, and inequities of the Volstead Act were undoubtedly the result of just such unwise course in the enactment of that law. That law was fostered, molded into its absurd shape and forced through the Congress by the Anti-Saloon League, its agents and emissaries, all having in mind the suppression of and traffic in and use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and without the benefit of the views and criticisms of those who believe that prohibition and temperance can never exist in the same place at the same time, and who are, therefore, honest advocates of temperance, and necessarily against prohibition.

In my opinion, no Congressman may discharge his duty to his country if he simply acts in the capacity of a rubber stamp and accepts legislation "dished up" to him. Such duty can be performed only after diligent inquiry, investigation, and discussion with other Members of the House, remembering always that one must exercise his own judgment and reach his own conclusions as an officer of the United States acting for the good of the people of the whole Nation.

No claim is made that any hearings were had upon this Senate bill by or before any committee of this House. It is stated, however, that hearings were had before the House Committee on the Judiciary upon H. R. 9588 and that the two bills are in substantial effect the same. In my opinion this claim is not well based.

An examination of the two bills discloses but little if any similarity. If the legislative intent of the Senate bill as therein set forth is the true meaning to be ascribed to that measure, then the purposes of that bill are diametrically opposite to the purposes of the House bill.

The Senate bill expressly reserves and continues the minimum penalties for the first and subsequent offenses as now provided by the national prohibition act while the House bill eliminates them.

The Senate bill declares that it is "the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence" under that law "should discriminate between casual or slight violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquor, or attempts to commercialize violations of the law," while the House bill makes no distinction in that behalf.

Under the law as it now is, first offenders shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned not exceeding six months; and second and subsequent offenders thereunder shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $2,000 and be imprisoned for not less than one month nor more than five years.

Under the Senate bill now under consideration, first offenders shall be fined in any amount not exceeding $10,000 or imprisoned not exceeding five years, or both; second and subsequent offenders thereunder shall be fined in any amount not less than $200 nor more than $10,000 and be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than five years, or both.

Under the House bill first offenders may be fined in any sum not exceeding $10,000 or imprisoned not exceeding five years, or both.

But, be that as it may, I am of the opinion that it will not be claimed that any substantial hearing was had upon either the Senate or House bill. This conclusion is inevitable from the reports submitted. I am advised that heretofore reports upon legislative measures by committees having them in charge contain brief statements of the purposes and objects of the proposed measure, a synopsis of the evidence produced at the hearing, and the conclusion of the committee as to the effect of the bill, if enacted into law.

The body of the report of the House Judiciary Committee accompanying the Senate bill consists of three and one-half lines only and is in the following language:

> The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill S. 2901, after consideration reports the same favorably and recommends that the bill do pass.

Clearly this report is without value and can hardly be said to constitute the basis for intelligent legislation.

The body of the report accompanying the House bill (H. R. 9588) is almost as valueless, and is as follows:

> Mrs. Willebrandt, Assistant United States Attorney, representing the Department of Justice, spoke in favor of the passage of this bill. She testified in brief that in big cities and in large cases where the Volstead Act has been violated that the judges complain that the maximum penalty was too low; that if they could have the discretion, like that given by this bill, to impose the maximum sentence in certain cases against big offenders, they could stop the sale of intoxicating liquor to a greater extent than they can do now, as it is very difficult to convict of conspiracy, but the individual could be convicted and if the maximum penalty was large enough and heavy enough the violators might be driven out of the business.
> The trouble at the present time is with the big sellers and the big importers, and not the small bootleggers; that under the present law the maximum penalty for a first offense is too small, and in practice there is no second offense because the defendant would not be before the same court a second time, as this shift from one to another makes all offenses the first.
> Under this bill the big offender could be given the maximum penalty if necessary and driven out of the business, and there would be no second offense, and therefore the Department of Justice very much desires, in the interest of better enforcement of the law, that this bill pass. Your committee therefore recommends, after due consideration, that the bill receive a passage.

Now, what is the gist of this report and Mrs. Willebrandt's testimony upon which the report is based?

Clearly it is her declaration therein that "the trouble at the present time is with the big sellers and the big importers and not the small bootlegger." If so, then why not expressly limit these drastic punishments to the big sellers and big importers and big manufacturers and leave those classes with which the department and the courts are having no trouble subject to the present laws? According to Mrs. Willebrandt's own testimony, the old law is sufficient in that behalf.

Moreover, it is evident from this report that Mrs. Willebrandt and the judges whom she quotes are not so anxious to secure a more drastic punishment as they are to find an easier way in which to convict. This conclusion is inevitable when we bear in mind that under the law as it now is, second offenders, which would necessarily include "the big sellers" and "the big importers," could be imprisoned for five years and fined $2,000 under the prohibition law, and likewise imprisoned upon conviction for conspiracy to violate the prohibition laws. But Mrs. Willebrandt says that she and the judges find it difficult to convict for conspiracy.

From my experience of many years as a prosecutor in criminal cases, I doubt the soundness of such conclusion. On the contrary, conspiracy is easily charged and readily proven, for prima facie evidence of the conspiracy opens the door for the admission of almost unlimited evidence that in other cases would be mere hearsay.

I am of the opinion that the difficulty to convict, of which complaint is made, is not due to the character of procedure, but is due to the absurdity of the punishment that must follow a conviction of conspiracy; and if courts in the enforcement of this new law follow the suggestions of Mrs. Willebrandt, as outlined in this report, and juries understand that, in any particular trial for the violation of the Volstead Act the court will impose a heavy fine and years of imprisonment, the same difficulty will be met in getting convictions under this new law as under the conspiracy act.

It would, therefore, seem that the time has arrived when America's lawmakers should profit by the experience of the Anglo-Saxon race.

At about the time the colonists were settling in this country there existed in the mother country some 200 drastic laws for the violation of which the death penalty was prescribed.

Many of these crimes were of a petty nature. Among them was one that prescribed the penalty of death for the theft of anything of the value of 6 pence or more. Under this drastic law hundreds of men, many women, and some children were executed for stealing a loaf of bread.

Great masses of the people objected to and protested against these inhuman laws, but the officers of the law, including the courts, as was their duty, enforced the law as best they could. However, something eventually happened that will always happen among free men when tyranny becomes so oppressive that it shocks the common conscience of humanity. The common sense of the Anglo-Saxon jurors came to the rescue of the race and refused to convict of an offense of such insignificance with a penalty so severe.

In fact, the experience of thousands of years of lawmaking and law enforcement conclusively proves that no criminal law is enforcible unless some one is injured by its violation; and juries refuse to convict when they know that the punishment that will follow is out of all proportion to the offense committed.

And, my fellow Congressmen, I warn you, and my country, that if and when it becomes a common practice to send men and women to imprisonment for years for the violation of such laws as the Volstead Act, which makes crimes out of the doing of things in which there is not the slightest element of immorality, and which only yesterday were unattended by any criminality, we are returning to practices of the Dark Ages; and we will soon find that the conscience of our level-headed jurors will rebel against the cruelties of such laws and refuse to convict.

What the United States of America most needs to-day are Patrick Henrys who have the courage to welcome death, if needs be, to maintain and protect the rights of men as set forth in the bill of rights; Henry Clays who recognize the necessity of careful study of all proposed measures and the embodiment into every law the composite judgment of lawmakers, and who would rather be right than to hold the highest office within the gift of the people; men like Andrew Jackson, willing to battle without regard to the obstacles in his way to restore and preserve the fundamental principles upon which our Government was established; men like Grover Cleveland and Theodore Roosevelt, willing and ever ready to take a stand upon matters of public concern and tell it to the world.

In our courts and in the administration of justice we need men like Andrew Hamilton, who defended the publisher Zender for alleged libel of the colonial Governor of New York, and undertook at the trial to prove as a defense to the charge the truth of the alleged libel. Under the law as it then existed the truth of a publication against a public official was no defense to the charge of libel. Time after time Hamilton, in argument, said in substance to the jurors that—

> His honor upon the bench will tell you, gentlemen of the jury, that the truth of this publication is no defense against the charge that it is libelous, and I admit that that is the law; but I say to you, gentlemen of the jury, that it ought not to be the law, and it will not long remain the law among free men.

And what did that jury do? It did that which all juries will do when they know that the law is absurd, and that that which is sought to be done in the name of the law is wrong.

The reward of Andrew Hamilton for this great service to mankind was the writing into most all of the constitutions of the States the guaranty of freedom of speech and press and the principle that in suits for libel the jury shall, under the direction of the court, be judges of the law as well as the facts.

It is important that when Congress legislates it should do so intelligently and according to the plan upon which our Government was founded. Our Government is based upon the principle that it is a government by laws, not a government by men. In other words, the law is made master and those who administer the law are its servants.

Therefore, always heretofore in enacting laws in which there was a clear distinction as to the nature and character of the crime facts, the classes of crimes were segregated and appropriate minimum and maximum punishments prescribed for the violation of each class, and in pronouncing sentence the courts had power to and could exercise a reasonable discretion. But in this proposed measure under consideration that wholesome principle is wholly disregarded, and the range of discretion lodged in the courts is in no wise definitely controlled by the crime facts but is dependent upon the bent of mind, caprice, and prejudices of the trial judge.

Do you think that judges on the Federal bench are any different from human being not on the bench? The character of the judge, his mental attitude, his prejudices, his way of looking at things are no different after he has put on his robes of office than they were before.

Now, what will be the practical effect of this law wherein the discretion of the judge is so unlimited? Is it not almost certain that those judges that feel that the doing of the things prohibited by the Volstead Act are grave and serious offenses, as most prohibitionists do, will impose drastic sentences? And is it not equally certain that those judges who feel that the prohibition laws are unwise and that the doing of those things prohibited by the Volstead Act are free from immorality, and have injured no one, will accordingly impose light sentences? I have no doubt that such inequality of administration of these laws will follow the enactment of this bill.

In enacting this measure we are disregarding and departing from the fundamental principles upon which our Government is established. We are transforming our Government into a government by men instead of preserving it as a government by law, and I am unwilling to join in throwing away these fundamental safeguards.

We are taking a long step in the direction of tyranny, and it is a doctrine in keeping therewith when Members of this House are condemned and vilified because they have the temerity to speak out boldly in condemnation of a law or a provision of the Constitution.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOORE] is amazed at the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] when, on the floor of this House, he said, "I am against the eighteenth amendment. * * * I abhor it. I despise it. I have no respect for it," and said of the prohibition act, "I would not counsel anybody to even respect the law."

Why should the gentleman from Ohio be amazed? These words are neither treasonable, unpatriotic, nor unwise. On the contrary, they are perfectly consistent with the duty of any citizen under our form of Government. Even the Declaration of Independence declares that it is the inherent right of the people to govern themselves as they will and to alter or abolish their form of government whenever they may deem it necessary. This principle is also recognized in the Constitution, and the only restriction in that behalf is that in making any change the procedure prescribed therefor, in the instrument creating government must be followed.

In an autocratic or despotic government there is no fundamental instrument creating it, and the right of revolution is always inherent.

In a constitutional democracy the constitution and laws prescribe the course to be pursued, and governmental officers are servants of those laws and can lawfully exercise only the power invested in them by such laws, and when they adhere to those laws and perform the acts of government in the manner prescribed therefor revolution has no place therein. The right to abolish constitutions, to amend them, to repeal and enact new laws is the substitute for revolution.

One can not love and respect a law or a provision of the Constitution if it has not therein elements that appeal to his conscience, though he may and should obey it as long as it is a part of the Constitution or other laws of the land.

One can not praise or respect a law and at the same time effect its repeal; and there is no higher duty resting upon a citizen than to put forth every effort to repeal what he believes to be bad laws and have good laws enacted in their place. This applies to the provisions of the Constitution and to the Constitution itself, as well as to statutory laws.

Respect for a master, whether that master is a constitution, a person, or a statutory law, is not essential to obedience thereto. One may obey the direction of a king or implicitly conform to the mandate of a tyrant and have no respect for either. Duty, however, compels him to observe and obey.

I defy any prohibitionist to be a more sincere advocate of the observance of all laws and the creation of real temperance than I am. But I know full well that many laws can not, and should not, be respected but should be repealed; and that we can not have temperance and prohibition in the same place at the same time; where one is the other can not be. I am, therefore, for temperance and against prohibition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I quite agree with the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey that you can not successfully enforce any statute by making the penalties severer. Prohibition enforcement has notoriously failed. Tightening up penalties will not help. You would be turning backward the hands of the clock of jurisprudence if you tried to do that. You have just heard of two hundred-odd offenses punished by death in England in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. England soon learned that you could not, by capital punishment, weed out petty larceny, or poaching on a nobleman's estate, or stealing a loaf of bread. We in America have yet to learn that by making a punishment too severe you are not going to bring about law enforcement.

The distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Senator BINGHAM, made some very pertinent remarks on the subject which I take the liberty of repeating here:

> The experience of our race has been that when we apply too drastic punishment for crimes which are not universally recognized as heinous offenses, such as murder, rape, attacks with intent to kill, and matters of that kind, which have been crimes since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and whenever we attempt to punish crimes other than those by excessive penalties we do not succeed in achieving our object. Consequently, to change the law at the present time and make it possible for an ardent judge, acting under the pressure of public opinion, to impose a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for five years in the penitentiary for the first offense is, in my opinion, not likely to produce the effect desired by the proponents of the measure.
> We have at the present time certain States, as has been pointed out, where the penalties are exceedingly drastic. I have read in the newspapers, and I have not seen it contradicted, that, for instance, in the State of Michigan for the fourth offense of having in one's possession any illicit liquor one may be imprisoned for life. Surely nothing in our day and generation would be tolerated any more severe than that. Yet I do not find any evidence whatever that there is more observance of law in Michigan than in any neighboring State; in fact, some of the States where the law is very much more lenient than that have a better record for observance of the law than exists in the States where the penalty is very, very severe.
> Only yesterday I heard of a case in a college town in Michigan—I need not mention any names—where at a recent dance participated in by the college fraternities the reports disclosed the existence of a very large amount of liquor being used in an extremely intemperate manner. In other words, enabling a judge to inflict a very severe penalty has not resulted in that State, or in any others similarly located, in increasing observance of law.

The courts are already clogged with prohibition violators. This bill will increase the congestion. Faced with a possible 5-year penalty, all defendants will demand jury trials. There will be no pleas of guilty entered. Procedure will grow complicated. Jury trials are costly and usually long drawn out. It will take scores and scores of judges to keep abreast of the work of clearing the crowded calendars.

Why ask for greater penalties? There are plenty of weapons in the prohibition arsenal now.

The United States attorneys can invoke the old internal revenue laws providing for fines and imprisonments, as well as section 37, Criminal Code, providing for violations for conspiracy against the United States. The latter carries severe penalties. Or enforcement officers can go into the State courts and obtain convictions under the State laws. Is that not enough? I incline to the view that the prohibitionists, realizing the breakdown of enforcement and fearing to admit defeat, simply use the agitation for increased penalties as a sort of stalking horse, to hide their real motive, namely, prohibition—at whatever cost, at whatever hazard.

For that reason and for the additional reason that this bill fails to distinguish between flagrant violations and casual violations, I must of necessity oppose it. You place in the same category the beardless youth or an immature girl at a party in the same class with the vile refiner of denatured alcohol. You do not distinguish between the two. You do not define any degrees of criminalty. The judge may treat all alike. That is barbarous. You say that the judge in his discretion may distinguish between the casual or slight violator and the habitual offender, but I defy anyone in this Chamber to give a legal definition of a casual violator. Give me a legal definition of an habitual offender. How many times must a man commit a crime to become an habitual offender? You leave all that to the judge's imagination. There is nothing known in jurisprudence as to what a casual, slight violation is. The judges are given no guide as to what they shall or shall not do. You have placed a legal monstrosity in the bill. Gentlemen of the distinguished Judiciary Committee, it is meaningless. I never knew yet of a statute in the whole history of American civil or criminal law where you direct that the court shall make this kind of a distinction without telling the court what the distinction is. You have cowardly, I should say, passed the buck to the district court. You make the judges of that court legislate and make them do that which you ought to do. You do not tell them definitely what you mean, and for that reason I am opposed to this bill.

By making it possible to send a violator to jail for five years you place a prohibition violation upon a parity with a violation of the white slave law. Surely transporting a woman for purposes of prostitution or debauchery is a more serious offense than making home brew or carrying a half-pint flask of whisky, yet by section 398, title 18, Code of United States trafficking in white slavery incurs a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years. By section 82, Criminal Code, the crime of shanghaiing sailors incurs a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Enslaving on board ship, by section 426, title 18, Criminal Code, incurs a fine of not more than $10,000 and imprisonment of not more than four years.

Mr. W. C. Gilbert has made for me a tabulation of penalties of five years' imprisonment or $10,000 fine or over. I herewith give you the result of his labors, as proof that enlarging prohibition penalties to $10,000 or five years, or both, practically places prohibition violation in the category of a felony. [Applause.]

The matter referred to is as follows:

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, there is nothing strange in the opponents of prohibition standing on the floor of Congress and fighting the rule and the bill under consideration. They have resisted and fought every measure Congress has ever considered for the enforcement of prohibition. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], during his remarks, stated that if we pass this bill it can not be enforced. Then a few moments later the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] gave as one of her reasons for opposing the bill was that if enacted into law we would have to build more prisons in order to confine thousands who would be found guilty of violating the act. My good friend from New York [Mr. BOYLAN], in opposing the bill, spoke about the crowded conditions in the Atlanta Penitentiary. I was a member of the special committee of Congress which Mr. BOYLAN mentioned as investigating the Atlanta prison last November. While it is true that a great many of the inmates of this institution were convicted of violation of the prohibition law, the fact remains that 35 per cent of the inmates of this prison were sentenced for violation of the narcotic laws. Next on the list were those found guilty of violating the Dyer Act, relating to the theft of automobiles, and prohibition came third. I call attention to this in order to show that violators of the prohibition laws do not constitute the greatest number of commitments to our Federal prisons.

The gentleman from New York, in a sneering way, spoke about the hypocrisy of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, and he stated that nobody wanted it and that its enforcement was impossible. The gentleman may speak for his own district in New York City, but, on the other hand, however, he does not speak for or represent millions of law-abiding, respectable citizens of our country who are in favor of prohibition and want to see it enforced. [Applause.] When the gentleman from New York states that the people of our country do not want prohibition and its enforcement, may I remind him that during the national political campaign last November one of the candidates for the office of President of the United States carried the prohibition fight right to the people. I do not doubt the sincerity of his convictions on this question. He traveled over the country standing on the platform as being opposed to prohibition and for the repeal of the Volstead Act. But when the votes were counted we find this candidate carrying only 8 out of the 48 States of the Union. [Applause.] To my mind the vote last November was conclusive evidence that an overwhelming majority of the people of our country are in favor of prohibition and its enforcement.

What was probably the greatest, bloody, diabolical crime that was ever committed in our country took place in the city of Chicago about two weeks ago. Seven men were caught like rats in a trap, with no chance to defend themselves, and shot down in cold blood by a low criminal band of rum runners and violators of the prohibition laws. Yet when we to-day consider and attempt to pass a bill which might put a stop to some of the rum-running activities of these law violators, we find strong opposition fighting legislation of this character. The eighteenth amendment is part of the fundamental law of our land, and as such it should be rigidly enforced. I believe the time has come when we must put more drastic laws on our statute books for the enforcement of the Volstead Act. I shall vote for the rule and the bill and trust it will be passed by a large majority. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill is an amendment to the national prohibition act and provides that the penalty for conviction or violating what is commonly termed the Volstead Act is increased from a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding six months for the first offense to a fine not exceeding $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both. The exact language is "the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both." The proviso relative to the intent of Congress means absolutely nothing, and there is not a man in Congress who does not know it.

There is nothing mandatory in the act to compel the judges to recognize the intent of Congress. Unless it is specifically stated that casual or slight violators are not to be subject to the penalties the court will be perfectly within its right to administer the maximum punishment if it so desires.

With every penitentiary in the United States and practically all the city and county jails overpopulated the Congress is rushing consideration as though a great emergency existed of a bill making it a felony to carry a flask upon the hip, or to even make a glass of beer. The bill has passed the Senate, and if favorable action is taken here to-day it will go to the President for his signature.

Making a glass of beer is a violation of the Volstead Act; making wine or cider with an alcoholic content of more than one-half of 1 per cent is likewise a violation of the Volstead Act. If the judge so desires, under the terms of this bill, he can send the housewife who makes beer for her husband or wine for her family to the penitentiary for five years. The college boy who forgets himself after the home team has won a great struggle and in his enthusiasm carries a small bottle of whisky or gin on his person can be branded a felon and sent away to a Federal penitentiary for five years; the business man who goes to play golf and takes a flask along to use when he reaches the nineteenth hole, finds himself in a similar position if apprehended.

Mark you, this law does not apply only to the habitual violator, but it applies to the first offender even though beer, wine, or whisky is handled for personal use, be it man, woman, or child.

Further, it provides the same penalties for each such offense. If a man sells five drinks of whisky he can be sent to the penitentiary for 25 years and fined $50,000.

Mr. Speaker, if everyone who violates the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and the Volstead Act was apprehended to-morrow you could not secure a quorum in any legislative body, National or State, the executive branches of the Government and States would be unable to function, the wheels in the great industrial establishments would cease to revolve, mercantile establishments would be required to close their doors as clerks would not be available, shoe and clothing factories would shut down and the Nation would face starvation, as there would not be sufficient man power left on the farms to raise the necessities of life. Should you turn the office buildings of the country into jails there would not be sufficient room to house the prisoners. The country would be paralyzed.

This is not idle talk, but plain truth. Still, you would place on the statute books a law considered by a great committee of the House where, when the hearing was held, no publicity being given the matter, only two persons—a Member of Congress and Mrs. Mabel Willebrandt—appeared as witnesses.

The committee ignored the petition signed by numerous Members of the House requesting that a public hearing be held, considered the Senate bill Monday morning for less than one and one-half hours, ordered the chairman to report it, and further asked that he secure a special rule for immediate consideration.

Why this action? For no other reason but that the professional dry leaders cracked the whip and said, "Our will must be done." They demand passage of the bill before adjournment. When this bill is voted upon you will witness a different scene than that which presented itself Monday. It will afford those who declined to stand hitched Monday an opportunity to rehabilitate themselves, as they accused others of doing in advocating the $24,000,000 amendment. They will want to get back in the good graces of the dry organizations and this time will respond to the crack of the whip.

I wonder if a promise was made to those drys who opposed the $24,000,000 that this opportunity for rehabilitation would come if they assisted in defeating the amendment?

Whether it was or not, those seeking rehabilitation on both the Republican and Democratic sides will this time be united and use the steam roller in passing the bill making it a felony to make or have in one's possession a bottle of beer or a flask of whisky, and subject the guilty one if apprehended to a sentence of five years in the penitentiary if the judge so disposes.

When the official charged with administration declares he would not know what to do with the money if it was made available I certainly did not vote to waste $24,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, nor will I vote for a bill that would give a judge the power to send a man, woman, or child to the penitentiary for five years for making a bottle of beer or carrying a flask of whisky in his pocket.

Mr. Speaker, no opportunity was given to Members to express their views when the $24,000,000 amendment was pending.

I do not approve of limited debate when questions of vast importance to the Nation are before the House. Members should have reasonable time to present arguments in behalf of their convictions. Although opposed to the motion it seems to me a thorough discussion would have been beneficial to the country. I fully realize that certain Members found themselves in a most embarrassing position and wanted to dispose of the question, even without debate if possible, taking the position that the least said the better.

However, the action of the House in voting down the $24,000,000 additional for the enforcement of prohibition will be commended by reasonable prohibitionists as well as those opposed to the eighteenth amendment and Volstead law.

For once I am willing to commend the prohibitionists, at least those in the House who voted against the effort to squander $24,000,000 of the people's money. In my opinion there was no sound reason for advancing this proposal.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] indicated in his remarks Saturday evening that the Democratic side was practically unanimous in its support of the amendment. He has but to view the roll call to learn that there were many Democrats in the House who refused to respond to the demand of professional organizations.

If, as has been openly charged, some Members of Congress desired to rehabilitate themselves among their constituents, surely they should be more thoughtful of the public's purse than to do so at the expense of the taxpayers of the country.

I heard it stated numerous times that a vote on the amendment would put the Republicans in the hole. On the contrary, the vote strengthened them, because it met with the approval of every right-thinking citizen, wet and dry alike.

Members who voted for this amendment should give some thought as to where this money they would appropriate, which the administration says could not be properly used, comes from. Only a very small part comes from their section of the country. It is in the great cities of the country that the large portion of taxes is collected. The cities are now overrun with prohibition agents, themselves violating the Constitution almost daily by unlawful searches and seizures.

I challenge any dry Member to show where he has at any time called the attention of the prohibition administrator to violations of the law in his own community and received a reply that the appropriation was not sufficient to enable the sending of dry agents into that territory. If those who voted for the $24,000,000 appropriation will go to the commissioner and appeal for enforcement officers for their community, giving the facts to the administrator, I am sure he will respond and send agents into the districts of such Representatives with instructions to see that all violators are brought into court.

It is not the way of the drys to urge enforcement in their own localities; they are satisfied to have nine-tenths of the enforcement officers stationed in the large cities. They do not appeal for help in cleaning up their own States.

During debate a Member read of the condition of the courts, naming the various States where the docket was congested. Among those States was Georgia, a so-called dry State, from whence the man comes who originally proposed this amendment.

Recently I asked a real prohibitionist from my State, a Member of this House, if prohibition agents ever visited his district. He admitted they did not, but since then one did visit the largest town in his district. What did he do? There were two druggists in the town, the stores being within a few feet of each other, one run by a Democrat and the other by a Republican. The Democrat was raided but the Republican was not molested. As far as could be learned no effort was made to see if the Republican was violating the law. I am not saying that he was, but I simply say that this agent, from all reports, did not attempt to find out.

A committee of Congress has just been told by the "chief snooper" of the unofficial law enforcers of the District of Columbia that there are 5,000 speak-easies in Washington, the Nation's Capital. He told the committee that his "snoopers" had discovered that there were whole blocks where liquor could be bought at each house. He insisted the telephone company had a separate private exchange where all connections with bootleggers and gamblers were made, and that the telephones were unlisted. Further, that the telephone company declined to give the location of unlisted telephones to the police.

The manager of the telephone company explained that now, as before prohibition, many residents of large cities insist that their telephones not be listed, as they did not desire to be disturbed at home. This included business and professional men as well as many Members of Congress. Still this unofficial law-enforcing organization would lead you to believe that all such telephones are connected with homes of bootleggers and gamblers.

I do not doubt that there are 5,000 homes in Washington where either whisky, wine, or beer will be found. In fact, the number probably is closer to 25,000, but it is there for personal use of the occupants of the home not for sale.

If the prohibitionists of the country would make a real survey of the present-day situation, they will find that by the adoption of the eighteenth amendment and the enactment of the Volstead law they have caused liquor, beer, and wine to find its way into homes where it had never entered prior to prohibition days.

So long as corn, hops, barley, rice, sugar, and fruit are available you will have intoxicating drinks in this country.

The day will never come when products that go into the making of whisky, brandy, gin, beer, wine, and cider are not to be had, still you would enact a bill that would give a judge the power to send the housewife who makes a glass of beer for her husband who toils before the hot furnace throughout the day to the penitentiary for five years.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON].

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a moment ago it was charged by gentlemen in opposition to the bill that it had not received consideration, and sport was made of the report by the Judiciary Committee on this bill.

Let me call to the attention of the House for the sake of the RECORD the fact that I hold in my hand the full hearings before the Judiciary Committee on the contents of this bill. So there was no need of a lengthy comment or report, because the House bill has been reported favorably from the committee and is now on the calendar of the House.

Now, just a word as to what this bill does. It unties the hands of the judge, so that he may mete out justice to a man not simply because he is a first or second or third offender but because he is an extreme offender of the law. That is all it does. It unties his hands and allows him to mete out justice according to the offense, and there is nothing else in the proposed law. The Department of Justice, which asks for this legislation, can be safely followed.

It ought to have the support of every man and woman of this House who believes in adequate law enforcement.

But let me leave this thought with you:

He who feels the halter draw,
Ne'er is in favor of the law.

[Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the situation, if we should adjourn now, this will be the unfinished business to-morrow after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It will then be in order for some gentleman to move that we go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the measure.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is the best plan to follow, and the bill will be called to-morrow immediately after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes to-morrow after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and following the address of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORTON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

RETIREMENT OF THE DISABLED IN THE FORMER LIFE-SAVING SERVICE

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the life-saving retirement measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 16656, which passed the House February 18, 1929, and which passed the Senate February 25, 1929, provides that any individual who served in the former Life Saving Service of the United States as a keeper or surfman, and who on account of being so disabled by reason of a wound or injury received or disease contracted in such service in the line of duty as to unfit him for the performance of duty and was continued upon the rolls of the service for an aggregate period of one year or more under the provisions of section 7 of the act entitled, "An act to promote the efficiency of the Life Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck," approved May 4, 1882, and who ceased to be a member of such service on account of such disability, which disability still continues at the time of the enactment of this act, shall, upon making due proof of such facts in accordance with such rules and regulations as to the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be entitled to retired pay from the date of the enactment of this act at the rate of 75 per cent of the pay he was receiving at the time of his separation from such service.

Section 7 of the act of May 4, 1882, to which reference has been made, was the only provision of law in the former Live Saving Service for taking care of those persons in that service who were disabled by reason of any wound or injury received or disease contracted in the service in the line of duty as to unfit them for the performance of duty. The beneficiaries under this proposed new legislation will be those persons of the former Life Saving Service contemplated by the bill who could not be brought within the purview of the act of January 28, 1915, creating the Coast Guard by combining therein the former Life Saving Service and the former Revenue Cutter Service. Measures for the relief of these persons were proposed in Congress shortly after the creation of the Coast Guard in 1915, and have continued ever since without success. We are to be congratulated that we are so near our goal in this matter. This bill touches the lives of a considerable number of persons in all sections of the country—the Atlantic coast, the Gulf coast, the Pacific coast, and the Great Lakes—and will, if signed by the President, at last render justice. There are numbers of distressing cases that it will relieve. I can best refer you to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury addressed to the chairman Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives, under date of February 10, 1928, in which the situation is fully discussed. It can not be stated definitely at this time just how many persons of the former Life Saving Service will be entitled to the relief provided by this bill. I understand that at the time the last survey was made there would be about 312 persons. Doubtless, since this survey some of these have passed to the great beyond, for many of them had passed their three score and ten at that time. Year upon year they will in the natural order of things be passing away. It is a measure with a constantly decreasing expense and before many years will be entirely obliterated. It is a measure which if passed into the law of the land will bring relief from penury and poverty and distress in many homes throughout the country. It is a measure which will give indisputable proof to the fact that the Government is not ungrateful and that it remembers, even at this late day, the service that the beneficiaries have performed in the name of humanity. It is a measure which recognizes the noblest of all causes—that of the saving of human life—and I know myself that thanksgivings will arise from many humble, happy homes when the word goes forth that this measure is a part of the law of the country. I have been brought into intimate contact with these life-saving men, and I know their sturdy qualities, I know of their devotion to duty, I know of their loyalty, and I know and the world knows the great service they render in saving lives and marine property from the perils of the sea. These old worn-out warriors of the surf who will come within the provisions of this measure were in the harness in the days when service was particularly hard, hazardous, and laborious, and before the introduction of present-day refinements, both as to boat equipment and as to living accommodations on the beaches. Their lives were spent in desolation, in exposure, in hardships, and in separation from the world. Speaking for myself, I know of no legislation that appeals stronger to our better natures, to our human side, than this. I am sure it will have the benediction of our coast people.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at this point an amendment which I propose to offer to-morrow to the bill that has been under consideration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

In line 9, page 1, after the words "shall be," strike out all the language down to the word "Provided," in line 10, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "after the first offense for a casual or slight violation of said law a fine not to exceed $2,000 or imprisonment not to exceed one year, and for habitual sales, or transportation, importation or exportation, or illegal possession, indicating a commercialized business, a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years or both."

REPORT OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE BUILDING COMMISSION

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 331

Resolved, That the report of the Foreign Service Building Commission transmitted to Congress on January 28, 1929, pursuant to the act entitled "An act for the acquisition of buildings and grounds in foreign countries for the use of the Government of the United States of America," approved May 7, 1926, be printed with illustrations as a House document.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE RULES AND MANUAL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I present another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 344

Resolved, That the House Rules and Manual of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-first Congress be printed as a House document, and that 2,500 copies be printed and bound for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SNELL. Is this the usual number that is printed?

Mr. BEERS. That is the usual print.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed this is the usual number.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRACTICES IN CERTAIN BUREAUS

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing certain remarks of my own in respect of certain practices in the departments.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, there has come to my knowledge through personal experience the existence of a dangerous practice in some of the bureaus of the Government that will soon grow into a settled policy unless checked.

I have found many instances when a Representative tries to help a constituent who comes in good faith for assistance that not only is a legitimate request turned down but the employee is punished for asking the help of a Member of Congress.

Some narrow-minded bureaucrat sets himself up as a censor over our actions and interferes in the legitimate exercise of the duties of our office.

I have been told that at the District Building an order has been issued that no one shall ask for any help of any kind at the Capitol without the consent of the commissioners. I am aware that the commissioners have done things they ought not to have done and have failed to do things they ought to have done, but I do not believe they have made such a ridiculous and questionable ruling.

I have been told of instances when chief clerks, after defeating a claimant for reclassification before the board, under the law, openly boasted to fellow employees of their success in turning down Congressmen who had interceded for constituents.

Heads of departments come to us for every cent they are entitled to expend. How do they expect that Congress will accept their requests through the Budget in a spirit of cooperation if they permit these little men, temporarily clothed with power, to treat Members of Congress with contempt?

The time has arrived when Members of this body must assert themselves and put an end to this activity of bureaucracy that, in general, is weakening the vital principles upon which the Nation was founded.

As for myself, I give notice right now if they interfere further in the performance of my duties as a Representative of the people of my district, or try to discipline any of my constituents for asking help, I will expose them by name, hold them up to public ridicule and contempt, and shall not rest until such enemies of representative government are driven out of the public service.

A NEW CRUISER "BROOKLYN"

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the cruiser situation and to insert an editorial from the Brooklyn Standard-Union on why one of the cruisers should be called the Brooklyn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following editorial from the Brooklyn Standard-Union on why one of the cruisers should be called the Brooklyn:

A NEW CRUISER "BROOKLYN"

If the energetic campaign of the friends of the Brooklyn Navy Yard succeeds, as now seems most likely, 2 of the 15 new auxiliary cruisers will be built here. Why not have one of them named the Brooklyn? The Standard-Union makes the suggestion in the belief that it is appropriate and in the hope that it will be effectively seconded both here and in Washington.

The career of the old cruiser Brooklyn is a brilliant chapter in our naval history. When it was launched, the city that has since evolved into the Borough of Brooklyn had a civic celebration. Its citizens, naming as their spokesman the late Mr. William Berri, who was then president and publisher of this newspaper, turned over to Capt. Francis Cook a costly silver service, to be carried in the wardroom in token of gratitude for the recognition. The community followed eagerly the exploits of its cruiser in the Spanish-American War. Flying the flag of Commodore Winfield Scott Schley, the Brooklyn helped to bottle up Admiral Cervera in Santiago Bay, and it commanded and led the chase in the battle of the 3d of July that wiped out Spain as a sea power.

The Brooklyn ended its active days only a few years ago, and since its passing this great metropolis has been without a naval namesake. There can be no cruiser New York, for this State is represented in the battleship squadron. Salt Lake City, Pensacola, Memphis, Richmond, Trenton all are among the cities remembered in the roll of post-war treaty cruisers. Brooklyn deserves a parallel recognition. Brooklyn would like to adopt a new warship as it adopted that gallant old sea fighter that served its country so well in peace and in war for 30 years.

SHIP CANAL ACROSS GEORGIA AND FLORIDA

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a proposed canal across south Georgia and northern Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, the time is at hand, I believe, for an unprecedented development of our inland waterways. Enough time has elapsed since the World War for our Nation to have readjusted itself to the new economic strain occasioned by the war and for our Government to now undertake some really worth-while internal improvements.

The time is ripe for a more complete development of our inland waterways and for the completion of a barge line along an inland passage near the coast from Texas, by the way of the mouth of the Mississippi River to some point on the Gulf Coast of Florida, thence across the northern part of Florida and the southern part of Georgia to the Atlantic coast of Georgia, and thence to the New England States. Many other internal improvements should and no doubt will receive due attention, but I am especially anxious about the proposed canal across south Georgia and north Florida.

I am of the opinion that the next few Congresses will write an important chapter in the history of our Nation and that that chapter will be one of splendid internal improvements, not of any one section but for the whole Nation.

The improvements are muchly needed; the time is here for action; there is more brotherly love between all the sections than ever since the Civil War; the President who takes charge on next Monday is more nearly the President of the whole people than any other man since our beloved first President. No one section nor group of sections elected Mr. Hoover. As never before since George Washington, our new President was elected by the whole United States and, therefore, in the fullest sense, is the President of the whole people. He is truly of the Nation.

Mr. Hoover's vision will not be confined to any one section, but his horizon will be coextensive with the boundaries of our beloved Nation.

President Hoover is the first civil engineer since George Washington to enter the White House, and for this additional reason, like the Father of our Country, will give his valuable support to worth-while internal improvements.

For all these reasons, I am most hopeful that legislation will be enacted in the very near future, providing for the inauguration of a most splendid canal, drainage, irrigation, and inland transportation program.

Quite naturally I am most anxious about some very muchly needed improvements in my district. And I may say in passing that I had faith in Mr. Hoover as an ardent friend of our inland waterways before he was elected President or even nominated by the Republican Party.

I quote from my remarks of May 19, 1928, as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, page 9232, as follows:

I have sought for 10 years to get a line up to pass a bill to construct the St. Marys-St. Marks canal. Nothing like this could be put over for the South in face of the so-called Coolidge economy program. If the Democrats win this year, I believe this canal can be built. If the Republicans win, with Hoover the civil engineer, our chances will be good. I shall do my best in either event.

Mr. Hoover has been elected and on next Monday at noon will become our President, and it seems to me that the times are most propitious for the ushering in of an era of genuine progress.

I am a Democrat and would truly like to serve at least one term as a Member of Congress with the Democrats in power in both Houses and with a Democrat at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. I feel though that if Republican we must have, let him be such a man as has just been elected, a man who is of the whole Nation, and who loves and will serve the whole people. I am now anxious to help make my preelection prediction come true. I want to help pass a bill to construct a canal across south Georgia and north Florida.

All who have given serious thought to the proposition agree that in the near future a barge canal at least will be constructed across south Georgia and north Florida, connecting the waters of the Atlantic Ocean with those of the Gulf of Mexico. Many, many reasons have, from time to time, been urged for the building of this canal. Anyone who will stop to look at the map of this country will wonder why it has not been done long ago.

A barge canal is being linked up from the New England States to the mouth of the Mississippi. This canal will not follow the coast line entirely around Florida, but will be constructed across the country about where Florida peninsula makes off from the main body of the United States. In fact, the greatest missing link in this barge line is now from the Georgia coast at St. Marys, Ga., to St. Georges Sound at the mouth of the Apalachicola River in Florida. There is now a splendid inland barge line along the Georgia coast between the islands and the mainland. This is practically true all the way to Maine. A barge route can, with little expense, be constructed from St. Georges Sound, Fla., to the mouth of the Mississippi.

This barge line will never be built around Florida for two reasons. First, it is too far, and in the second place, it would cost too much. Most of the Florida coast is not protected by islands, and hence light craft would be easily destroyed by heavy winds.

Then, again, even if the barge line should be constructed only from the mouth of the Mississippi to a harbor on the Georgia coast, the canal would be very valuable for many reasons. This would in effect move the mouth of the Mississippi River from the Gulf of Mexico to the Atlantic Ocean and furnish a new outlet on the Atlantic Ocean for all the great Mississippi Valley.

There are numerous cogent reasons why this canal should be constructed, but at this time I shall name only a few and hasten on to the discussion of another phase of the proposition.

FREIGHT RATES

It is admitted by all who are at all familiar with the proposition that the construction of the proposed canal will greatly reduce freight rates not only on commodities hauled on the canal but also on all freights hauled by other means throughout a large portion of our country and especially in the section directly affected by this muchly shortened water route of transportation. An eminent authority on railway transportation once testified before a special committee of the New York Legislature that—

The Erie Canal regulates the freight rates on all the railroads east of the Mississippi River, not only on those whose tracks run parallel with the canal but upon those that run in an opposite direction.

The Erie Canal originally cost about $51,000,000, but it is proving a wonderful investment for the people of the country, as it is estimated that it pays for itself about every two years in freight reductions. If the Erie Canal does this, can we not expect a wonderful reduction in freight rates by the construction of a canal shortening the distance from the Mississippi to the Atlantic Ocean by at least 500 miles? Several years ago it was estimated that the proposed St. Marys-St. Marks canal could be constructed for barge use for approximately $7,000,000, or for about one-seventh of the original cost of the Erie Canal. This canal can be constructed for about one-half the cost of one battleship. The battleship is used for only a few years and then is considered as worthless and ofttimes serves only as a target to be sent to the bottom of the ocean in some experiment. In peace times the battleship is little more than a pleasure craft for the Navy, and in war times it may be sent to the bottom of the sea by a bomb from some one person in an airplane. The canal for which I am pleading would repay for itself every few years in cheaper freight rates for the producers and the consumers and, with reasonable repairs, would be one of our Nation's greatest assets. It would not last for only a few short years, but would endure as long as this old earth shall be the home of the human race.

BENEFITS NATIONAL IN SCOPE

The proposed canal would prove beneficial to the whole people of our country. It is part and parcel of the great transportation system of our Nation which is now being rapidly brought to perfection.

To my mind, it is the great missing link in our system of inland waterways. It has been neglected too long. It should be built and that speedily.

MILITARY VALUE

It has been urged only recently that enormous expenditures are proper for military reasons. We are continuously spending hundreds of millions for naval armament. There seems to be no way to prevent, at this time, these large expenditures for military reasons, and yet we know that the battleships and other military and naval construction at best can last for only a few years. If the proposed canal is constructed on a basis somewhat larger than would be necessary for barge purposes it would in time of war prove very valuable. It would seem that a canal from the Georgia coast on the Atlantic to St. Georges Sound on the Gulf, capable of floating the lighter-draft warships, torpedo boats, submarines, and so forth, would be of the utmost value to the United States Government, which, by opening up the almost continuous inland route on the Atlantic coast, could send from New England to Louisiana and Texas, promptly and safely, armaments and stores to meet emergencies, which could not venture upon the high seas floating a hostile fleet.

Not only would the canal route be safer but would be about 500 miles shorter. It has been estimated that the St. Marys-St. Marks canal can be constructed on a scale sufficiently large to be used for the naval and military purposes just mentioned, at a cost of about $50,000,000, or at the expenditure of about the cost of three battleships. It has even been estimated that this amount will construct the canal and make such improvements along the Atlantic, from Georgia to New England, as will be necessary to complete the route to New York and beyond.

If it had absolutely no value at all in peace times; the Government can not afford to not complete this inland waterway route by the construction of this canal. It is easy to visualize a situation when the very life of our Nation might depend on the speedy movement of light warcraft from the Atlantic to the Gulf.

DANGEROUS STRAITS OF FLORIDA

Not only will this canal very much shorten the distance of water transportation from the Gulf to the Atlantic, but it will save hundreds of millions of property now lost in the trip through the dangerous Florida Straits, between Florida and Cuba. There will likewise be an enormous saving in insurance premiums. The rate will be practically nothing through the canal, whereas the rate is very high around Florida.

CLIMATIC CONDITIONS

The canal will be through a section with a mild and healthful climate. Corn and many other farm products are very much injured by the heat in a haul around Florida. There would be no danger of corn overheating or sprouting while being transported through the proposed canal.

People engaged in the construction of the canal, as well as those engaged in transportation along the canal, will find a most splendid climate. This section is a paradise of sunshine in the winter, and in the summer time the sea breezes, first from the Atlantic and then from the Gulf, make south Georgia and Florida all that can be desired in a climatic way. Even the swamps and forests of south Georgia are most healthful. Lieut. Col. Q. A. Gilmore, United States Army, in 1880 completed a survey of the proposed canal from St. Marys to St. Marks, and in speaking of the healthy appearance of the people who live in and near the Okefenokee Swamp said:

There are no difficulties to be encountered of a climatic character in excavating a canal anywhere along the line of our surveys at any season of the year. Our parties were remarkably free from any injurious effects due to climate. Though in the swamp in midsummer, not an instance of sickness was recorded. The Okefenokee and contiguous swamps are among the most healthy portions of the country. The inhabitants—the Mixons, the Lees, and Chessers—all living within the limits of the Okefenokee, are as robust and healthy in appearance as persons from the highlands of Georgia. A physician is scarcely ever heard of in this section of country. I met many others on both the western and eastern borders of the swamp who live within its influence, and they all seemed to possess remarkedly good health and constitutions. They claim that they have no sickness from miasmatic influences. There would be, I am sure, no difficulties on account of a malarious climate in constructing a canal in all its parts during any season of the year.

TWELVE MONTHS' SERVICE

While the Canadian canals are frozen each year from four to five months, the canal through this southern section would be open the entire year. For this reason this route has a tremendous advantage over any route through the Great Lakes region. But as the country develops there is ample room for a more complete waterway development both north and south as well as east and west and in the great sections between.

FORMER SURVEYS

Several surveys have heretofore been made and some are being made now of some of the routes proposed by my bill, but none have given the entire territory the careful survey and study that I am now seeking. In fact, several recent river and harbor bills have authorized surveys that are helpful and which will be considered in connection with more extensive surveys in the future.

SEA-LEVEL CANAL

I am thoroughly convinced that a canal will be constructed from the Gulf to the Atlantic making unnecessary the long trip around the Florida Peninsula. I am very much interested in when and where the canal will be constructed and shall it be a sea-level canal large enough to carry the largest vessels or shall it be a barge canal? If it is to be a sea-level canal, it will not be constructed through any part of my State unless St. Marys River is used as the eastern terminus. There are most excellent harbor facilities at St. Marys and Cumberland Sound close by. A sea-level canal probably will never be constructed from St. Marys to St. Marks. The distance is too far and it could so much more easily be constructed from St. Marys to some point on the Gulf coast farther east than St. Marks. Of course, a sea-level canal would cost much more money than a barge line and would have a very different effect on the country through which it passes. A sea-level canal through the Okefenokee Swamp, for instance, would help to drain the swamp whereas a barge canal would cause the flooding of the swamp. It is altogether likely that a barge canal can be built in the near future whereas a sea-level canal, being costly, can only be built after a long, hard fight. Very likely a barge canal will be built in the near future and then later also there will be constructed a sea-level canal.

A sea-level canal will be constructed either near the present proposed St. Marys-St. Marks canal route or to the south thereof. A barge line will be constructed either along the present proposed St. Marys-St. Marks route or to the north thereof.

BARGE CANAL

I am convinced that a sea-level canal will probably not be built in the near future and that a barge canal will probably be built in the next few years. For these reasons I am seeking a complete survey and study of the entire territory to be directly affected.

BILL PROVIDING FOR CERTAIN SURVEYS

On the 19th of this month I introduced H. R. 17178, which provides among other things:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such studies, surveys, investigations, and do such engineering as may be necessary, to determine the lands that should be embraced within the boundaries of a reclamation project, hereafter to be determined and definitely located, and to determine definitely, and recommend, the relative merits of the projects hereinafter described, and which of said proposed projects is the most practicable, feasible, and desirable, and the cost of the same.

It will be seen that I am seeking a thorough survey and study of the entire territory from Macon, Ga., to the proposed St. Marys-St. Marks canal route and between the Ockmulgee and Altamaha Rivers and the Chattahoochee and Apalachicola Rivers with a view of determining just where a barge line can be best constructed across Georgia and Florida, joining the waters of the Gulf of Mexico with the Atlantic Ocean.

DRAINAGE AND RECLAMATION

It is most essential that a special study be made of the drainage and reclamation problem in connection with the proposed canal. A barge line will operate as a drainage canal for certain areas and therefore he helpful in this respect. It will also be essential that water be impounded in reservoirs on the higher levels and that certain lands in this way will be flooded. If the canal should be constructed through the Okefenokee Swamp, that swamp would be utilized as a great reservoir, from which water would be drawn for canal uses upon the higher levels.

It will, therefore, be seen that the question of whether or not the Okefenokee Swamp should be drained or kept flooded enters into the problem. Most of the streams entering the Okefenokee Swamp are from the north, while the streams flowing out of the swamp drain toward the south. For this reason a canal running on the north side of the Okefenokee Swamp would cross the streams flowing into the swamp before they reach the swamp, and therefore divert much of that water from the swamp, thus helping to drain the swamp rather than flood it. To my mind, one of the strong arguments for a canal proceeding through Ware and Clinch Counties, at or near the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, is in the fact that numerous small streams flowing from the north will operate as feeders of the canal and yet prevent the flooding of a large area in and adjacent to the Okefenokee Swamp. It will be seen that a most careful study should be given to the drainage and irrigation problem in connection with any canal that may be built. This is a vital problem not only for the present but also for the future.

POWER DEVELOPMENT

My bill also provides that said survey shall include a study and report of power development possibilities that may be developed in connection with said projects and surveys. I feel that this study should be made, as considerable power may be developed in connection with dams that may be constructed for the impounding of water for use along the upper levels. Of course, some routes will prove more valuable than others in this respect.

SEVERAL ROUTES PROPOSED

By my bill I am proposing a survey and study of several routes, with the purpose of ascertaining definitely the best route after due consideration being given to all angles of the problem. My bill also provides for such other surveys as may be necessary to ascertain the very best route regardless of whether it is included in those proposed in the bill or not.

ST. MARYS-ST. MARKS ROUTE

This route is considered by many as being the most practical one, and I am free to confess it may prove to be such. It certainly has the advantage of being the shortest route from harbor facilities at St. Georges Sound, Fla., to harbor facilities on the Georgia coast.

I am inserting in the RECORD a map, prepared by Mr. H. McEwen, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, which illustrates the different routes proposed. There is indicated on this map a straight canal from St. Marys to St. Marks, such as would probably be followed if a sea-level canal should be constructed. It may be though that the St. Marys River would be used for a considerable distance to a point near Folkston, even if a sea-level canal should be constructed. It is certain that the St. Marys River would be used for this distance if a barge-line canal should be constructed from St. Marys to St. Marks. This route also has the advantage of passing through the Okefenokee swamp, thus making available a reservoir of water of sufficient capacity to supply the canal throughout the entire length, especially when this supply will be augmented by other streams crossed along the route. It is quite evident that the St. Marys River could not be utilized as a route beyond a point where it crosses the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad near Folkston, as the river from that point to the Okefenokee swamp is crooked and does not flow in the right direction and could not be made navigable without heavy expenditure. The Suwanee River would not be followed at all, as it is crooked and enters the Gulf too far to the south, leaving too much unprotected coast line between its mouth and sufficient harbor facilities at or near the mouth of the Apalachicola River. In fact, the Gilmore and other surveys plan a canal route through the Okefenokee swamp along a practically straight line to St. Marks, following a course a little to the north of that shown by the map herewith printed in the RECORD. Major Gilmore in speaking of this route said:

The canal should have its eastern terminus on the St. Marys River at the place known as Camp Pinckney, 29 miles—measured by the river line as it will be when improved—above the town of St. Marys, at the head of ship navigation. From thence it will run in a right line south 68° west to and through the Okefenokee Swamp, crossing the Suwanee River near Blounts Ferry; thence to Ellaville, 77 miles.

From near Ellaville the direction of the line changes slightly, bearing south 76° 15′ west, 64 miles to St. Marks, on the Gulf of Mexico. The whole distance from the town of St. Marys to St. Marks, connecting the waters of Cumberland Sound with the Gulf of Mexico by this route, is 170 miles.

TERMINI

It is of vital importance that a barge canal have ample harbor facilities both on the Atlantic and Gulf. The entire Georgia coast is protected by a chain of islands, thus making a splendid inland waterway between the islands and the mainland and furnishing splendid harbor facilities all the way from the St. Marys River to the Savannah River. An inland waterway can be very easily constructed, and in fact has already been installed, most of the way from the mouth of the Mississippi River to St. Georges Sound, at the mouth of the Apalachicola. The Florida coast is not protected by a chain of islands from St. Georges Sound to Cedar Keys, at or near the mouth of the Suwanee. Therefore it is essential that the barge-canal route have as its western terminus St. Georges Sound and proceed to any point on the Georgia coast. In fact, all agree that if the St. Marys-St. Marks Canal is constructed for barge purposes, it will be necessary to extend it westward from St. Marks to St. Georges Sound, and, therefore, as a matter of fact, it would become the St. Marys-St. Georges Canal.

SATILLA-AUCILLA ROUTE

My bill provides for a survey of this route along the Satilla River to a point at or near Waycross, Ga.; thence westward along or near the Atlantic Coast Line Railway to a point on the Aucilla River at or near Quitman, Ga.; then along the Aucilla River to St. Marks, Fla. It will be observed from the map that the Aucilla River enters the Gulf near St. Marks, Fla., the proposed western terminus of the St. Marys-St. Marks Canal. In the event this route is used it will be necessary, of course, for the canal to be constructed either from St. Marks or some point on the Aucilla River to St. Georges Sound. This route would be slightly longer than the St. Marys-St. Marks Canal. However, there are many features in connection with this route which to my mind makes advisable a most careful study of same.

SATILLA-OCHLOCHONEE ROUTE

I am asking for a survey of the Satilla River to a point on said river at or near Mora, Ga., thence along the most practicable barge-canal route to the headwaters of the Ochlochonee River at or near Moultrie, Ga., thence along said river to St. Georges Sound. This proposed route is indicated on the map as route E. This route would be from the Atlantic Ocean, via Waycross, to a point on the Satilla River at or near Mora, Ga. The route proceeds from there to the headwaters of the Ochlochonee River and follows that river to St. Georges Sound. The river flows into the Gulf through two channels, one being known as Crooked River, which enters St. Georges Sound, the other being the main channel of the river proper. This route has the advantage of a river flowing in the right direction and entering a splendid harbor on the Gulf.

OCMULGEE-OCHLOCHONEE ROUTE

This route uses the Ocmulgee River to a point at or near the northwest corner of Coffee County; thence along the most feasible and practicable barge-canal route to the headwaters of the Ochlochonee River, following that river to St. Georges Sound. This route has some advantages over all the others heretofore mentioned, one being the use of Ocmulgee and the Altamaha River as a route from the northwest corner of Coffee County to the Atlantic Ocean. This route is indicated on the map as route D.

OCMULGEE-PENNAHATCHEE ROUTE

The route to be surveyed in connection with this project is the shortest one yet proposed and has the advantage of connecting two streams, one of which is navigable, and the other one can be made navigable at reasonable cost. Each of these streams flow in the right direction, one entering the Gulf at St. Georges Sound and the other entering the Atlantic at or near most splendid habor facilities. I feel a most careful study should be made of the advantages of this route. This is indicated on the map as route B.

OCMULGEE-CHATTAHOOCHEE ROUTE

This project is indicated on the map as route A. I am asking for a careful survey between the Ocmulgee River at a point at or near Hawkinsville or Macon, Ga., and the Chattahoochee River at or near Columbus, Ga., as well as a survey of the streams from the termini of the actual canal both to the Gulf and Atlantic Ocean.

ALTAMAHA-APALACHICOLA ROUTE

I am asking that a survey be made of the Altamaha and Ocmulgee Rivers to a point on either river selected as a terminus of a barge canal, and thence along the most feasible, practicable, and economical route, joining the waters of the Altamaha River with the waters of the Apalachicola River. I am indicating on the map a route which I think very probably meets all requirements. This appears on the map as route C. This route, to my mind, is one of the very best proposals, and I would not be surprised should the engineers select it as being preferable to all others. It ties together four large navigable rivers which have splendid harbor facilities both on the Gulf and Atlantic Ocean, and which comprise a very large percentage of the entire route from gulf to ocean. The canal to be constructed is of reasonable length, across fairly level country, intercepting sufficient streams to probably furnish an abundance of water for the canal along its upper levels. One thing is settled, and that is that the proposed barge canal route will extend from the mouth of the Apalachicola to the mouth of the Altamaha River regardless of where it may be constructed.

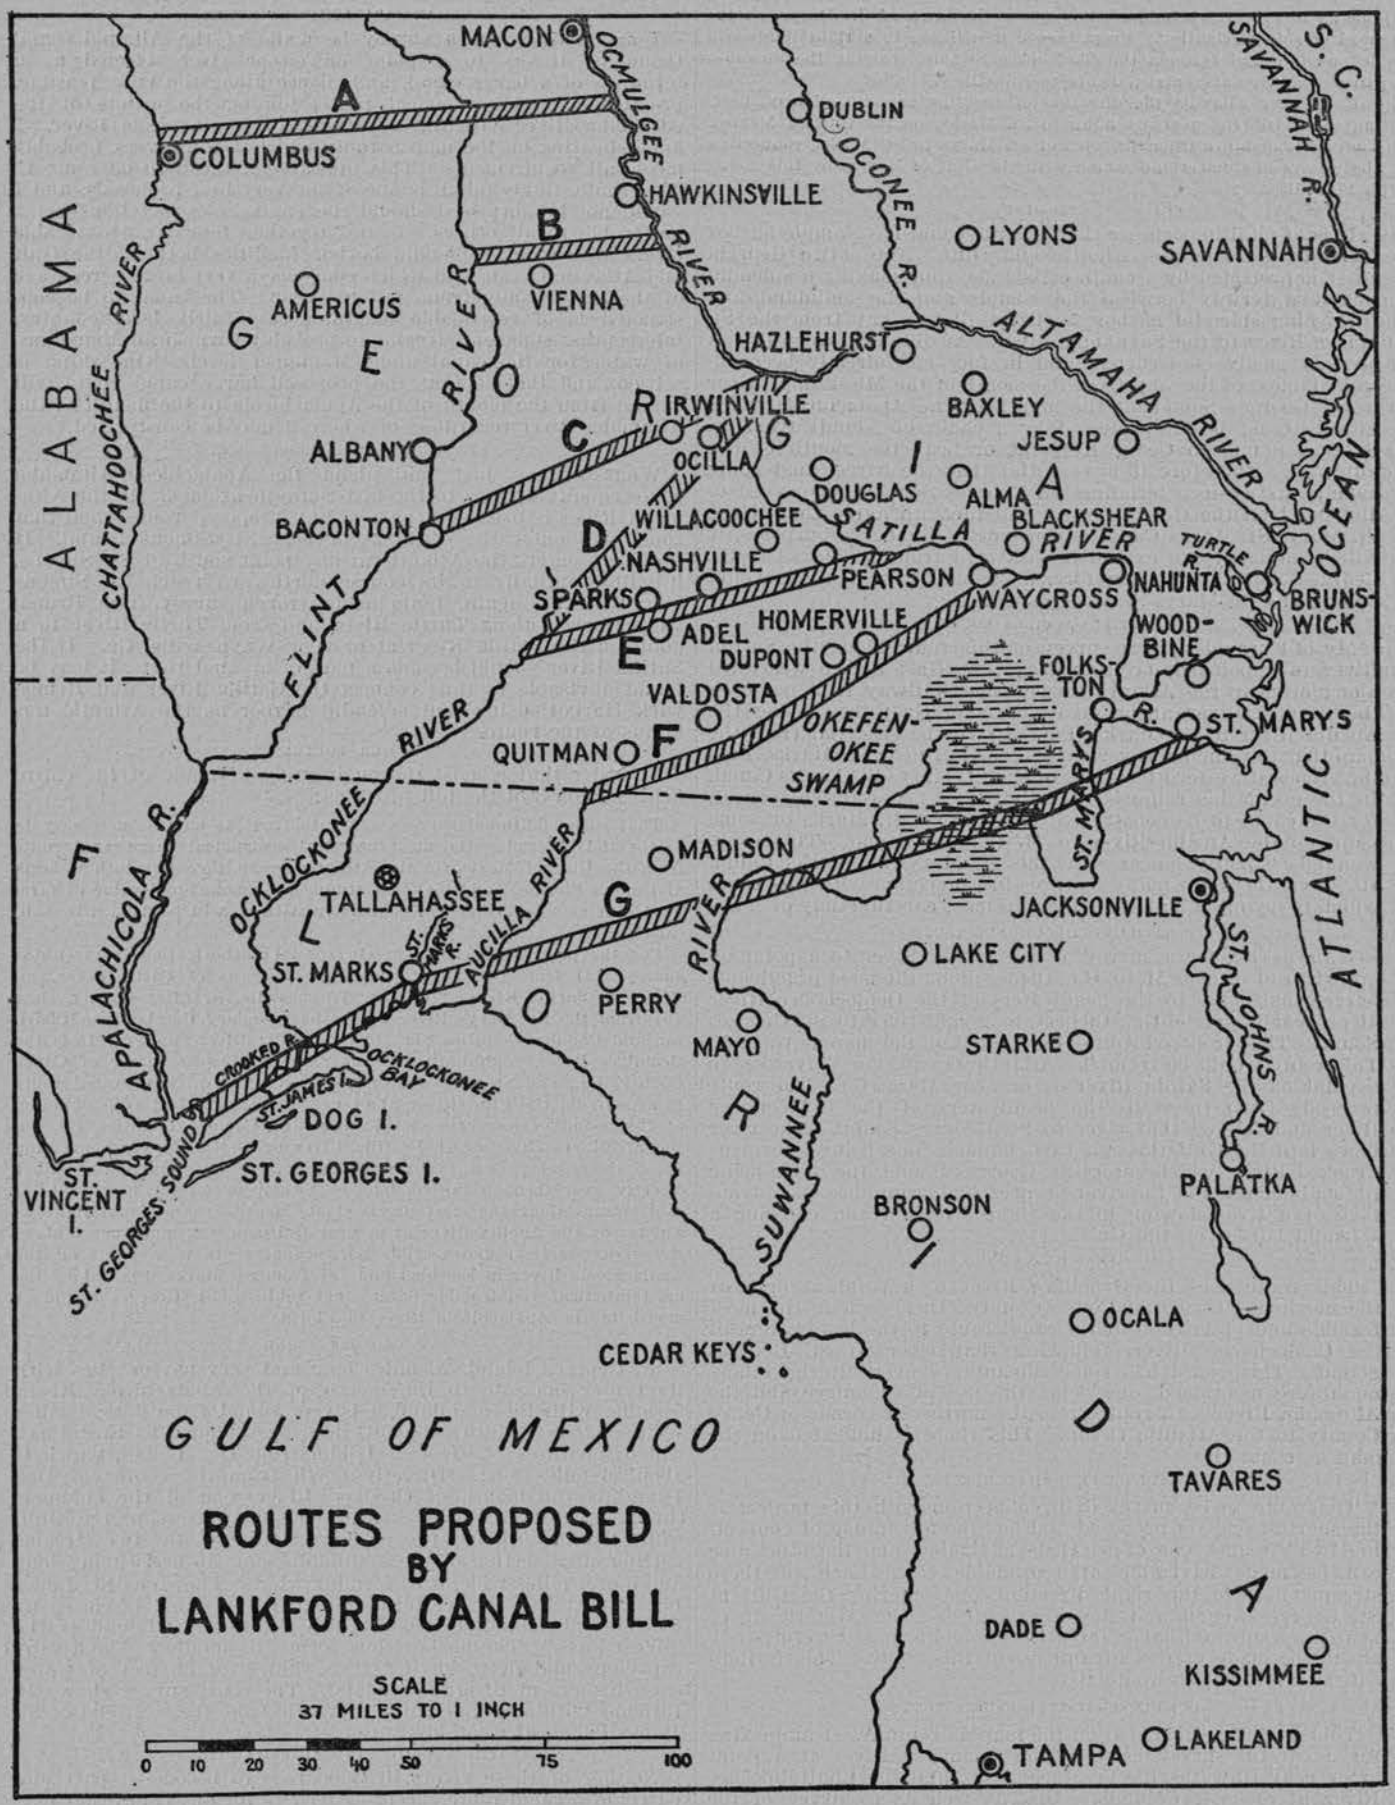
ST. SIMONS-ST. GEORGES ROUTE

What I have just said about the Apalachicola-Altamaha route equally applies to the last route mentioned. If the Altamaha River is used as a part of any proposed route, then that route will enter the ocean at or near St. Simons Island. If the route enters the Atlantic at any point south of St. Simons, it will eventually in its course northward reach St. Simons Island. Then, again, I am asking for a survey from Brunswick Harbor along Turtle River and from Turtle River to a point on the Satilla River at or near Waynesville, Ga. If the Satilla River should become a part of a canal route, it may be found advisable to thus connect the Satilla River and Brunswick Harbor, using that splendid harbor as the Atlantic terminus of the route.

OTHER ROUTES

In order that a most thorough study be made of the entire field, section 3 of the bill provides:

That such additional surveys are authorized as may be necessary to locate and determine the most practical economical barge-canal route from the Gulf of Mexico to the Atlantic Ocean through south Georgia and north Florida, and also to determine the amount and value of farm land that may be drained in connection with or will be flooded by said canal.



For the purposes specified herein special authorization is given for surveys (a) from Brunswick Harbor by the way of Turtle River and thence to Satilla River at or near Waynesville, Brantley County, Ga.; (b) from the St. Marys River along the boundary line between Charlton and Camden Counties, Ga., to the Satilla River; and (c) from the Ocmulgee River, beginning at or near the northwest corner of Coffee County, Ga., and proceeding over the most practical barge-canal route to a point on the Flint River at or near Baconton, Ga.; (d) beginning at the boundary line between Charlton and Camden Counties, Ga., on the St. Marys River or the Satilla River or on the survey connecting these rivers along said county boundary line and proceeding either directly west through the Okefenokee Swamp or on the north side of said swamp along the most practical and feasible barge-canal route to a point on the Aucilla River at or near Quitman, Ga., and thence along the most practical and feasible barge-canal route to a point on the Apalachicola River in Florida; and (e) from St. Marks, Fla., along the most practical and feasible barge-canal route to St. Georges Sound at mouth of the Apalachicola River in Florida.

ST. GEORGES SOUND

St. Georges Island, 20 miles long and very narrow, lies with its center opposite to the mouth of the Apalachicola River, forming with the mainland a bay or sound from 3 to 8 miles wide. At its eastern extremity is a pass known as East Pass, which separates St. Georges Island from Dog Island, which is about 6 miles long. Directly north from the center of Dog Island is the mouth of Crooked River, one of the channels through which the Ochlockonee sends its waters to the Gulf, while the Ochlockonee proper flows southeast, the two streams cutting off a section of the mainland, some 15 or 20 miles long and 3 or 4 miles wide, thus forming what is known as St. James Island. At its southwestern extremity the sound is closed by St. Vincent Island, between which St. Georges Island is the "West Pass." The harbor thus formed is landlocked and safe, capacious and deep, having, it is said, over 30 feet of water close inshore at St. James Island. The coast survey shows 16 fathoms within seven-eighths of a mile from the west end of St. James Island at mean low water.

WITHLACOOCHEE AND ALAPAHA RIVERS

Neither of these rivers, it appears, can become a part and parcel of a canal route except as feeders for any canal that may be constructed across them, provided always the channel of the river is not too far below the level of the canal.

ROUTES PROPOSED BY LANKFORD CANAL BILL SCALE
37 MILES TO 1 INCH
0 10 20 30 40 50 75 100

I know very little about civil engineering except such knowledge as seems self-evident to my way of thinking. It occurs to me, though, that the best possible canal route is across a level country and across several small streams which will furnish an abundance of water for the canal. There are many such routes all the way from the Florida line to Macon and Columbus, Ga. Those routes nearest the Okefenokee Swamp and on the north of the swamp are best in this respect.

The Withlacoochee River drains about 1,600 square miles and the Alapaha River drains about 840 square miles. The Suwanee River drains 1,200 square miles in addition to the water it carries out of the Okefenokee Swamp. All three of the rivers flow together near Ellaville, Fla., except the Alapaha disappears underground about 10 miles before it reaches the Suwanee. The St. Marys-St. Marks barge canal as surveyed in the Gillmore survey would cross all three of these rivers near Ellaville. This canal, though, would not get the benefit of all the water in these rivers, the canal level being above the thread of the streams, unless the level of the streams was raised by a dam just below the canal. It would seem, therefore, that it would be better to construct a canal, if practical, crossing these streams and their tributaries farther to the north in a more level country, and where their waters could be used for canal purposes.

All these rivers flow in the wrong direction for their streams to be used as part of any of the proposed canals.

INFILTRATION

Another very helpful factor in the way of a water supply for a canal constructed through a level country, such as is along the Atlantic Coast Railway through Ware, Clinch, Lanier, Lowndes, and Brooks Counties, is that the water is near the surface and that a very large amount of water would naturally seep or infiltrate into the canal from the adjacent land.

There are also many depressions, bays, or ponds of sufficient area to hold all necessary water where it could be impounded and from time to time as needed released for use in the canal through such streams as the Suwanoochee Creek, and so forth.

MILL PONDS, FISH PONDS, AND SMALL LAKES

Take, for instance, Clinch County. There are many reservoirs along any line that might be proposed. I know more about that county than any other, for I have walked over the larger portion of it while a boy. Let us figure just a little on a route I did not mention specifically in my bill, and yet I shall ask that the route be given careful study under the general provisions of the bill.

I refer to a route beginning at the Satilla River at or near Millwood in Ware County, and proceeding westward on the south side of Guests Mill pond and Rabie Swamp across Camp Creek, and on to Lakeland in Lanier County and on the south side of the splendid lake just west of Lakeland to either the Ochlockonee River or the Apalachicola River. This route would have several splendid reservoirs of water along its course and there never would be any need of water for canal use. The more this problem is studied the more interesting it becomes.

OKEFENOKEE SWAMP

The Okefenokee swamp, covering 640 square miles, is one of the most interesting areas of the Nation. A careful study and survey of this swamp will be most beneficial from every standpoint.

There is a bill pending in the Senate to provide for a game and fish preserve in the Okefenokee, as well as one in the House providing for a study of the area with a view of creating a national park.

It is entirely possible that a barge canal can be constructed through the swamp in such a way as to drain a portion of the area by creating artificial pools or lakes in connection with present lakes and drains, thus impounding sufficient water for canal use and at the same time making the entire section one of the beauty spots of the Nation.

A barge canal through the swamp could be used to great advantage in a general scheme to further make accessible and more beautiful nature's own magnificence.

DISTANCES

It is interesting to observe the relative lengths of the canals to be constructed across the country in connection with each proposed route. Not considering the streams to be used, the various routes are approximately in length as follows: St. Marys-St. Marks, 170 miles; Satilla-Aucilla, 60 miles; Satilla-Ochlockonee, 45 miles; Ocmulgee-Ochlockonee, 50 miles; Altamaha-Apalachicola, 60 miles; Ocmulgee-Pennahatchee, 28 miles; and Ocmulgee-Chattahoochee, 65 miles.

The map herewith printed indicates fully the relative distances.

The distance to be excavated between St. Marks and St. Georges Sound is about 50 miles.

DIRECTIONS

It is likewise interesting to study the direction followed by some of the rivers in their course to the sea. Several of these rivers flow from the center of the State of Georgia in practically a straight line to either the Gulf or the ocean and thus only have to be joined by a short cross-country canal to perfect a barge-canal route from the Gulf to the Atlantic Ocean. Some others are crooked and even flowing exactly opposite directions on part of their trip to the ocean. The St. Marys River flows out of the Okefenokee to the south as though it was on its way along the Florida Peninsula to Key West; then it turns its course and proceeds for a long distance toward Jacksonville as though it purposed joining the St. Johns River at Jacksonville; then it changes its course and flows directly north, as though it was to join the Satilla River; and then, after getting within 4½ miles of the Satilla, it again changes its course eastward toward the Atlantic Ocean and enters the Cumberland Sound at St. Marys. The Satilla River, after passing Waycross and Blackshear, proceeds almost on a direct route toward Brunswick Harbor as if to join Turtle River and with it enter the Atlantic Ocean; then, after getting most of the way to Brunswick, it changes its course and flows south as if to join the St. Marys River, and after getting within 4½ miles of the St. Marys River it changes its course again to the east and flows into the Atlantic Ocean.

The Suwanee River flows out of the Okefenokee on a line as if to enter the Gulf of Mexico at or near St. Marks, but soon changes from a westerly direction to almost a due south direction, entering the ocean many miles south of St. Marks and near Cedar Keys.

ST. MARYS AND SATILLA RIVERS

Gillmore's report indicated that further study should be made of both the St. Marys River and the Satilla in order to determine which is superior for the purpose of improvement for ship navigation. It was pointed out that 27 miles from the Cumberland Sound they were only 4½ miles apart and could be easily connected by a canal at this point.

CONCLUSION

With me the location and construction of a ship canal across Georgia and Florida has ever been a most interesting topic. Even as a small boy I often heard our neighbors say that water from Rabie Swamp, near my home, flowed both to the Atlantic and to the Gulf, and if the swamp and its tributaries were navigable to the sea, steamboats could sail from the Gulf to the Atlantic without going around Florida. I have also heard that water from the Okefenokee Swamp, in my home county, flowed to both the Gulf and the Atlantic. When I began to study the geography of my State I found there was a divide or ridge running from the Okefenokee all the way to Atlanta, and that water from a house top, located exactly on this ridge, flowed both ways and eventually found its way, part to the Gulf and part to the Atlantic.

So, if this divide should be canalized and the waters flowing from it made navigable to both the Gulf and the Atlantic, the problem of a barge canal between these two bodies of water will have been solved.

Therefore it would seem a most important question arises as to the best location of this canal. The map, which I am having inserted in the RECORD, will prove most interesting, indicating several of the routes suggested. With a view to the proper solution of this problem, I have introduced a bill providing for a complete study and survey of the entire field in all of its phases.

REAPPORTIONMENT

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the reapportionment bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, the gravest atrocity ever committed upon the people of the United States apparently is in progress in another part of this Capitol.

I refer to the disinterest, contempt, and grossly tyrannical, determined evasion of the constitutional mandate for reapportionment which, it appears certain, this Congress is forced to permit in its dying days, due to the folly of one branch of this Legislature, at the expense of the country.

Eight years ago the House passed a reapportionment bill which was never permitted to become a law.

To-day the same catastrophe has happened. The House by an overwhelming vote has passed the Fenn reapportionment bill. The bill affects solely the membership of the House and certainly no other branch of Congress.

But the House, it appears, is to be denied the right to fix its own membership or its method of reapportionment. How long must the Members of this House, and 32,000,000 partially disfranchised inhabitants of this country, suffer this tyranny and discourtesy.

The House has done its full duty. The responsibility for this disfranchisement of American voters now lies in another quarter.

If this Congress passes into history on March 4 with the reapportionment bill still not enacted, it will be another monument to the colossal impositions to which this House and the Nation have been subjected. It will be another black blot upon the lawmaking history of Congress—a blot for which the House of Representatives in no way is responsible. The time has come, at least, when the House should go on record as protesting against these tyrannies.

At this point I would like to read what one of the leading newspapers of the country, the Detroit Free Press, says editorially of the present situation. I quote, the title of which is—

SENT TO THE REAR

The Senate reapportionment bill stands, at this writing, third on the list of measures scheduled for consideration by the steering committee. A bill to survey the Nicaragua canal route, which should not have been introduced this session at all, stands first on the list of preferred legislation. Then comes a bill to establish a produce market in Washington. Such is the relative importance the Senate places on giving the States their constitutional rights—and giving Government employees fresh vegetables.

After eight years of delay, with less than eight days to go, a more contemptuous relegation of reapportionment to a seat so far in the rear that it probably will not be heard from could hardly have been devised. Then the Senate wonders why other people wonder why they send Senators to Washington.

The Washington Post to-day said editorially:

The time remaining before the adjournment grows short. The fact that the House passed the measure was a step toward restoration of constitutional government. The Senate has the opportunity to establish itself as a protector of the Constitution. If it fails, it will be because it is willing to permit men actuated by selfish and sectional motives to dominate its affairs.

As one Member of the House I intend to protest against this arrogance and oppression from the United States Senate. The Senate has assumed the rights of the entire Congress in its blocking of the reapportionment bill. It has forgotten its place and has taken for granted that it is the supreme legislative body of this country, even though the legislation in question affects only the House. Constitutional government can exist only as long as it enjoys the confidence of the people. The Senate by its smothering of this bill is doing everything in its power to ruin that confidence, to undermine the respect of the people for law and order, and to substitute rule by power of the lungs for rule by the will of representatives of the people.

The history of the Senate is that its Members represent the sovereignty of the States, and that Members of the House represent the people. The Senate now wants to assume all representation and power. Let me refer to the disinterest of a Senator representing a State in the West. In the hectic days of the last election when this Senator was campaigning through the country in the interests of the party of which I have the honor to be a member he visited Detroit. In urging the candidacy of President-elect Hoover he posed as the great friend of the Constitution. He said he was unalterably in favor of reapportionment, that his party would see this mandate of justice carried out.

But the honorable Senator has proved himself a greater demagogue than a friend of the Constitution. When the reapportionment bill was before the Senate earlier this week, and it was found impossible to maintain a quorum in order that it might be considered, that gentleman was so disinterested that he did not even bother to attend the meeting. Such is the difference between his campaign constitutionalism and his constitutionalism in the Halls of Congress.

The Senate obstructionists without doubt are doing everything in their power to blacken the honor of the Senate and the Congress as a whole.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Jones-Stalker bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, on account of being unable to be present Friday during the debate and vote upon the Jones bill, I am availing myself of the consent of the House to extend my remarks upon this measure.

I accept the eighteenth amendment as a part of the Constitution of the United States. I accept the duty as a Member of Congress to provide any proper measure of legislation necessary for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

The experience of mankind in the administration of criminal laws has established two fundamental principles. The first and greatest principle is that wise legislation is the beginning of successful law observance and law enforcement. Unwise, inconsiderate, and arbitrary legislation is the beginning of law-enforcement failures.

The second great principle established by human experience is that the penalty provided should fit the crime. Blackstone, perhaps the master student of law history and its adaptation to society, declared in substance that the experience of the ages had demonstrated that unduly severe penalties lead to the disregard of law and the breakdown of law enforcement. He declared that the experience of men has demonstrated that the wise penalty is the penalty that corresponds to the offense. This bill proposes to establish a maximum penalty of $10,000 and imprisonment of five years or both. Under the Federal statutes all offenses punishable by imprisonment for more than one year are felonies.

The bill provides that these penalties shall apply to prosecutions under the national prohibition act, "as amended and supplemented." The act of 1921 specifically supplements the national prohibition act. Section 5 of this measure provides—

That all laws in regard to the manufacture and taxation of and traffic in intoxicating liquor, and all penalties for violations of such laws that were in force when the national prohibition act was enacted, shall be and continue in force, as to both beverage and nonbeverage liquor.

So the bill proposes these maximum penalties not only for the national prohibition act but for practically all, if not all, the laws heretofore enacted by the Federal Government concerning the manufacture and taxation of, and traffic in, intoxicating liquors.

The increased penalties proposed will apply not only to the United States but to Porto Rico, Hawaii, Alaska, and the District of Columbia. The bill provides blanket penalties for a large number of offenses. It makes them all felonies. At the present time, most of these offenses are misdemeanors and triable in police and justice courts. The passage of this bill will automatically deprive these minor courts of jurisdiction, make all of these offenses felonies, regardless of how trivial, and transfer the prosecution thereof to the courts having jurisdiction of felony cases where proceedings must be by information after preliminary examination or by indictment by a grand jury. Thousands of cases now promptly disposed of in minor courts will automatically be transferred to the courts of record. Last year over twenty-one hundred cases were filed in police courts of the District, according to newspaper accounts. Lawyers of the District contend that passage of this bill will automatically remove this large class of cases from the police to the higher courts.

California, by a vote of our people, adopted what is known as the little Volstead Act. We made the Volstead Act the law of the State and specifically provided that violations thereof are subject to the penalties provided in the Volstead Act. California law further provides "that whenever Congress shall amend the Volstead law," or "any other law to enforce the eighteenth amendment," then such law shall become part of the law of the State. The justice courts of California have no jurisdiction over felony cases. The enactment of this bill will deprive the justice courts of California of jurisdiction to enforce many violations of the prohibition law. One of the main objects in adopting the little Volstead Act was to give jurisdiction to the minor courts to enforce minor violations of the prohibition law. Our people never voted for a little Volstead Act anticipating that Congress would later deprive our inferior courts of jurisdiction and clutter up our superior court records with petty liquor cases.

I am not against this bill because it affects prohibition. I am against it because it is unwise and proposed in defiance of all practical experience in the orderly administration of criminal laws. It is vicious in indiscriminately proposing penalties for petty offenses so out of proportion to the offense involved as to be shocking.

The policy of making offenses that in moral turpitude are nothing more than petty misdemeanors felonies punishable by five years in the penitentiary, and giving judges arbitrary power to impose such penalties, is a policy unwarranted by the experience of mankind in any age. It is a policy unworthy of a Christian people.

There are serious objections to making petty offenses felonies. One objection worthy of consideration is the difference in the law of arrest as applied to misdemeanors and felonies. The arresting officer has a right, if necessary, to slay a man reasonably suspected of having committed a felony, if such slaying be necessary to prevent the escape of the criminal. The enactment of this bill will be carte blanche authority for every prohibition agent to slay all those innocent persons or offenders who do not stop upon his arbitrary command.

A few weeks ago a 19-year-old boy down in the Shenandoah Valley, driving an automobile, refused to obey the command of a prohibition agent to stop. The prohibition agent, without warrant of arrest and without any definite knowledge that the boy was violating the prohibition law, brutally fired a bullet through the head of the boy. In a short time the boy was returned to his home a corpse. It developed that the boy in this case had 3 gallons of illicit liquor in his automobile. If this bill is enacted, the slaying of travelers on the highway, under such circumstances, will be legalized. Even innocent travelers as well as most trivial offenders of the prohibition law will be subject to wanton attack.

I have hastily gone over some of the penalties provided in the liquor statutes where the penalties proposed by this bill seem to apply. I find that in 30 of the cases where fines are provided, the maximum fine under the existing law would be $26,300, while the maximum penalty proposed in this bill would be $300,000. I find that the imprisonment provided in the case of 33 penalties, under the existing law, total about 34 years. The penalties provided under this bill would total 165 years. In 5 cases where there is no imprisonment provided for at present the maximum punishment under this bill would become 5 years. I find that in 16 cases, of 33 imprisonment penalties, the present maximum imprisonment is under 1 year. The summary is as follows:

The Jones law—Maximum penalties

In one or more cases this bill, if it becomes a law, will penalize the disobedience of a court injunction by a fine of $10,000, or five years in the penitentiary, or both. Public sentiment in America resents the arbitrary exercise of the injunctive power. The arbitrary and cruel exercise of the injunction has been notoriously abused by the Federal judiciary. The laboring people of the United States and many other people having a concern for the just rights of men propose that the arbitrary use of the injunction by these Federal judges shall be restrained. This proposal to make violations of a court injunction felonies is an interloper in American jurisprudence and contrary to the spirit of our institutions.

The judges who are worthy to exercise the indiscriminate discretion given in this proposed bill have not yet been born. I have great respect for the judiciary in our higher courts. I know, however, that unfortunately we have many men upon our Federal benches who are unfit to exercise the great powers intrusted to them. I have no such confidence in their wisdom or their justice as makes me willing to confer upon them an arbitrary power so sweeping in its terms as to be inappropriate in any just system of government. The restraints we have thrown upon the judiciary are not accidental but an outgrowth of long and bitter experience. We can not afford to forget their love of power and their proneness to abuse it.

I do not doubt there are cases in the enforcement of prohibition where penalties more severe might be provided. The breakdown in law enforcement, however, is due to this cause only in a minor degree. The fundamental difficulty is the entire escape of guilty offenders.

There is no considerable disposition in this House to avoid providing any proper penalty that may be necessary to aid the proper enforcement of the prohibition law. This House is overwhelmingly in favor of the support of legislation to carry out the purposes of the eighteenth amendment. Members of this body have followed the leadership of the dry organizations until their subserviency has in some instances approached legislative slavery. A faithful horse should not be ridden with whip and spur. Those outside of legislative halls proposing this remedy, and demanding its support, show a lack of proper regard for those who are unquestionably loyal to their cause. I would like to support any legitimate measure to give prohibition a just chance to accomplish for the country all that its most ardent proponents have ever claimed. I can not afford to vote for a measure which would violate my sense of justice and my sense of duty to my country. I could not respect myself to vote for a measure I deem so unjustifiable and in such disregard of the proper use of the criminal law.

This is a great, powerful Government. It has much power to enforce a law, simply because it is a law. It has much greater power to enforce a law that has the respect and hearty approval of the people of America. If prohibition is a final success, it must win its way by the approval of the American people. It can not drive its way. The practical problem of enforcement, so far as prohibition is concerned, is to enforce it by laws and by methods that enjoy the respect and confidence of the average law-abiding, sane citizen of America. I believe this proposed bill is unwise legislaton; it prescribes penalties shockingly disproportionate to the offenses involved; it provides a law that will further tend to bring prohibition into contempt and disrepute and make the failure of law enforcement more complete.

OSCAR S. STRAUS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution 377, for a memorial to Oscar S. Straus.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint Resolution (H. J. Res. 377) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a monument or memorial to Oscar S. Straus

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to select a suitable site and to grant permission to any association or associations organized within two years from the date of the approval of this resolution for that purpose, to erect as a gift to the people of the United States, on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., a monument or memorial in memory of Oscar S. Straus: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the monument or memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, that it shall be erected under the supervision of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of said monument or memorial.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WARREN presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Enrolled Joint Memorial 2

TWENTIETH LEGISLATURE, STATE OF WYOMING, IN THE SENATE.

An act memorializing the Congress of the United States in favor of increased tariff protection for the turkey and sugar industries of Wyoming and other States interested in such industries

Be it resolved by the Senate of the Twentieth Wyoming State Legislature (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas the industry of producing and raising turkeys has now progressed to a point in this State where it is one of the principal State industries; and

Whereas enormous quantities of dressed turkeys are shipped into this country from foreign countries, notably Russia, in the summer months of each year, and are placed in cold storage and are thereafter placed on the market in competition with freshly killed Wyoming dressed turkeys in the fall and holiday seasons of each year; and

Whereas the present tariff rate of 6 cents per pound upon such dressed turkeys is inadequate and furnishes no sufficient protection to the industry in Wyoming and other States similarly situated; and

Whereas another of the principal industries of this State, to wit, the sugar industry, is now, and has been for many months suffering from a lack of tariff protection against foreign sugar; and

Whereas sugar is now permitted to be brought into this country free of duty from the insular possessions of the United States, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and others; and

Whereas it is generally recognized that sugar from foreign countries is in active competition with Wyoming-made sugar; and

Whereas many of the most successful farmers in Wyoming are now raising sugar beets as their principal crop, and are receiving an inadequate price therefor because of the lack of a sufficient tariff barrier against foreign sugar from many foreign sugar-producing countries; and

Whereas the manufacturers of sugar in this State have invested many thousands of dollars in their plants and equipment for the refining of Wyoming-grown sugar beets: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully and urgently requested—

First. To increase the tariff upon foreign-grown turkeys as and when imported into this country from 6 cents per pound to 12 cents per pound.

Second. To increase the tariff upon all foreign sugar to such extent as to give adequate protection to the home industry and to prevent the further free entry of sugar from the Philippines and Porto Rico to such extent as will guarantee reasonable protection to the United States industry; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this memorial be sent to Senator FRANCIS E. WARREN, Senator JOHN B. KENDRICK, and Hon. CHARLES E. WINTER, Representative in Congress for the State of Wyoming.

FRANK O. HORTON,
President of the Senate.
MARVIN L. BISHOP, Jr.,
Speaker of the House.

Approved at 4.42 p. m., February 21, 1929.

FRANK C. EMERSON, Governor.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following memorial of the State Senate of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

NINTH LEGISLATURE, REGULAR SESSION,
STATE SENATE.

Senate Memorial 4 (introduced by Committee on Mines and Mining)

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Senate of the Ninth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents that—

Whereas mining is a major industry of the State of Arizona, and the development of mineral resources is essential to its prosperity and advancement; and

Whereas such development is in a large measure dependent upon the legitimate regulated sale of mining stocks and securities through the medium of stock exchanges and curb exchanges throughout the country; and

Whereas it has come to the notice of your memorialist that certain curb exchanges, acting through their authorized committees, have adopted policies relative to the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of American-owned mine development companies, prejudicial thereto, and at variance with and less favorable than their policy and requirements as to the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of similar foreign-owned companies, and companies other than mining companies, which policy, if effectuated, would greatly retard the development of the mining industry of this State;

Now, therefore, your memorialist prays; That Congress do take all necessary steps and proceedings to cause investigation to be made of the methods and regulations of curb exchanges throughout the United States relative to the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of American-owned mine development companies, as compared with methods and regulations made use of in connection with the listing of and dealing in stocks and securities of similar foreign-owned companies and companies other than mining companies.

That if favoritism or discrimination adverse to the American-mining industry, or any other lawful industry, be found to exist, the Congress provide, by appropriate legislation, for the proper regulation and control of the listing of and dealing in of stocks and securities, by and through curb exchanges, and for the penalizing of favoritism or discrimination in such listing or dealing; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this memorial to Arizona's representatives in Congress, and to the proper officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

Unanimously adopted February 21, 1929.

H. W. HILL,
President of the Senate.
W. J. GRAHAM,
Secretary of the Senate.

H. J. Res. 377. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a monument or memorial to Oscar S. Straus; to the Committee on the Library.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, as in executive session I submit some reports for the Executive Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

ADDRESS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL JOHN G. SARGENT

Mr. GREENE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the Attorney General of the United States, Hon. John G. Sargent, at a dinner of the Federal Bar Association in Washington on the 23d instant.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS AT DINNER OF THE FEDERAL BAR ASSOCIATION, MAYFLOWER HOTEL, WASHINGTON, FEBRUARY 23, 1929, BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, JOHN G. SARGENT

Mr. Toastmaster and members of the Federal Bar Association, when I was invited to attend this dinner, I accepted with the distinct understanding that I be not called upon to speak.

Out of such material, by the use of a circular letter, the committee in charge created the present situation.

In casting about for a topic for discussion here, I find constantly recurring a subject on which (as I feel sure many of those here present can certify) I have been thoroughly instructed for a considerable number of weeks past, the great importance, amounting almost to a sine qua non, to a lawyer practicing and a judge sitting in the courts of the District of Columbia of a thorough knowledge of the common law.

So, my head being full, to the exclusion of other things, of the necessary qualifications for a good lawyer and a good judge in the District, it occurred to me the thing I was best prepared to do was to address you for a few minutes on the practice of the law in my native State, Vermont.

A Vermonter, William Slade, writing more than a hundred years ago, said:

"The general diffusion of intelligence constitutes the life of a free government. Upon every department of such a government the people exert an unremitted influence, and stamp on all its measures the impress of their own character. Called upon to act, they should become accustomed to think; and though they can not, ordinarily, possess extended and comprehensive views of other systems of government, they should, at least, understand their own. The whole science of government consists in a knowledge of the practical operation of principles. With the science, thus understood, the citizens of every free government owe it to themselves and their posterity to become familiarly acquainted. The preservation of their political institutions depends, under Divine Providence, on themselves. Those institutions therefore—their origin, their nature, their practical operation, and their whole history, should be studied and understood. The man who contemplates the subject in this light will sit down to the examination of the successive constitutions and laws of a government, with a far higher aim than the gratification of an idle curiosity. By tracing them to their origin, and pursuing them through their various modifications, he will furnish himself with the best means of understanding the nature and practical tendency of existing institutions."

The constitution of Vermont was formed, as the expression then and there was, July 2, 1777, by a convention which said of itself and its acts:

"Whereas * * * it is absolutely necessary for the welfare and safety of the inhabitants of this State that * * * a just, permanent, and proper form of government should exist in it, derived from, and founded on, the authority of the people only;

"We, the representatives of the freemen of Vermont, in general convention, met, for the express purpose of forming such a government, confessing the goodness of the Great Governor of the universe (who alone knows to what degree of earthly happiness mankind may attain by perfecting the arts of government), in permitting the people of this State, by common consent, and without violence, deliberately to form for themselves such just rules as they shall think best for governing their future society; and being fully convinced that it is our indispensable duty, to establish such original principles of government, as will best promote the general happiness of the people of this State, and their posterity, and provide for future improvements, without partiality for or prejudice against, any particular class, sect, or denomination of men whatever, do by virtue of authority vested in us by our constituents ordain, declare, and establish the following declaration of rights and frame of government to be the constitution of this Commonwealth, and to remain in force therein forever, unaltered except in such articles as shall hereafter, on experience, be found to require improvement, and which shall, by the same authority of the people, fairly delegated, as this frame of government directs, be amended or improved for the more effectual obtaining and securing the great end and design of all government hereinbefore mentioned."

That constitution vested the "supreme legislative power" in a house of representatives consisting "of persons most noted for wisdom and virtue to be chosen by the freemen of every town in this State, respectively"; "the supreme executive power in a governor and council," but as to the judiciary said only:

"Courts of justice shall be established in every county in this State," And—

"The supreme court, and the several courts of common pleas of this State shall, besides the powers usually exercised by such courts, have the powers of a court of chancery, so far as relates to perpetuating testimony, obtaining evidence from places not within this State, and the care of persons and estates of those who are non compos mentis, and such other powers as may be found necessary by future general assemblies, not inconsistent with this constitution."

Government under the constitution was not organized until March, 1778. In February, 1779, the legislature enacted:

"That common law, as it is generally practiced and understood in the New England States, be, and is hereby established as the common law of this State."

Very early in June, 1782, the Legislature of Vermont passed a statute, the first section whereof—after the preamble:

"Whereas it is impossible, at once, to provide particular statutes adapted to all cases wherein law may be necessary for the happy government of this people; and

"Whereas the inhabitants of this State have been habituated to conform their manners to the English laws, and hold their real estates by English tenures"— enacted—

"that so much of the common law of England, as is not repugnant to the Constitution or to any act of the legislature of this State, be, and is hereby, adopted, and shall be, and continue to be, law within this State."

That statute, in almost the identical words, is still in force.

At the same session a statute was enacted:

"That there shall be, and hereby is, constituted, a supreme court of judicature within and for this State, to be held and kept annually, at the respective times and places in this act hereafter mentioned, by one chief judge and four other judges, to be chosen by ballot, by the governor, council, and general assembly, annually, at their October session, and commissioned for that purpose; any three of whom to be a quorum."

In 1786 Nathaniel Chipman was a justice, and in 1789 and 1790 he was chief justice of the supreme court of judicature.

The first reported decisions of this court are contained in the first 100 pages of a little duodecimo volume published by him in January, 1793, entitled:

Reports and Dissertations, in two parts (by Nathaniel Chipman, late Chief Justice), Part I being Reports of Cases Determined in the Supreme Court of the State of Vermont in the Years 1789 and 1791, and Part II being Dissertations on the Statute Adopting the Common Law of England, and on several other statutes no particular interest in the matter now under consideration.

Indeed, the chief interest to us in the whole book is perhaps not in the contents of the reports in Part I or the dissertations in Part II, but in the prefaces to each.

The preface to the reports is full of such delicious food for reflection for a bench and bar chiefly concerned with statutory law that I take the chance of wearying you with some quotations; mind you, he is talking about decisions of a court established in the wilderness for then less than 10 years.

"I do not apprehend any apology for publishing the following reports to be necessary. In our mode of practice a doubt lest the principles of some determinations may have been erroneous ought not to be a reason for withholding their publication. It is well known that the maxims and precedents of the English law do not with us apply in all cases. From a difference of government and a difference of customs the reason of cases frequently differs. The English common-law writers fail us in many instances. It becomes necessary, therefore, to investigate principles and establish precedents for ourselves. While former decisions rest only in the memory of the judge, overburdened in term, and perplexed with a multiplicity of cases; or, in the memory of counsel, frequently under a powerful bias in the recollection and statement little assistance in establishing uniform principles can be expected from precedents. Such is the order of courts and the mode of practice in this State that the judges can have little opportunity for deliberation.

"They are necessitated to form their opinions, as I may say, in transitu and on the urgency of occasion. It is, therefore, of importance to them, and to the public, that they should have an opportunity of reviewing as well what is wrong as what is right in their decisions. This may enable them to correct their former errors, and at leasure to discover those principles of justice, and the exceptions and limitations of each, which might have escaped their utmost sagacity in the hurry of the circuit. It may assist them, no less, in tracing, establishing, and rendering familiar, on every emergency, those permanent principles, of which they had, perhaps, caught only a glance on the occasion."

In the preface to the dissertations he is even better, and I am almost persuaded to turn the other cheek by the thought that I am given the opportunity to bring you this gem which, mayhap, has to this time been hidden from you.

"I have not the vanity to suppose, that the opinions contained in the following dissertations, are to be considered as precedents—they are only private opinions upon points of very considerable importance in the administration of law and justice, in this State. It has been my aim to derive these opinions from principles, which coincide with the principles of our Government, and the spirit of its laws; and to support them by reason, rather than by precedents.

"A knowledge of the principles in which precedents are founded; and the true reason of their application is of much greater importance in the profession of the law than the knowledge of precedents only. The latter may serve to form the mere technical lawyer; the first leads to the fountains of justice, the existing relations of nature in society, and connects the principles of law with the true principles of morality.

"It is believed that the principles and reasons, an illustration of which is here attempted, have, if well founded, often occurred to gentlemen of the profession. To such these dissertations may be less useful; but I flatter myself that they may be, in some measure, useful to students by exciting them to the due use of their reasoning powers as well as the power of memory, and by furnishing them with some hints for proper estimate of precedents, their principles and application."

Now that we have seen the manner of approach, the attitude of mind of this dweller in the hills and forests, may I detain you a little longer to let him tell you something of how he regarded the relation of the common law to the statutory laws enacted here?

In his Dissertations upon the Statute Adopting the Common Law of England, Mr. Justice Chipman says:

"By the common law of England * * * are understood those rules and maxims by which decisions are made in their courts of law, whether in relation to the mode of prosecuting a right or to the right itself—rules and maxims which have been there adopted, 'time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary' * * *.

"The aforegoing statute, adopting the common law of England in this State, has rendered a knowledge of that law indispensable in our courts. This statute expressly limits the adoption of the common law to so much as is not repugnant to the constitution or any act of the legislature of this State. * * * We have, strictly speaking, no common law officers—all the offices in this State are established and the duties in general terms pointed out by the constitution or by statute. The terms and expressions adopted in both are frequently derived from the common law. * * * these powers and duties are derived from the constitution and statutes of this State and limited by them—the manner in which these shall be exercised, if not pointed out by our laws, must be learned from the common law of England, so far as adopted here * * *.

"It is not my design to enumerate every instance in which the common law of England is to be applied in this State or in which it is excluded or restricted. It will be of more use to discover some general principles, which may enable us to distinguish properly in our applications.

"The common law of England is a system of rules, supported by precedents handed down from remote antiquity. These precedents have, by the body of the law, as is common enough with professional men, been held in too great veneration. A number of precedents in point, however obscure or uncertain the principles upon which they were founded, have been held fully decisive of a similar question; and yet many of these precedents were made at a time when the state of society and of property were very different from what they are at present, in an age when the minds of men were fettered in forms, when forms were held to be substances and abstractions real entities. Technical reasoning and unmeaning maxims, of course, frequently supplied the place of principles." * * *

"Cessante ratione, cessat et ipsa lex"—which, being translated, is, as you all of course understand, when the reason of a law ceases the law itself ceases—"was adopted as a maxim of the common law, for in those times nothing could be decided or altered without a precedent or a maxim. By the application of this maxim some precedents which were originally absurd, and some which had become inapplicable through a change of times and circumstances, were set aside. The progress, however, was slow. Men correct, or give up with reluctance, those things which cost them much pains in learning." * * *

"Legal right and wrong, particularly in criminal jurisprudence, have an intimate relation to the Constitution, principles, and circumstances of the Government. There will be a coincidence between the principles of the Government, the spirit of its criminal law, and the mode of interpretation and execution." * * *

"The monarchical principles have a silent but uniform influence on their criminal jurisprudence."

"At the time, when the common law was growing into a system by means of precedents, the judges were solely dependent on the Crown. Monarchy procures obedience no less by fear than by the principle of honor. The higher orders in the government, and the most aspiring characters, are influenced by the prospect of attaining honors. The multitude are restrained by fear." * * *

"The government of this State is that of a democratic republic. The principle of this government, by some called virtue, is a sentiment of attachment to its constitution and laws. This principle dictates moderation, in the enacting, in the interpretation, and execution of its laws. Here there is, perhaps, some danger, lest, through the influence of precedents, the courts should deviate from the spirit of moderation, the true spirit of our laws." * * *

"Lord Mansfield was powerfully attached to the monarchical and aristocratical principles of the British Government. Whenever these intervened, in a cause, they had great influence on his reasonings. In other questions merely of a civil nature, he was a great and a good judge. No judge, perhaps, in that country ever had a more thorough knowledge, both of the principles and precedents of the common law. His judicial opinion may be considered as a common-law precedent, in the construction of this statute. 'The law of England,' says he, 'would be an absurd science indeed were it decided upon precedents only. Precedents serve to illustrate principles and to give them a fixed certainty, but the law of England * * * depends upon principles, and these principles run through all the cases, according as they fall in with the one or the other of them.'

"We may then lay it down that this statute gives the citizens of this State the rules, maxims, and precedents of the common law so far as they serve to illustrate principles—principles only which from the situation of society with us exist in this State, but does not impose upon them those principles which from the particular circumstances of that government exist only in England."

Under the stimulus of such a mind, of such a philosophy, the bench and bar of Vermont entered upon their development with the common law the cement holding together, filling in the spaces between, rounding out and making smooth the statutory enactments of a new legislature, a legislature having great greed and ambition to increase, magnify, and extend its functions until it should become and be the entire government.

Within eight years from its organization and before Chipman came to the bench the legislature had arrogated to itself and assumed to exercise the power to set aside judgments of the courts and grant new trials or determine the controversies itself, to determine between parties the titles to lands, to hear and grant divorces, to grant or deny pardons, remit fines, and other similar encroachments on the judicial and executive functions.

Always from the beginning the judges have been elected by the legislature, at first for terms of one year, but never for a term longer than two years.

Still, in the face of such a situation, the battle for principles, for the doctrine that the determination of controversies between parties, by the application to facts of existing law—statutory if such there be; the common law if no statute covered the matter—went steadily on; steadily and constantly words and phrases of the Constitution and of statutes were interpreted and construed in the light of what such or similar language had meant, had been construed to mean, by English and other American courts.

In such a forge and such a heat were shaped the anchors of our hope. Thanks to the principles of the common law those anchors are now strong and deeply imbedded.

The lines of demarcation between the executive, the legislative, and the judicial functions are now as clearly and plainly marked there as in any jurisdiction in the country.

An interesting instance of the complete repeal of existing law and the substitution of a rule diametrically opposite, controlling personal rights—without legislation and by common law methods—occurred two years after I came to the bar, in a criminal case prosecuted by my senior partner, Governor Stickney, then a young man, in whose office I had studied law and was then employed.

Counsel for Burpee, indicted and on trial for larceny of cattle, requested the court below to charge the jury that "in a criminal case the jury are judges of the law applicable to the case upon the testimony given in court, and that the jury have a right to adopt their own theory of the law, instead of the law as laid down by the court," and the court refused to so charge.

This charge, in substance, had been given in criminal causes, when requested, for at least 65 years, probably since the beginning and in a long series of cases for 40 years the Supreme Court had held that in all criminal cases the jury are by the common law the paramount judges both of the law and the facts.

As stated, the trial judge refused the respondent the charge as requested, and the fight was on.

The court delivered an exhaustive opinion, citing the arguments and opinions of English judges and commentators, including Blackstone, Glanville Coke, Littleton, Mansfield, and many later, and Justices Baldwin, Field, Story, Thompson, Chief Justice Wade, of Montana, Judge Campbell, of Michigan, and many other American jurists.

They quoted Thompson, who, when requested to instruct the jury that they were the judges of the law as well as of the fact, said: "I shan't; they ain't."

They quoted from the arguments of Judge Campbell:

"It is necessary for public and private safety that the law shall be known and certain, and shall not depend on each jury that tries a cause; and the interpretation of the law can have no permanency and uniformity, and can not become generally known, except through the action of the courts. * * * If the court is to have no voice in laying down these rules, it is obvious that there can be no security whatever, either that the innocent may not be condemned, or that society will have any defense against the guilty. A jury may disregard a statute just as freely as any other rule. A fair trial in time of excitement would be almost impossible. All the mischief of ex post facto laws would be done by tribunals and authorities wholly irresponsible, and there would be no method of enforcing with effect many of our most important and legal safeguards against injustice. Parties charged with crime need the protection of the laws against unjust convictions quite as often as the public needs it against groundless acquittals. Neither can be safe without having the rules of law defined and preserved, and beyond the mere discretion of anyone."

And Chief Justice Wade:

"The end of all good governments is the honest and uniform administration of good laws. Safety comes to a people, and life, liberty, and property are secure when no one can be deprived thereof except by 'due process of law,' and when, in the adjudication of public and private rights, judicial authority speaks the pure voice of the law—'the law of the land.' The doctrine that jurors are judges of the law in criminal cases abolishes the sacred 'law of the land,' which, since the days of King John and Magna Charta, has been the birthright of all English-speaking people, and tends to the exercise of irresponsible arbitrary power. They are judges whose decision can not be reviewed. Their decrees are irrevocable and final. If they set aside a constitution or a statute, their act can not be questioned. If in the jury room they legislate and enact a law for the case in hand, it never sees the light of day; it is a mystery and a myth; no one can lay his hands upon it; no one can construe or interpret it; it affords no guide for the future, for it vanishes into nonentity the moment the verdict is returned, and the verdict makes no sign; the decision and the judges quickly disappear.

"'The showman and the show, Themselves but shadows, into shadows go.'"

The court said, neither the constitution of this State nor its statutes confer in express terms this power upon jurors if they possess it; cited the statute adopting the common law of England; said further:

"Therefore, in this State, jurors do not possess the legal right to judge of the law as well as of fact, unless jurors had such right at common law. If such right existed at common law, but is repugnant to the constitution and laws of this State, then the common law does not confer such right. In other words, to establish that jurors have such right, it must appear that it existed at common law, and that it is not repugnant to our Constitution and laws."

And stated their conclusion to be:

"That the doctrine that jurors are the judges of the law in criminal cases is untenable; that it is contrary to the fundamental maxims of the common law from which it is claimed to take its origin; contrary to the uniform practice and decisions of the courts of Great Britain, where our jury system had its beginning and where it matured; contrary to the great weight of authority in this country; contrary to the spirit and meaning of the Constitution of the United States; repugnant to the constitution of this State; repugnant to our statute relative to the reservation of questions of law in criminal cases and passing the same to the Supreme Court for final decision."

We have had our share of reformers who have undertaken by acts of the legislature to regulate procedure in court so that about all that would be required to produce a lawsuit would be a letter to the court from the plaintiff, accusing the defendant of whatever derelictions the plaintiff saw fit, and a reply letter from the defendant setting out whatever he pleased on the subjects of the plaintiff's letter, and adding any grievances he had or could conjure up against the plaintiff, related or unrelated to the plaintiff's complaints; and thereupon they should introduce evidence upon any or all the matters suggested in their complaints and replies, and any others that they might think of during the trial and desire to add by way of amendment.

This kind of legislation which I have somewhere said should be entitled "Acts for the relief of incompetent lawyers," has always been met by rules of court requiring, notwithstanding the statute, clear and logical statement of facts constituting a cause of action, clear and explicit pointing out of defects relied upon by a demurrant, and clear and explicit denial or pleading of relevant facts in confession and avoidance.

The result is that to-day in Vermont the plaintiff's statement of his case must be in all its essential features a common-law declaration, and the defendant's demurrer or statement of his defense must be in its essential features a common-law demurrer or plea.

This is as it should be. There has never been devised a method of clearing away immaterial and irrelevant allegations, bringing out and setting up clear-cut issues of fact and law for trial and determination, superior to—nay, equal to—the common-law declarations, demurrer, plea, etc.

It is the logical result of the refining process of hundreds of years of practice and use; that it takes men of a high degree of courage, of steadfastness, to stand firm against a legislature—which puts them in office and keeps them there or turns them out—upon the proposition that the legislature must confine itself to the making of a substantive law regulating the rights of parties, and leave to the courts the regulations of the conduct of business in the courts.

I am inclined to think that the training the lawyers of Vermont have had in the study and application of the principles of the common law, the compulsion to the habit of thinking things through before they start, is one of the chief sources of that courage.

One further observation I should make here, for the special consideration of everyone who may have before him the question whether his course in any particular matter shall be shaped by present expediency in his own apparent interest or sound and wise policy in the interest of good government.

While under the elective system I have described in the earlier half of the State's existence changes in the bench were made frequently—judges were made and unmade at nearly every election—in the latter half the office of judge has attained a high degree of permanency; now, once a man is placed on the bench, he is reelected biennially as long as he is willing and able to serve.

Well, I have rambled on, telling you of our trials, failures, and successes up in the mountains—it may be, to your thought, without interest to lawyers elsewhere. I think these matters are of interest in the administering of justice everywhere.

It is sometimes said that the common law is not a part of the Federal law of the Nation; certainly the source and obligation of all Federal law are in the written Constitution of the United States and statutes enacted under its authority; but, as certainly, the meaning and intent of the written language of the Constitution and those statutes, their application to the facts and acts and changing circumstances of the people, are to be found in the meaning language has come to bear through judicial construction for a thousand years before the constitution of Vermont was formed, and for a hundred and fifty years since.

The force of the reasoning in precedents, of construction in cases in point or analogous, is just as impelling on Federal tribunals in this country now as it was in the tribunals of England in 1775.

So the common law lives, vigorous, active, constantly adaptive and adapted to the life of the time, and will live so long as and wherever the English language is spoken, in whatever system of jurisprudence.

This must be so, because the meaning of the medium in which laws are expressed and recorded—language—is shaped, molded, and determined by it and by its processes.

When men in the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia used words, legal terms, they necessarily used them in the sense they had come to have by judicial construction, for that was the sense which the words had in their thoughts.

But it is, and for a long time has been, fashionable in some quarters to rail at the common-law methods of working things out on precedent and reasoning, and to rush to a new statute, new legislation, new codification, for a panacea.

It is said that the law and its methods are too slow for the times; that the machinery of litigation lags behind the life it is installed to serve; that other fields of endeavor and activity have adopted new methods leading to greater accomplishment, and that statutes should be enacted to reform judicial procedure and processes, to infuse new life into the administration of justice, and so bring about greater accomplishment.

May I suggest that the way to remedy these defects is not by legislation undertaking to prescribe and regulate judicial procedure but by action of the judiciary improving their own procedure; and in the judiciary I include both the judges and the attorneys, officers of the court.

It is habit we fall into to take up hours of time, use up dictionaryfuls of words, stating, repeating, insisting over and over, upon matters which might better be stated in a few words once for all, ruled upon, and so disposed of.

We are apt to think of and criticize a judge who grows impatient of our iteration and wrangling, and shows a disposition to require it to cease, as being indisposed to be fair, to listen to reasoning; and judges, who desire of all things the good opinion of their brethren of the bar, too often yield effect to such criticism, and allow trials and hearings to string out to almost interminable lengths.

Let me propose to you that the judge who feels that by giving attorneys leeway to take time to state to him, over and over, day after day, principles and doctrines of the law which he knows before they begin to talk, is mistaken when he supposes he thereby wins and holds the good opinion of those he so allows to impose upon him. No man in any position wins the respect of another by allowing that other to impose upon him. No lawyer compliments a judge by undertaking in argument to instruct him in elementary principles; and by the practice and indulgence both fail in their duty to the Government and to the people of which it is composed.

Delays which occur in the administration of criminal laws, the trial and termination of criminal causes in the Federal courts, are due almost entirely to two causes—one, the provisions of our statute for removal of indicted persons from a judicial district where found and arrested to the judicial district in which the indictment is found and pending.

If a respondent has plenty of means—and ingenious counsel willing to receive a part of them—he may keep the prosecuting officers busy for two years or more in hearings in every grade of tribunal from United States commissioner to Supreme Court of the United States, before he can be taken from Chevy Chase, Md., into the District of Columbia for trial, though he has no defense whatever to the charge against him; for two years or more before he can be taken across the line between Brooklyn and New York City; from Maine to California; from any judicial district to another.

Nearly every Attorney General of the United States for 25 years past has called the attention of the Congress to this situation, but until the present Congress nothing has been done.

A bill to remedy it by empowering the judge of any United States court to issue a bench warrant founded on an indictment returned in his court, which shall run to and be served in any judicial district, has passed the House, is now on the Senate calendar upon a favorable report of the Judiciary Committee, and, I have no doubt, will become a law before the end of the Seventieth Congress, to its everlasting credit.

The other source of delay in bringing violators of the criminal law to justice is the entirely inadequate force of judges in some districts.

Wherever there are not enough judges to keep the calendar current, almost every respondent brought before the court demands a trial by jury, simply and only because he knows he can not be tried for a long time to come. If the court were in position to give him a jury trial at once, it would be the last thing he would ask for, instead of the first. Bills creating several new judgeships have been passed by the House, favorably reported in the Senate, and are now on the calendar. The Senate will, of course, pass them as soon as reached.

The Congress can and will give us a sufficient judicial force, and take away the obstacles to speedy trial existing in the removal proceedings it created years ago when means of transportation and communication were entirely different from the present; but judge and counsel alone can expedite business once the accused is in court.

Now I fear I have not told you anything new, but am consoled by the thought that probably it is nearer true than we realize that "there is no new thing under the sun."

I had intended to stop along about here, but when I read over what I have said about expediting business, and more speedy and certain administration of justice, I fear that it gives the impression of seeking means to secure more convictions, whether they ought to be secured or not. I would not have it so. I would that in the interpretation, application, and execution of the law, we use our reasoning faculties "in the spirit of moderation, the true spirit of our law," to secure right results, whether the judgments be for the Government or against it. I would always keep in mind that:

"These six things doth the Lord hate. Yea, seven, are an abomination unto Him: A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood; an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief; a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren."

And that a good chart for the guidance of a lawyer is:

"He will magnify the law and make it honorable."

"He shall not cry, nor lift up nor cause his voice to be heard in the street."

"A bruised reed he shall not break, and the smoking flax he shall not quench; he shall bring forth judgment unto truth."

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement the amendment is to be voted on in about five minutes. I recognize that I have taken a certain advantage of the rule in the fight I have made against the amendment, but I remind the Senate that the committee has taken advantage of another rule also. When the committee inserted in the bill an appropriation which has not yet been authorized by the joint resolution which passed the Senate, but is still pending in the House, it took advantage of a provision which was placed in the rules of the Senate for the purpose of meeting emergencies in the closing days of a session. I would not repeal the rule if I could. I believe it is a proper rule. But I submit that it was taken advantage of in a way that was never intended by those who framed the rules of the Senate, because it was taken advantage of to put an amendment on the bill which would not have been in order except for this provision of the rule which was made to meet the emergency conditions; and there is no emergency demanding an appropriation at this time for a survey of the Nicaragua canal area.

The fact of the matter is that with relations existing as they do between this country and Nicaragua, especially the fact that we have armed forces in Nicaragua, it is all the more important that we should do nothing that will give cause or color to the belief on the part of South and Central American people that we are taking whatever steps are necessary to be taken to justify the retaining of the marines in Nicaragua. Because the committee did take that advantage, I felt called upon to oppose the amendment as vigorously as I could.

I recognize that Senators were kept here late last night. I regretted that it became necessary, but I submit that I was not entirely to blame for the time that was taken. I want to say here and now that there is not another provision in this appropriation bill, and it is probable that in many years there has not been an appropriation put in any appropriation bill as this one was put in the pending bill, when there was no urgent demand for it.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] last night stated that he had nothing to do with putting in the amendment, which is all the more proof to me that the administration is demanding that there be something done in Nicaragua regarding the canal to justify keeping the marines down there when the causes for keeping them there are fast vanishing and they can not be maintained there in the face of the public opinion of the world which demands that these armed forces come out when order has been established, as it has been established in Nicaragua.

Mr. President, I recognize that the vote of the Senate will be to override my objection. I have done what I could to prevent steps being taken, which, in my judgment, will give new reasons for keeping the marines there and will result in their being kept there possibly permanently from now on. I think it is a crime against the young men of our country, who, in their patriotic desire to serve their country, take the oath of allegiance to the Government and the flag, and then are used by the Government to collect the money of investors in that country, to maintain a banking system that no self-respecting country on earth would permit to continue if it had the power to prevent it, and to be used for the purpose of working the will, not of this Government, but of private individuals who have investments in Nicaragua.

I have no apologies to make for the fight I have made against the amendment. If it were not in the very closing hours of the session, when I recognize a great appropriation bill is pending here, I would continue the fight for some time to come.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired under the unanimous-consent agreement. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] to the committee amendment found on page 108, line 5.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. DILL asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this the amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment for the benefit of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The amendment of the Senator from Washington to the committee amendment is, on page 108, line 5, to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$75,000."

Mr. NORRIS. I have no desire to call for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. DILL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is ill and confined to his home. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], but I am advised that if present he would vote as I expect to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I wish to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. LARRAZOLO] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. STECK], and the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 19, as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 173, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 2. The Personnel Classification Board, within 30 days after the enactment of this act, shall review the allocations of all positions which, on June 30, 1928, were allocated in grades 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the professional and scientific service, and grades 11, 12, 13, and 14 of the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service, and of the compensation schedules set forth in the classification act of 1923 (covering salary rates from $3,800 to $7,500) (U. S. C. 65–71, secs. 661–673), and which have not been allocated, with the approval of such board, to the grades of such compensation schedules as amended by the act of May 28, 1928 (covering salary rates from $3,800 to $9,000) (45 Stat. 776–785). Such allocations shall be made by the board in such a manner as to reduce the total annual rate of compensation of the whole number of positions in all of such grades by not less than $500,000. The board, immediately upon completion of the review of the allocations herein directed to be made, shall certify their allocations to the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments who, within 10 days after the receipt of such certification, shall put such allocations into effect: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall operate to reduce the rate of compensation any person was receiving on June 30, 1928: Provided further, That the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments, who, pursuant to authority to adjust the pay of certain civilian positions in the field services to correspond as nearly as may be practicable to the rates established for similar positions under the classification act of 1923, as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, have made such adjustments in the field services, shall, within 60 days after the enactment of this act, readjust the compensation of such of the field positions as may be necessary to make the compensation thereof in conformity with the allocations herein directed for the departmental service in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That any balances under appropriations or portions of appropriations, including continuing appropriations, available during the period of the remainder of the fiscal year 1929 and the entire fiscal year 1930, respectively, which result from the compensation of positions under the provisions of this section at rates lower than those permitted for such positions from July 1, 1928, to the date of the enactment of this act, shall not be expended for any other purpose but shall be reserved and allowed to lapse at the close of the respective fiscal years: Provided further, That the Personnel Classification Board shall have sole jurisdiction finally to determine the grade, or subdivision thereof, to which shall be allocated any position which is subject to the compensation schedules of the classification act of 1923, as amended, and shall have authority to ascertain the facts as to the duties and responsibilities of any such position and to review and change the allocation thereof whenever, in its opinion, the facts warrant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the committee amendment on page 173 been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment on page 173 to strike out section 2 has been agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there are certain amendments which the committee wishes to present. I send such an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, line 17, after the name "Bureau of Standards," to strike out "1929"; and in line 20, after the word "the," to insert "fiscal year 1929."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I also am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I now send to the clerk's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, after line 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

Fifteenth Decennial Census: Of the amount appropriated under this head in the act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, approved January 25, 1929, the amount therein made immediately available is hereby increased to $250,000: Provided, That during the period of the Fifteenth Decennial Census enumeration, employees of other departments of the Government may be employed, with the consent of the heads of the respective departments, and compensated for field work in connection with the taking of this census, and, when so employed, shall not be subject to the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, or to the acts of May 10, 1916, and August 29, 1916: Provided further, That the Director of the Census may fix the number and compensation of supervisors, enumerators, and special agents, without regard to the provisions of existing legislation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does a point of order lie against this amendment, in view of the fact that there has been no census legislation this year?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I make the point of order; yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I offered the amendment, realizing that it might be objected to; but I hoped to secure unanimous consent to it because I believed it was necessary, and I wanted to bring it before the Senate. I hope the Senator, therefore, will not consider it necessary to object to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the census situation now is in very unsatisfactory shape, of course, because the census is to be taken under the old law unless the new law passes either now or very early in the special session.

Mr. WARREN. This amendment, the Senator will see, provides for making this money available at an earlier time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand the position taken by the chairman of the committee. On the other hand, I have taken my stand on a principle, and the principle involves the proposition that the Senate is going to do nothing with census legislation until it can be assured of a constitutional census. I shall have to make the point of order, stating, in addition, that negotiations are now being undertaken to straighten out the entire matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of the last provision in the form of a proviso—

That the Director of the Census may fix the number and compensation of supervisors, enumerators, and special agents, without regard to the provisions of existing legislation—the chair will hold that this is legislation on an appropriation bill, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I am instructed to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 15, after the word "expended," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That any funds herein or hereafter appropriated to enable the commission to carry out the provisions of Public Resolution No. 74, Seventieth Congress, approved December 21, 1928, may be expended for the purposes hereinbefore stated on approval by the commission, or by a duly authorized executive officer designated by the commission and acting under instructions of the commission; and payments on account of expenditures thus approved by the commission, or by its duly authorized agent acting under instructions of the commission, may be made by such disbursing officer as the commission may designate, and the commission, or its duly authorized agent acting under its instructions, may authorize said disbursing officer to make to the insular treasury such advances of funds as may be appropriate for effecting payments for the purposes and in the manner hereinbefore authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] to an amendment, which the committee unanimously instructed me to offer on the floor; and I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

Expenses of attorneys, Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians of Oklahoma (tribal funds): The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to use not to exceed the sum of $2,000 from the tribal funds of the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians of Oklahoma in the Treasury of the United States, upon proper vouchers to be approved by him, for costs and expenses already incurred and those to be incurred by their duly authorized attorneys in the prosecution of the claims of said Indians now pending in the Court of Claims, Docket No. E–542, including expenses of not exceeding two delegates from said bands of Indians, to be designated by the business committee representing all said bands, who may be called to Washington from time to time with the permission of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on business connected with said claims, said $2,000 to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is an amendment with relation to the Yellowstone Park which provides for the sale of the surplus elk that are not needed, that are neither useful nor ornamental there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 52, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following as a separate paragraph:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion, and under regulations to be prescribed by him, to sell or otherwise dispose of the surplus elk from the Yellowstone National Park herd, and all moneys received from the sale of any such surplus elk shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send to the desk another matter which is a slight correction of the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 86, in line 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "for either project."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. That is all I have for the present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask whether the amendment the Senator is about to propose is one of those as to which there is a time limit?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, after line 7, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

Kiowa Indian Hospital, Oklahoma: For the construction at the Kiowa Indian Hospital, located at the Fort Sill School Reservation, in Comanche County, Okla., of hospital quarters to accommodate 100 patients, gravel roads, floor coverings for old hospital, and additional equipment, all as authorized by the act approved November 2, 1921 (Public 85, 67th Cong.), $91,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask what limitation of time applies to this amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have three amendments, and I understand that under the unanimous-consent agreement I have 30 minutes; but I shall occupy only a very small part of that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee if he can not accept this amendment? It is estimated for.

Mr. WARREN. I shall be glad to have a little explanation of the amendment. If what I have heard regarding it is true, it is a matter that I think might be considered wisely.

Mr. EDGE. Let us have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be restated.

The Chief Clerk restated the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, do I understand that this hospital is erected with Indian funds?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If I may make a short statement, I think I will have answered most of the questions that might be propounded.

This money is sought for the purpose of extending and enlarging an existing Indian hospital. This amendment has somewhat of a history. The Indian Bureau recommended the item in the early part of this session. The Budget Bureau recommended the item. It was inserted in the Interior Department bill by the House. At that time the funds were to be taken from the Indians' trust fund. The bill then came to the Senate. Because the hospital is a general hospital and serves some 13 tribes of Indians in southwestern Oklahoma——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Is the hospital at present used for the various bands?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. The hospital was built by and for the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, but is now used as a general hospital for all Indians.

When this bill came to the Senate, the Indians owning the hospital objected to having their tribal funds taken to build a general hospital. The hospital is now large enough to accommodate the particular Indians who built it, but at this time this hospital is open to all Indians, and some 50 per cent of the patients are Indians of tribes other than Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches. Early in this session this item was placed in the Interior Department bill, but the money was to come from the Indians' trust funds. The bill came to the Senate in that form.

I went before the Senate committee and asked that the funds be taken from the Federal Treasury, and the committee kindly acceded to my request, and the Interior Department bill was sent back to the House with the item amended as indicated.

The House refused to agree to the Senate amendment, and in conference the Senate committee yielded to the House conferees, and the item was eliminated from the bill entirely.

I was not willing that the Indians' trust fund should be used for this purpose, and the Senate conferees did not insist that this money should be taken from the Federal Treasury, and the item died. Recently the Congressman representing this district, Congressman JOHNSON, introduced a bill providing for the enlargement of this hospital. The Indian Bureau again recommended the proposal. The Budget Bureau now recommends the item as a proper charge against the Federal Treasury. I submit for the RECORD the report made on the House bill and ask that such report be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. CARTWRIGHT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 16822):

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16822) to authorize the expenditure of $91,000 to enlarge and buy equipment for the Kiowa Indian Hospital, located at the Fort Sill School Reservation in Comanche County, Okla., having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass without amendment.

This bill, if enacted, would authorize an appropriation of $91,000 to enlarge and equip the Kiowa Indian Hospital on the Fort Sill School Reservation in Oklahoma. The hospital serves the Indian population of Kiowa Agency, about 5,290 persons. It has a rated capacity of 52 beds, 10 of which are on porches and are used principally for tuberculosis patients. The number of patients is so great as to make present facilities inadequate, and is steadily growing.

The conditions and plan for construction are discussed in the following favorable report of the Secretary of the Interior, to which is attached notation of Budget approval:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 21, 1929.

Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: Further reference is made to your request of February 4 for a report on H. R. 16822, being a bill to authorize the expenditure of $91,000 to enlarge and buy equipment for the Kiowa Indian Hospital, located at the Fort Sill School Reservation in Comanche County, Okla.

The Kiowa Hospital serves the Indian population of Kiowa Agency, numbering 5,290, and has a rated capacity of 52 beds, of which 10 beds are on porches and used principally for the treatment of tuberculosis patients. The daily average number of patients in this hospital during the fiscal years 1926, 1927, and 1928 was 33.2, 34.4, and 43.5, respectively. During 1927 there were 41 births, and during 1928 there were 53 births in the hospital.

The construction of a building for the housing of approximately 15 employees will provide living quarters for those now quartered in the hospital proper in space needed for operation of the institution and the convenience and welfare of the patients, the release of which space will provide for approximately 10 additional patients' beds. The quartering of this personnel outside of the hospital proper is of important consideration, both from the standpoint of patient welfare and comfort of the personnel so employed. The estimated cost of construction, which should be of brick for permanency and to conform to the type of construction now in use, together with the necessary furnishings and equipment, will be approximately $20,000.

As noted above, Kiowa Hospital is being patronized to an increasing degree from year to year. At times the facilities of the present structure are taxed and the number of patients exceeds the ordinary bed capacity. A larger number of tuberculosis cases should and could be given care and treatment in this hospital if additional facilities were provided. During 1927, of 1,000 examinations made, 104 cases of pulmonary and 18 other forms of tuberculosis were reported, a total of 122. During 1928, 400 examinations were made with 85 cases reported positive for tuberculosis. The deaths from tuberculosis for the last several years are as follows: In 1923, 27 deaths; in 1925, 8 deaths; in 1926, 18 deaths; in 1927, 16 deaths; and during 1928, 10 deaths.

The present hospital building is of brick construction and will lend itself readily to additional construction approximately doubling its capacity. It is now of a T shape and construction to make it of an H shape would approximately double the bed capacity and still utilize the same kitchen and other service space, making the capacity 100 or more beds.

The sum of $71,000 would provide for additional construction to make the total capacity at least 100 beds and also provide needed equipment in the existing hospital, roads, sidewalks, etc., together with funds needed for operating expense on account of the increased patronage of the existing facilities, which with $20,000 for employees' quarters makes a total of $91,000.

Under date of February 15, 1929, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget advises that the proposed legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Very truly yours, ROY O. WEST.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the record just made is, I think, ample evidence that this provision is authorized. It has already passed the other House once, and has likewise passed this body; but for fear that that point might be raised in conference, I now submit for the RECORD a copy of what is known as the Snyder bill. This bill provides, in two places, ample authority for the construction of this hospital. One line is as follows:

For relief of distress and conservation of health.

The second provision is—

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

I submit a copy of this law and ask that same be printed at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Public—No. 85—67th Cong.]

An act (H. R. 7848) authorizing appropriations and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate, for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes:

General support and civilization, including education.

For relief of distress and conservation of health.

For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property.

For extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems and for development of water supplies.

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

For the employment of inspectors, supervisors, superintendents, clerks, field matrons, farmers, physicians, Indian police, Indian judges, and other employees.

For the suppression of traffic in intoxicating liquor and deleterious drugs.

For the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

And for general and incidental expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs.

Approved, November 2, 1921.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on a former occasion it was alleged here that these Indians are very wealthy, that they have large tribal funds, vast areas of oil lands, and that their income is something like $2,000,000 per year. At this point I submit for the RECORD, without having it read, a statement showing the condition of their fund. Their total fund now amounts to approximately $1,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement of the tribal funds in the Treasury of the Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche Indians

Title of funds	Balances Jan. 7, 1929	Income, fiscal year 1928
Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche fund	$91.22
Interest on Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche fund	5,542.44	$4.56
Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche 4 per cent fund	67,436.24	241.82
Interest on Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche 4 per cent fund	20,241.71	9,927.15
Kiowa Agency Hospital 4 per cent fund	9,360.90	1,239.12
Interest on Kiowa Agency Hospital 4 per cent fund	697.27	326.76
Proceeds of oil and gas, south half of Red River, Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, Oklahoma	964,082.80	127,980.57
Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Kiowa Indians	2,991.52	468.93
Total	1,070,444.10	140,188.91

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Now, Mr. President, as to the need for this hospital:

A few days ago I sent a telegram to the chamber of commerce of the city nearest this hospital, asking for information relative to the institution. I now send to the desk and ask to have read a copy of my telegram and a copy of the reply received in answer thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegrams.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 8, 1929.

I. E. TURBEN,
President Chamber of Commerce,
Lawton, Okla.:

Please advise me by wire relative hospital as follows: Number regular beds. Number patients now. Number whites, if any. Number Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches. Number of other tribes itemized.

ELMER THOMAS.

Reply to above inquiry:

Number regular beds, 42. Number patients to-day, 51. Number whites, none. Number Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches, 36. Number other tribes, 15, as follows: 11 Caddos and Wichitas; 2 Choctaws; 2 Chinooks, Riverside employees. Daily average first six months fiscal year, 46 plus. Daily average for January, 61 plus. Nine employees quartered in hospital, two in basement. Overflow has been taken care of with cots and two patients in a bed. Need urgent. We will appreciate your earnest efforts.

I. E. TURBEN,
President Lawton Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the record thus shows that we have there a hospital with 42 beds, and that during a recent month sixty-odd patients were cared for in such institution, and that in some instances two sick Indians were confined to a single bed. Why, Mr. President, even the horses of the Government, when they become ill, are allowed a single stall.

On yesterday, knowing that this item would come up soon, I wired to Oklahoma in order to ascertain the condition of Enoch Hoag, chief of the Caddo Tribe of Indians. Chief Hoag is a fine type of Indian. He has a band of 600 members. For 50 years he has been the head of the Caddo tribe. His band has followed him all these years as children follow a father. He is ill now, seriously ill. I saw him during the recent campaign, at the home of his son, the family residing in a small box house. He was paralyzed; confined to his bed, could not talk, entirely helpless, and because the little hospital on the reservation was filled to overflowing, this Indian chieftain, a credit to his race, was compelled to exist in the rough, crude house of his son with only such attention as a dutiful Indian son could provide for his aged and dying father. I received a very prompt reply to my message. I send to the desk a copy of my message of inquiry and likewise the reply, and ask that both be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 27, 1929.

J. A. BUNTIN,
Superintendent Kiowa Agency, Anadarko, Okla.:

If Enoch Hoag is dead give date and place of death. If alive give present address and statement relative to medical attention and nurse assistance. Answer by wire.

ELMER THOMAS.

ANADARKO, OKLA., February 27, 1929.

ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate:

Enoch Hoag living with daughter near Binger. He is paralyzed and helpless. Needs constant care. McCOWN.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will not take further time of the Senate at this time. I am very much interested in the remnants of the once proud tribes of Indians who owned and ruled this entire country of ours. These Indians have no one to speak for them save their very few friends throughout the country, and to-day they present the appearance of a neglected and vanishing race.

The Indians have a difficult time to get along. They have a long road to go to get relief. They must first go to their Indian agent and get his recommendation. They must then come to Washington and get by the Indian Bureau. They must then go to the Budget Bureau and get by there. They must then come to Congress and appear before the various committees and secure favorable action by the Houses themselves before they can get a single dollar of their own money for almost any purpose whatever. One bureau or department may favor relief for them, but some place along the line they meet obstruction, and their relief fails.

I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As a matter of information for the Senate, the Chair would like to say that on last evening before we adjourned a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into allowing a certain amount of time for certain Senators, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. The Chair will recognize those Senators in the order given.

The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, after line 7, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

That there is hereby appropriated from the tribal trust fund, established by the joint resolution of Congress approved June 12, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 740), being a part of the Indians' share of moneys derived from the south half of the Red River in Oklahoma, the sum of $200,000 for payment to the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma: Provided, That said sum shall be distributed share and share alike to all recognized members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes who are living on the date of passage of this act, under such regulation as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and that said sum herein appropriated shall be immediately available for distribution as provided herein.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether this amount is necessary for these Indians at this time?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Indian agent on the reservation says it is. The Indian Bureau says it is. I join in their opinion and indorse the item. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has considered this matter and reported the item favorably, and it is now upon our calendar awaiting its turn for consideration.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator knows very well, of course, that this is subject to a point of order, and I think that unless it is necessary for these Indians it should remain out of the bill, because, as I understand it, they have a large amount of funds, and are receiving, of course, their regular interest, I take it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have just submitted a statement showing that their fund is less than a million dollars, and their annual income is less than $100,000, of which $60,000 is taken each year to maintain their agency. These Indians are required to pay their own money to maintain an agency at Anadarko, and, of course, they object to that.

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, as a member of the committee, if the Senator on his honor and conscience thinks these Indians need this, I am not going to object to its going to the House for consideration.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is all I ask.

Mr. WARREN. As I said before, I expect the cooperation of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer one other amendment, and then I shall be through. I ask that the letter accompanying it be also read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment and the letter.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 47, after the amendments heretofore agreed to, insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may prescribe, to establish an employment agency for the Indian Service, to be under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the purpose of procuring employment for Indians; and there is hereby appropriated for this purpose the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 27, 1929.

Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: This will refer further to your letter of February 14, transmitting for report and recommendation a copy of H. R. 17078, authorizing an employment agency for the Indian Service.

This department believes that the decades of supervision which the Government has exercised over the Indians has developed them to the point where they are prepared for a steadily increasing participation in the industrial life of the Nation. Practically all the younger Indians have had a degree of schooling which gave them the proper mental conception of work and prepared them therefor. The rapid development of the West has created a demand for their services which presents a favorable opportunity for employment. The situation to-day is favorable to make immediate progress toward a solution of the problem by establishing the Indian as a wage earner, gaining a competence for himself. When an Indian reaches this stage he need no longer be a ward of the Government. He and his children take their places as normal members of the body politic. So far as he is concerned, the Indian problem has been solved.

On this point the report on Indian administration made last year by the Institute for Government Research says:

"The Indian Service must seek to find suitable employment off the reservation for Indians who have no real chance there or who desire to seek other employment. * * * The Indian Service must attempt to place the Indians who leave school and help them to become established in productive enterprises."

The Board of Indian Commissioners expresses a similar view in its last annual report.

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is urged to establish an organization within the Bureau of Indian Affairs for the purpose of securing gainful work for the Indians who are under Federal supervision for placing in the Government service or in offices, shops, stores, or in domestic service boys and girls who leave the Indian Service school."

The creation of an employment service for Indians would be a practical and constructive step toward that assimilation which has always been the Government's policy. The time for solution has come. This is the next logical step in Indian administration. Field reports indicate a notable awakening by the Indians to the need of individual effort and a willingness to respond to governmental plans for their welfare and progress to a greater extent than ever before. In order to not disappoint them, this necessarily means increased activity on our part if this newly aroused interest is to be adequately directed and brought to ultimate success.

It is, therefore, recommended that the bill be given favorable consideration.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget advises that the proposed legislation is not in conflict with the President's financial program.

Very truly yours,

ROY O. WEST.

Mr. WARREN. I shall have to object to that. I make a point of order against it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, let me say, before the matter is passed on, that this amendment has been suggested by a bureau which has made a general survey into Indian conditions. The Bureau of Indian Affairs recommends the item. The Bureau of the Budget has recommended it. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations desires to interpose a point of order, of course, I must submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Chair now recognizes the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, last night when the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into by which I was allowed 20 minutes to speak on an amendment I then had in mind, I did not know that I would offer another slight amendment which might take 5 minutes, and I inquire now whether any time I take on this amendment will be taken out of the 20 minutes I was to have on the other?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would have to be, under the agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I offer the following amendment. I hope that the Senator from Wyoming will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 71, after line 21, add the following:

American group of the Interparliamentary Union: In order to assist in meeting the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, such appropriation to be disbursed on vouchers to be approved by the president and the executive secretary of the American group; and any unexpended balance remaining of the appropriation made for this purpose by the act approved May 29, 1928, is hereby made available until expended.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is for a purpose similar to what we have provided for, I think, annually, in relation to our international obligations, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 77, after line 11, insert the following:

Studies in rural sanitation: For an additional amount for studies in rural sanitation, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1930, $130,500.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator give us a little explanation of that, briefly?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly. This amendment has for its purpose the appropriation of an additional sum for rural sanitation in the seven States that were inundated by the floods of 1927 and 1928, over and above the amount carried in the regular appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Is it intended to save life and protect the health of the inhabitants?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that for the current fiscal year, ending on the 30th of next June, Congress appropriated almost $400,000 for this purpose, on the recommendation, largely, of the Secretary of Commerce, now the President elect, who made a personal inspection.

Mr. WARREN. That is, for the fiscal year 1930?

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment of mine is for the fiscal year 1930, so as to bring the amount for next year practically up to the amount carried for the current year. We do not expect this appropriation to go on indefinitely, but there have been two floods, the flood of 1927, for which we made appropriations——

Mr. WARREN. Is any portion of that fund to be used as a deficiency in the next three or four months.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the amount that was appropriated by the regular appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1929, and also the deficiency bill, which carried an item of $115,000 for this purpose, is presumably sufficient to carry on the work until July 1. This amendment is to bring the appropriation for the fiscal year 1930 up to an amount approximately equal to the appropriation for the current year.

This is urged and recommended by the Bureau of Public Health. I have letters here from the public health commissioners of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Illinois, asking for this appropriation, and they say that in view of the floods in 1928, which resulted in the destruction of another crop, the various counties in these seven States, 96 in number, are unable to take up this work and carry it on for the next year, if the Federal Government withdraws this amount from the appropriation that has been expended and available for this year.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I would not have any objection if they would include Montana and Wyoming and Utah in the bill, so we could get some of it for the floods that have taken place out there in our section of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the language of the appropriation does not limit it to any State. It can be used wherever it might be necessary. The item was increased in the appropriation bill of the last Congress because the floods had destroyed the roads and schoolhouses and by reason of the settlement of sediment unhealthy conditions in that section of the country had brought about almost an epidemic. If the appropriation is denied, in view of the great number of men who are to be in the near future sent into the Mississippi Valley in connection with flood control, it will result in a recurrence of disease and an epidemic of disease.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows, of course, that the amendment is not in order. However, I am not going to make the point of order. The Senator says, and I have every reason to believe him, that it is a matter of health.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is necessary now to have the appropriation. He already has an appropriation sufficient to carry through to the end of the fiscal year. There is also an appropriation for the next fiscal year. What he is doing now is asking us to make an appropriation which is not going to be used for a full year hence, because of the fact that if the Senator spends as much as he has for the present year, which has already been appropriated, it would carry the matter to a year from now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Unless the appropriation is made, when July 1 arrives the personnel of the organization, which has been filled up by the various public health services in the State in cooperation with the Secretary of Commerce, who was also head of the Red Cross, will have to be disbanded and there will be a hiatus and it will be impossible for us to replace them later. There is no assurance that any appropriation of any kind will be passed during the extra session.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question of the extra session but at the regular session, when there would still be ample time.

Mr. BARKLEY. We would have from July 1 until the 1st of December or practically the 1st of January, six months, during which time the entire organization, which is now functioning in the Mississippi Valley, in these various States would be disbanded and disorganized, and it would cost more to get them back together than the appropriation amounts to.

Mr. SMOOT. Am I to understand the Senator to mean that the organization is going to be continued right along because of the fact that there was a flood in some of the Southern States?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; not at all. The health departments of the States which are asking for this appropriation do not expect that. They had hoped to be able to recommend a reduction of 50 per cent in the appropriation, but the recurrence of another flood in 1928 caused the various counties, which are putting up one-half of the necessary amount to bring about a rehabilitation of health conditions, to lose a second crop, and as testified by various county judges and State boards of health they are absolutely unable to assume the burden of the work in view of the disorganized economic condition. If the appropriation is denied, then the work will have to be begun at the beginning again, and that, of course, is not desirable.

Mr. SMOOT. All I want to say so far as the West is concerned is that we have never felt, when we had a flood, that we should come to Congress and ask to have an organization protected by appropriations from the Federal Government, and then keep it in operation from year to year.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Mississippi Valley situation offers a peculiar proposition that does not exist anywhere else in the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with my remarks and in connection with the amendment just agreed to, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD letters from various county judges and public-health officers, including the Bureau of Public Health, in behalf of the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

FEBRUARY 16, 1929.

Undersecretary OGDEN L. MILLS,
Budget Officer, United States Treasury Department,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Public Health Service is in receipt of recent detailed data from the State health officers in the territory affected by the Mississippi flood setting forth conditions in that area which it is believed merit consideration in behalf of an additional appropriation for flood sanitation during the fiscal year 1930. It is the plea of these State health officers that the funds to be made available for this work during the fiscal year 1930 be of the same amount as those for the current year. This would require an additional appropriation of $130,000.

Information is requested as to whether an estimate for this purpose might still be in time to receive consideration.

Respectfully,

H. S. CUMMING, Surgeon General.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
Louisville, Ky., January 28, 1929.

Dr. W. L. DRAPER,
Assistant Surgeon General,
United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DOCTOR DRAPER: I am transmitting to you under separate cover budgets for the cooperative full-time county health departments (flood area) which we are proposing for the fiscal year July 1, 1929, to June 30, 1930. You will note there are two sets of these—one prepared on the basis of budgets operating since the beginning of this work and the other contemplating a cut of 50 per cent by the service and 25 per cent the last six months by the Rockefeller Foundation.

In urging that the service adopt the budget with financial aid, as per previous agreements, I am but fulfilling an obligation not only to the counties in Kentucky that are benefited, but also to the participating outside agencies, including the Public Health Service. This has been an investment in life saving that we can not afford to see cut off or even curtailed until it is possible to make local adjustments sufficient to insure a continuing program. None of the counties involved in the floods of 1927 and 1928 will be in position this year to carry the burden of withdrawals as are contemplated in the second budget.

These flooded counties offer many problems in local financing that merit serious consideration in planning a continuing health program. They had hardly recovered from the shock of the 1927 flood, and certainly were in no sense rehabilitated, when they were visited in June, 1928, with a second flood which approached nearly the same severity in most of the counties, and in some even much worse. Crops were again destroyed, industry in small towns and mining centers hard hit; in fact, from an economic standpoint they were largely back where they were in 1927. The health departments were called upon to assist in caring for the needy, to again launch an antityphoid-fever campaign, and to aid in the general clean-up made necessary from the widespread scattering of débris and filth of all kinds. I am sure you can understand from your vast experience in public-health work that the conditions met with in these succeeding disasters can not be overcome and the health program made self-supporting in the time limit of the present budgets, and that there are too many other factors entering into the counties' obligations to warrant the hope that they could assume any larger support within a year.

The Kentucky Legislature does not meet until January, 1930, at which time it will act upon budget bills for the two fiscal years beginning July 1, 1930. For this reason there is no possibility of increasing the State's contribution to these cooperative units.

In the budgets submitted, calling for a 50 per cent reduction by the Public Health Service, you will find notations at bottom for each county that indicate the problems influencing local financing. The statute limitation for tax levy in support of a full-time health department is one-half mill on each dollar of assessed valuation, and you will note that in more than 50 per cent of the budgets this maximum levy would produce less than the amount charged to the county in the reduced budget. This is a condition that we will have to look to legislation for relief.

In practically every county there has been such reduction in crop output for two years that the people have been strained to the limit to meet their needs; the response to the work of the health departments has grown out of the health officers' and nurses' sympathetic understanding of these conditions and these untiring workers have served the public in many capacities—supplies from the Red Cross and other helpful sources have been distributed under the guidance of the health staff; biologicals for protection against smallpox, typhoid fever, and diphtheria have been secured without cost to the fiscal court or the individuals. These are but illustrations that could be multiplied many times in reciting facts of service rendered to those who could have recourse to no other agency than the health department.

Many of the counties involved are in the coal belt of eastern Kentucky, and here this industry has been hard hit. In many instances the smaller operations have been closed for a year. Perry County, one of the largest producers of soft coal, had two bank failures in 1928, and the adjoining county of Letcher had one failure. In Perry County one bank that failed was the depository for county funds and will involve the credit of the county for years. The health officer lost $500 in this failure. The entire coal belt has suffered from depression, and naturally this reacts upon the fiscal affairs of each county.

Prior to the flood of 1927 practically every county had bonded itself for road building and in these two years suceeding have been forced to draw upon general funds for expenses incidental to road-building programs, such as condemnation suits for right of way, etc. To this already expensive road outlay was added the burden of bridges washed out, miles of road work destroyed, and culverts and drains ruined. Repair work in these instances has been a matter of first emergency and necessarily expensive. It will be years before these counties can recover sufficiently to balance out in their road-construction program.

I have tried to cover the situation affecting the need for further full support of health work in the flooded counties of Kentucky in much detail. We can not afford to see this work retarded now; too much has been accomplished to let it slip back. The future depends upon our assuring the financial support during the succeeding fiscal year 1929 and 1930.

The second (reducing) budget is submitted only to illustrate the practical impossibility of carrying on with the plan involving a larger participation by counties this year.

May I respectfully urge that the service secure the adoption of the budget for continued full support of this sorely needed health program.

Respectfully yours,

P. E. BLACKERBY,
Director Bureau of Public Health Work.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH,
New Orleans, January 22, 1929.

Dr. W. F. DRAPER,
Assistant Surgeon General,
United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DOCTOR DRAPER: From observation and investigation of conditions in the flooded parishes I am thoroughly convinced that they are in a worse financial condition now than they were in the year of the flood. You will recall the flood came in the year 1927, in the spring, and taxes had already been assessed and gathered for the year, largely. Since that time there has been a marked decrease in the parish assets, due to larger assessments. It is clear that this gives each parish less funds than before for its operation.

It is impossible to give details concerning each parish, but we know they can not increase their allotment for unit work in 1929. The parish officials concur in this statement, and they are supported by the figures concerning values and income in the official offices of the various parishes. They need help even more than they did in 1927, and I sincerely trust that there will be no lessening in the assistance given them.

Very sincerely yours, OSCAR DOWLING, President.

Doctor Akins will write more in detail.—D.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH,
Nashville, Tenn., January 21, 1929.

Dr. W. F. DRAPER,
Assistant Surgeon General,
United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been requested by Doctor McCormack to transmit to you all possible details supporting the service in a request for deficiency appropriation in order to bring the item up to last year's Federal contribution in the flood counties.

In the three counties in Tennessee—Dyer, Lake, and Lauderdale, together with central administration—it is almost out of the question to increase local appropriations, in view of the fact that two of the counties are in such circumstances that it would be detrimental to the program to ask for an increase. In Lake, where we have our greatest problem, the county's ability to pay is far less than any other county even under normal conditions, but at present we do not believe it advisable to ask them to increase their appropriation; and unless the Public Health Service keeps up its commitment we are going to suffer. This will be a great drawback.

In Dyer County the appropriation has been slightly increased in order to add another worker. We are not able at present to persuade this county (and it would not be wise to undertake to persuade them) to further increase their appropriation. This has been mentioned to them, and they absolutely will not hear to it. We are making efforts to increase local appropriations in Lauderdale County, but this will not add much to the efficiency of the work except in one way, and that is increase the salaries of the individuals that are now in the unit in order to hold them in their county.

I sincerely trust that you will use all arguments possible to sustain my request that the appropriation be maintained and brought up to last year's commitment.

Please let me know if there is any further information I can give you, as we want to give you all the cooperation possible in supporting an argument to maintain these county health departments. Otherwise, most of the work we have done will be lost.

Very truly yours,

E. L. BISHOP, M. D.,
Commissioner of Public Health.

ARKANSAS STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Little Rock, January 17, 1929.

Asst. Surg. Gen. W. F. DRAPER,
United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR DOCTOR DRAPER: I am submitting to you, herewith, information relative to the counties of Arkansas that had been flooded in 1927 and were again flooded in 1928, showing the imperative need of health work and continued Federal appropriations to carry out same.

Before the counties could recover from the tremendous devastation and money loss caused by the flood of 1927, another flood occurred in July, 1928, and many of the counties were hard hit. Out of the original 20 flood counties of 1927, 15 were seriously affected by the flood of 1928 and an additional hardship imposed by these conditions. The crops, which had been planted, were lost and the season being so far advanced, the only crop which could have been planted and offered a satisfactory harvest was corn.

In view of this condition, a request for an appropriation for health work was made and it was felt, by local authorities, that with these hardships already existing in the counties increased appropriations could not be asked for. All of the 20 counties responded and 4 of the counties which were too poverty-stricken to appropriate during 1927 agreed to appropriate $1,500 each for the continuation of this work. Some of the counties that were financially able appropriated a little more than they were asked.

Inclosed report shows the comparative crop acres flooded in 1927 and 1928, and also the appropriations for 1927 and 1928 made by the counties themselves. It can be readily seen that where people are so desirous of the work and where such a great deal has been accomplished it would be disastrous to curtail this work, and in view of the expressions of these counties in favor of the work, every effort should be made by the Government to assist these people in carrying on. It must be considered that these counties have not recovered from the previous losses of the flood of 1927 and also their tax and revenue is far below normal. The total income per capita in Arkansas is the lowest of any State in the Union.

Considering all these facts further, it would seem that Federal aid on the previous basis is amply warranted.

Very truly yours,

C. W. GARRISON,
State Health Officer.

THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF MISSOURI,
City of Jefferson, January 19, 1929.

Assist. Surg. Gen. W. F. DRAPER,
United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DOCTOR DRAPER: I am in receipt of a telegram dated January 15 from Dr. A. T. McCormack, the State health officer of Kentucky, in which he states that information concerning the financial condition and need for Federal aid by the flood counties in this State would be of service to you at this time in substantiating your request for an additional appropriation to maintain full-time county health units under the flood-sanitation program.

Feeling that first-hand information from the counties in the flood area of southeast Missouri now having full-time health units under the flood-sanitation program would be of more benefit to you than anything we could say from this office, I am taking the liberty to transmit herewith copies of letters which were received from the presiding judges of the respective county courts during the fall of 1928, when the question of continuing the health units after 1929 had been brought to their attention.

Respectfully,

JAMES STEWART, M. D.,
State Health Commissioner.

NEW MADRID, MO., September 21, 1928.

Dr. E. R. COFFEY,
Director of Rural Sanitation,
State Board of Health, Jefferson City, Mo.

DEAR DOCTOR COFFEY: Your letter of September 19 relative to the financial condition of this county and also the value of the county health unit was received, and I will try my best toward giving you the desired information.

During the year 1927 this country, as you probably know, was flooded, and not only the flood waters but continued rains made it impossible to produce a crop. Again this year, in 1928, during the month of June, which is the most important month in the year for making crops in this country, we had more rainfall than has ever been known in the history of this county; this also caused the river to flood all the lowlands and made a crop there impossible, and the excessive amount of rainfall caused very little to be raised on the highlands. All these conditions caused four bank failures in this county, two of which were county depositories, and as yet the county has not received a penny for their deposits. It is very certain that the county will receive a big loss in one of these institutions if not both. As a result of this our bonds are delinquent and the county is in a very embarrassed condition financially.

As to the county health unit will say that it has been in operation in this county for several years and we know that a great deal of good has been accomplished, and for this reason we have continued this work the best we could under our financial distress, but will say that it will be impossible for this county to take on any more obligations at this time, and we certainly hope that the State board of health will be able to devise some means whereby the good work that has been done in New Madrid County can still continue.

Trusting this information will be of service to you and that you will be able to carry on the good work of the health department, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

G. L. TINSLEY,
Presiding Judge of County Court, New Madrid County.

KENNETT, MO., September 24, 1928.

Dr. JAMES STEWART,
State Health Commissioner, Jefferson City, Mo.

DEAR DOCTOR STEWART: You are no doubt familiar with the financial situation in Dunklin County. Because of the floods from the St. Francis River, a tributary of the Mississippi, delinquent taxes have gradually mounted, until some of the rural schools in our county have been forced to close for a lack of funds. When land has been sold for taxes, it has in more than one case failed to bring the amount due. It is the general belief, however, that as soon as the present levee program is completed conditions will improve and the county will perhaps return to normal. About 60,000 acres of land is not being cultivated in Dunklin County this year.

I have mentioned the above facts to let you know the true state of affairs.

We recognize the wonderful work the health unit has done for Dunklin County since it was established, and it is our sincere desire to continue this activity. We are, however, in a quandary as to how Dunklin County will be able to pay her part. The Government has taken over almost all the expense of the farm department for the next 18 months, and that will assist us to continue that activity until the taxes for next year are in. We are wondering if you could not get some assistance from some source to assist us for the health unit during this trying period.

The court wishes to thank the State board of health and you personally for its assistance in the past.

Yours truly,

C. H. ROBARDS,
Presiding Judge County Court of Dunklin County.

BENTON, MO., September 21, 1928.

Dr. E. R. COFFEY,
State Board of Health, Jefferson City, Mo.

DEAR DOCTOR COFFEY: If the Scott County health unit is maintained any longer it will be absolutely necessary for us to have Federal and State aid to do it. As you know, we are in one of the overflow counties, and our funds are not sufficient to warrant us in continuing without the aid.

I am highly in favor of continuing the unit, as I believe it has done much good to a class of people who could not be benefited without the unit.

Very truly yours,

J. W. HEEB,
Presiding Judge County Court of Scott County.

CHARLESTON, MO., September 24, 1928.

Dr. JAS. R. LEE,
Health Officer, Charleston, Mo.

DEAR DOCTOR LEE: The records of the county reveal the fact that our outstanding debts are in excess of $74,300 and, by January 1, 1929, will reach at least $85,000.

While provisions have been made whereby our obligations will be decreased by more than 50 per cent in January, when the current year's taxes become available, we have no assurance that said provisions, heretofore made, will be carried out due to the fact that possibly 25 per cent or more of this year's taxes will become and remain delinquent after January 1 owing to various causes, among which are: The proposed spillway which will render practically useless for taxable purposes approximately 160,000 acres in this county and the shortage of crops occasioned by the excessive rainfall of last June.

The service rendered by our health unit, under your supervision, is beyond estimation. Prior to and since its organization, the health unit has had the writer's hearty approval and, as presiding judge of, and speaking for, the county court, it would be a source of great satisfaction to see the health unit continue to "carry on" in this county. However, I feel as though it will require an able "board of strategy" to devise ways and means to provide the necessary funds therefor.

The amount required for the running expenses of the county is more than $30,000, the expense of patients in State institutions calls for more than $10,000 in addition thereto. With this burden of expense, together with the possibility of our revenue being curtailed to the extent of 40 per cent or more.

The above facts are stated in writing for the purpose of conveying reasons why the county will be unable to assume additional responsibilities, notwithstanding the fact that it is our desire to take advantage of the cooperation and assistance offered by the United States Public Health Service and other agencies.

Yours truly,

S. P. LUEBE,
Presiding Judge County Court of Mississippi County.

CARUTHERSVILLE, MO., September 25, 1928.

Dr. JAMES STEWART,
State Health Commissioner, Jefferson City, Mo.

DEAR DOCTOR STEWART: Pemiscot County is purely an agricultural community, and as such has been subject to the general depression that has been existing among the farmers for the past six or seven years. This depression was made much more acute through 1927 and 1928 because of the Mississippi floods, which reduced the area and total production of crops in 1927 to approximately 50 per cent of the normal yearly production. The outlook for 1928 is better but will still be considerably short of normal. The 1928 growing season has been wet and unfavorable, and it will take at least two normal years to restore the county to a sound financial footing. Pemiscot County is heavily burdened with bonded indebtedness for construction of levees and drainage ditches. There is much delinquent tax; in fact, the county court is finding it extremely difficult to maintain programs already started, and unless conditions improve some of them may have to be abandoned.

Throughout the 1927 flood period the county health unit, under the direction of Dr. W. S. Petty, rendered invaluable service. After the flood had receded it handled the immunization of the people in flooded areas and disease prevention so competently that there was no epidemic of any sort developed. While the malaria problem is a continuous one, there has been a very marked reduction upon the completion of drainage several years ago, but immediately following the flood we have experienced a very great increase for the past two years, and Doctor Petty is now devoting considerable time to malaria-control measures. The county court is more than well pleased with the work that the health unit is doing. It appreciates the help and the cooperation that the Missouri State Board of Health, the United States Public Health Service, and the International Health Board are giving to Pemiscot County. It hopes that in time to come it can take over more of the cost of maintaining the county health unit. It would be extremely loath to lose the service of the county unit, but at this time it would be absolutely impossible for the court to increase the local appropriation therefor.

T. R. COLE,
Presiding Judge Pemiscot County Court.

STATE OF ILLINOIS DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH,

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
Louisville, Ky., January 16, 1929.

Dr. W. F. DRAPER,
United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DOCTOR DRAPER: For your information, I am inclosing copies of letters to Senator SACKETT, Mr. THATCHER and wires to each of the health officers in the United States about the Ransdell bill.

If I can be of any further service, command me.

Sincerely yours,

A. T. MCCORMACK, Secretary.

JANUARY 16, 1929.

Hon. F. M. SACKETT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing copies of letter going to all of the State health officers to-day and I hope telegrams to their Senators will help the Ransdell bill.

I am also sending you the correspondence in regard to the Lincoln Memorial, with a covering letter that I hope will help.

In accordance with your suggestion, I had a very pleasant conversation with Mr. Mills. He said it would be necessary for the Surgeon

General to originate a new Budget request for the second deficiency bill. He said it would have pretty hard sledding, he was afraid, as he doubted if the Budget Bureau would accept it. I told him you wanted to talk with him a little later about it and that I would write you to-morrow, refreshing your mind as to the details. I found him perfectly fair and open-minded and believe we will have his approval. I saw Doctor Draper and I am getting the data he needs for his Budget request.

I think it would be well for you to telephone and ask Doctors Draper and Stimson to come over to your office and show them the Dick letter and clipping. They would be able to give you the best possible answer to it. I am also taking other steps to see if I can stop the opposition. I am going to let you hear from me as soon as I find that anything has been accomplished.

Sincerely, A. T. MCCORMACK, Secretary.

JANUARY 15, 1929.

Hon. M. H. THATCHER,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. THATCHER: Just before leaving on Monday I dropped in to see Mr. SACKETT. He had had information that led him to think the special session would be restricted to the consideration of farm relief and tariff measures and that there would be no appropriation bill. He, therefore, suggested that I see Mr. Mills before I left and arranged for me to have a conference with him. I was sorry that I could not catch you before the train left to tell you the details of the conversation, but I am sure that you will be interested in knowing that he smilingly said it would not make much difference what he did; that that Kentucky delegation, led by you, would probably secure the appropriation as they had done in other instances that had not exactly met with the Treasury's approval. He mentioned the hospital, road, bridge and coal appropriations, as well as the $130,000 health item. Before we had finished, he said it would be necessary for the Surgeon General to make a request, and he rather indicated that he would support it when it came to him for his approval, although he did not say this definitely.

I am wiring the other health officers in the Mississippi flood area, asking them to supply Doctor Draper with the necessary data immediately. Mr. Mills was doubtful as to whether or not it would receive the approval of the Budget Bureau even if he approved it. If it becomes necessary, however, I feel confident that you, Mr. ROBSION, and Mrs. LANGLEY can secure a nod from the President in favor of the appropriation, which would overcome that difficulty. I am going to try to prepare a memorandum to-morrow, which I will send you and Mr. SACKETT so you will have the facts in hand.

I assume that you have heard of the sad death of Governor Sampson's daughter last Saturday night. Mrs. McCormack joins me in warm personal regards to you and Mrs. THATCHER.

Your friend,

A. T. MCCORMACK, Secretary.

JANUARY 15, 1929.

Dr. E. L. BISHOP,

State Health Officer, Nashville, Tenn.

Just returned from Washington. Send Draper all possible details supporting service in request for deficiency appropriation to bring this item up to last year's Federal contribution. Give details of flood damage each county 1928 where possible and explain county unable to increase its contribution where this is true. Important that he get this as soon as possible. A. T. MCCORMACK.

ROME, December 27, 1928.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copies and a translation of the prospectus of the Superior School for the Study of Malaria (Scuola Superiore di Malariologia) in regard to the courses of instruction to be conducted in the school during the ensuing year. These courses are open to both Italians and foreigners upon the payment of the tuition fee. Prof. V. Ascoli, director of the Superior School for the Study of Malaria, has requested that this information be brought to the attention of such American institutions as may be interested.

I am informed by Dr. L. W. Hackett, local representative of the Rockefeller Foundation, that the Superior School for the Study of Malaria (Scuola Superiore di Malariologia) has been organized by the Italian Government and that it is being commendably conducted.

In this connection I am advised by Doctor Hackett that the International Malaria Institute, referred to in the ambassador's confidential dispatch No. 1308 of June 18, 1927, which was inaugurated on June 16, 1927, has had no further meetings and, as far as Doctor Hackett has been able to discover, no longer exists. Professor Ascoli, who was to have been a director of the International Institute, is now in charge of the new Superior School for the Study of Malaria (Scuola Superiore di Malariologia).

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

ALEXANDER KIRK,
Chargé d'Affaires ad interim.

(Inclosures: Copy prospectus and translation of same.)

SUPERIOR SCHOOL FOR THE STUDY OF MALARIA

The Superior School for the Study of Malaria, which was established by His Excellency Mussolini in 1927, is a scientific and educational organization and forms a part of the vast program of the national government for the hygienic and social redemption of malarial lands.

The object of the school is to prepare experts for the drainage and care of the soil and for the battle against malaria.

In 1929 the Superior School for the Study of Malaria will initiate its third year of instruction. This school has a medical section for doctors and those preparing to be doctors in medicine, and a technical-economic section for engineers and those preparing to be engineers, and for doctors and those preparing to be doctors in agriculture.

The instruction, which is given by our most noted students of malaria and by expert technicians in hydraulics and agriculture, comprises theoretical and practical lessons, clinic, and laboratory practice, tours of instruction in marshlands and to the large and small drainage-improvement works.

Both Italians and foreigners may attend the courses. The tuition is lire 300 for each student.

The courses in the technical-economic section will open April 1 and continue until May 30, 1929.

The courses in the medical section will open July 1 and continue until September 30, 1929.

Students who complete the courses may request a certificate of attendance and obtain a diploma if they successfully pass the examinations.

Four scholarships have been provided for postgraduate study of lire 5,000 each, to be assigned to two students in the medical section and to two students in the technical-economic section who attend the courses of the school.

For programs and entrance conditions apply to the secretary of the school, R. Clinica Medica, Policlinico Umberto I, Rome.

V. ASCOLI, Director.

SCUOLA SUPERIORE DI MALARIOLOGIA,
Roma, 25 novembre 1928.

La Scuola Superiore di Malariologia, instituita da S. E. Mussolini nel 1927 anno V, è un organismo didattico e scientifico che viene a inserirsi nella vasta opera del Governo Nazionale per la redenzione igienica e sociale delle terre malariche.

La scuola ha l'alta missione di preparare militi esperti nelle opere di bonifica del suolo e nella lotta contro l'endemia malarica.

La Scuola Italiana di Malariologia inizia nel 1929 il III Anno di insegnamento. Essa comprende una sezione medica per laureati e laureandi in medicina e una tecnico-economica per ingegneri e laureandi in ingegneria e dottori e laureandi in agraria.

L'insegnamento impartito dai nostri più insigni studiosi di malaria e da valorosi tecnici di idraulica ed agraria, comprenderà lezioni teorico-pratiche, esercitazioni cliniche e di laboratorio, gite di istruzione in zone palustri e in località di grande e di piccola bonifica.

Potranno frequentare i corsi, cittadini italiani e stranieri: la tassa d'iscrizione è di L. 300 perogni allievo.

I corsi della sezione tecnico-economica avranno inizio il 1° aprile e si chiuderanno il 30 maggio 1929.

I corsi della sezione medica avranno inizio il 1° luglio e si chiuderanno il 30 settembre 1929.

Gli allievi, ultimati i corsi, potranno richiedere il certificato di frequenza ed ottenere il diploma se giudicati idonei nelle prove d'esame.

Sono istituite N. 4 borse di studio per un periodo di perfezionamento di L. 5,000 ciascuna da assegnarsi a due allievi della sezione medica e a due allievi della sezione tecnico-economica che abbiano frequentati i corsi della scuola.

Per i programmi e per le norme d'iscrizione rivolgersi alla segreteria della scuola, R. Clinica Medica, Policlinico Umberto I, Roma.

V. ASCOLI,
Il Direttore.

Mr. TRAMMELL obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Did not the Chair announce that he intended to adhere to the rotation established in the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is what he is doing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced the rotation which he had had prepared from the RECORD of last night. The Senator from Florida is next in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is all I am asking, to be recognized in the rotation specified by the unanimous-consent agreement. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 108, after line 5, insert:

Bayboro Harbor, St. Petersburg, Fla.: The amount of approximately $17,000 which was heretofore allocated by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for the purpose of the completion of a jetty along the south side of Bayboro Harbor, St. Petersburg, Fla., be and the same is hereby transferred and made available, and shall be used for the purpose of dredging a channel 16 feet deep and approximately 200 feet wide described as follows:

"Extending on the easterly side of Point Pinellas lighted beacon in a direction approximately 328° true, the westerly boundary of the channel to be dredged as close to the said beacon as practicable."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, this has been approved by the War Department and I desire to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of War relating to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 21, 1929.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 23d ultimo, inclosing copy of bill S. J. Res. 52—

"Providing for the transfer of certain funds for the purpose of certain channel improvement at St. Petersburg, Fla."— and requesting that the Committee on Commerce be furnished such suggestions as may be deemed proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply permit me to state that the bill has been examined by the Chief of Engineers, who advises me that he will interpose no objection to passage of such a bill. He does, however, suggest that in the interests of clarity, the description contained in lines 10 to 16 of the bill be revised as indicated thereon in red ink.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WARREN. I have looked the matter up to some extent. It is subject to a point of order; but, on the other hand, it is not an expenditure of new money. It is simply a transfer from one purpose that is not now necessary to another purpose that is strongly advocated by the War Department. Therefore I will not make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I send to the desk the following amendment which I now offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 62, after line 9, insert the following:

ALTERATIONS TO NAVAL VESSELS

Toward the alterations and repairs required for the purpose of modernizing the U. S. S. Pennsylvania and Arizona, as authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels," approved February 25, 1929, $12,000,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when two battleships are brought to bear upon me at once, I suppose I have to surrender. I will make no objection to the inclusion of the amendment in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is it not subject to a point of order?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; it is not, because it is authorized by the general law which was signed by the President on February 25 of this year, and therefore it is strictly within paragraph 1 of the rule relating to appropriation bills.

Mr. KING. Why was not the matter cared for in the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It could not be done because the bill had not been signed by the President in time. It was not signed until February 25.

Mr. KING. The point I have in mind is this: Why did not the Appropriations Committee of the House dealing with naval affairs look after the item if it be a worthy one?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They could not do that because the bill authorizing the reconditioning did not pass and reach the President for signature until the 25th of the present month.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is recognized next under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I simply desired to speak on behalf of the amendment which has just been adopted. It having been adopted there is nothing for me to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] is recognized next.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Senator from Florida will state the inquiry.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have two amendments which have been presented and printed and are lying on the table. I am not sure under the unanimous-consent agreement whether they ought to be offered now before the time expires for taking a vote on amendments. If I have to offer them before that time, I should like to do so now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, and by consent of the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Florida may offer the amendments now.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer them in order that they may be pending and voted on at a later time. I am not going to discuss the amendments anyhow to amount to anything. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me to do so, I would like to have them disposed of now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield for that purpose?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment of the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 77, line 21, strike out "$425,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$850,000"; and strike out "$1,775,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,200,000."

Mr. FLETCHER. The object is that only $425,000 is allowed for a post-office building site in Jacksonville, Fla., and that will not acquire the proper kind of a site. It is impossible to get a suitable site there for a public building for $425,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that will have to be a matter for consideration in the next session of Congress. I wish to say to the Senator, much as it hurts me to refuse anything he offers, that many of the States do not have a single post office provided for in the bill, while there are about 100 post offices provided for in the bill. We are compelled to stick to what comes to us with the proper backing from the Budget and keep to the list as accurately as possible. I shall have to make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer the other amendment. I understand it is by the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 77, after line 21, insert the following:

Key West (Fla.) post office, etc.: For commencement of construction, $100,000, under an estimated total cost of $500,000.

Kissimmee (Fla.) post office: For commencement of constructon, $25,000, under an estimated total cost of $100,000.

On page 78, after line 9, insert the following:

Lake City (Fla.) post office: For commencement of construction, $25,000, under an estimated total cost of $100,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will have to make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I say that these are sites which have been acquired by the Government many years ago.

Mr. WARREN. There are two similar sites in my State.

Mr. FLETCHER. We ought to have a public building there.

Mr. WARREN. No doubt; but that will have to be taken up in the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I submit the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert on page 175, after line 17, the following:

Provided, That section 13 of the classification act of 1923, as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, is hereby amended by providing, effective on the first day of the month succeeding the enactment of this act, one additional salary rate as a maximum rate, which will add one increment or step up in each of the professional and scientific grades from 1 to 5, inclusive; all grades of subprofessional service; clerical, administrative, and fiscal services from 1 to 12, inclusive; and the custodial services, grades 2 and 4 to 10, inclusive: Provided further, That in the clerical-mechanical service the rate of compensation for classes of positions in grade 1 shall be 55 to 60 cents an hour; grade 2, 65 to 70 cents an hour; and grade 3, 75 to 80 cents an hour: Provided further, That the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments pursuant to authority to adjust the pay of certain employees in the departmental and field service shall, effective the first day of the month succeeding the passage of this act, readjust the compensation of the grades of the departmental services herein named and the corresponding field-service positions, so that employees whose positions were affected by the act of May 28, 1928, and who did not receive an increase in salary the equivalent of two steps or salary rates in their respective grades, shall be given such additional step or steps or salary rate or rates within the grade as may be necessary to equal such increase: And provided further, That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, sufficient sums to readjust the salaries as herein directed during the remainder of the fiscal year 1929 and during the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Wyoming will accept this amendment. It is along the same line as the bill which the Senate passed a year ago, so that the Senate has already approved the schedules, as has been done by the House committee in the case of the Lehlbach bill. There is really no controversy between the two Houses, I think, over the proposition. It can properly go to conference and can properly be considered there. As I have said, the schedules in the amendment are the same as those provided in the bill which the Senate passed a year ago.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we already have passed the Welch Act prescribing the amounts which shall be paid.

Mr. BROOKHART. Those schedules are stricken out by the committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment striking that out has been agreed to by the Senate, as I understand.

Mr. WARREN. One at a time please. I wish to say to the Senator that I know, as he does, that the amendment which he has proposed probably embodies good legislation, but specifically it is legislation which we are debarred from putting on to an appropriation bill of this kind by way of amendment, and, being in charge of this bill, I can not do other than make a point of order on it as legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. It is not subject to the point of order, I think, since the House——

Mr. WARREN. Let me finish my statement. Of course there are several points of order which could be made against the amendment, but the main point which I have already made is, I think, sufficient. Of course, the Senator from Iowa has his remedy, and I do not wish in any way to interfere with it, but, so far as the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill is concerned, it is all a matter of duty with him. The Senator is probably going to get what he wants in time in some other way.

Mr. BROOKHART. It would be a very appropriate matter to go to conference in view of the House action. The amendment presents the Senate view of the matter.

Mr. WARREN. We know nothing of what the House has done except for the long list of payments under the Welch bill which they have sent us with their indorsement. So I say to the Senator that I should think the better way would be to take that, and then, if the Senator feels so disposed, he can ask for more in another year.

Mr. BROOKHART. But this is the only way in which we can get any action on the matter.

Mr. WARREN. There are many things that come to a man's mind as to what may and what may not be done.

Mr. BROOKHART. This is directly in line with what the House did.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question before the point is ruled on?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does this amendment have the effect of reducing the pay of the higher grades, the professional and specially qualified grades?

Mr. BROOKHART. It does not, but it raises the steps in the lower grades which we thought we raised before but did not do so.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is there anything in the deficiency bill that will have the effect of reducing the pay of the higher grades?

Mr. BROOKHART. That was stricken out by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was stricken out by the committee, and the amendment striking it out has since been agreed to by the Senate.

If the Senator from Iowa will yield, I should like to say that I thought there was an agreement last night—sometime during the day or last night—that the Senator from Iowa might offer his amendment and that a point of order would not be raised against it. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. BROOKHART. The agreement was on the question of suspension of the rules.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what I thought, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the agreement was that the Senator would not insist on his motion to suspend the rules, but could offer the amendment without such a motion.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the agreement was to waive the 1-day clause; in other words, that the notice of the Senator from Iowa to suspend the rules need not lie over for one day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, if he made his motion to suspend the rules, then it would have been in order if he could have obtained a two-thirds majority. I can not find the place in the RECORD just at this moment, but if such an agreement was made, then, of course, the Senator from Iowa has the right to present his amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator from Tennessee will permit me, the Senator from Iowa under the agreement was given the right to bring up the notice to suspend the rules to-day, even though to-day is not another legislative day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not understand it in that way.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, that means nothing in the world. In other words, the Senator from Iowa would not have been any better off in that way than he was before. The only thing the Senator from Iowa can do now is to make a motion to suspend. It will take a two-thirds vote then to put on the amendment.

Mr. BROOKHART. That was the holding of the Chair, but I am insisting that the amendment I have offered is not subject to a point of order, because the House went into this subject and adopted part of the bill, and thus having opened the case we have the right to occupy the entire field. I understand that has been the ruling of the Senate heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair in ruling upon the point of order realizes it is a rather delicate situation. The precedents of the Senate establish the fact that where the House has adopted an item that would ordinarily be subject to a point of order, and it comes over here, an amendment to it will be in order. Vice President Marshall made this ruling:

> Notwithstanding the rule of the Senate to the effect that general legislation may not be attached in an appropriation bill, still, when the House of Representatives have opened the door and proceed to enter upon a field of general legislation which has to do with a subject of this character, the Chair is going to rule * * * that the House having opened the door the Senate of the United States can walk in through the door and pursue the field.

The Chair is not going to rule on the point of order, but is going to submit it to the Senate. The question is, Shall the point of order be sustained?

The question being put, the point of order was overruled by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I submit an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

> To enable the United States to send delegates and an exhibit to the Fourth World Poultry Congress to be held in England in 1930, $15,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State for expenses of delegates designated by the President, and $25,000 additional, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for preparation, transportation, installation, and demonstration of a suitable national exhibit for display at the proposed congress; in all, $40,000, fiscal years 1929 and 1930.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That matter came before the Committee on Foreign Relations on Tuesday morning, and after very considerable discussion a bill making a provision along the lines of the amendment was voted down, because the majority of the committee thought that it would be nothing more nor less than a junket for 15 persons to go to a poultry show in London. If we do that for the poultry industry, there is no reason in the world why we should not do it for the cattle industry and all the various agricultural activities; nor is there any reason why we should not do it for any other kind of legitimate business. It is setting a precedent that is going to come back to haunt the Congress many, many times. For that reason a majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations declined to report the bill favorably.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRATTON. Will the Chair have the amendment again read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania give me an opportunity to say a word?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course.

Mr. McNARY. Standing by themselves, the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania might well be in point. For the last 12 years, however, and on three separate occasions this Government has participated in a foreign poultry exhibit. This precedent has been set on former occasions. Also I may add that last year this country participated in a dairy exhibit in Canada, the delegates' expenses being paid. On three other occasions Congress has enacted similar legislation.

It would be very unfortunate, Mr. President, if the country were denied the opportunity of demonstrating the advance poultry culture has made in the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture and his assistants have informed me that in the poultry congresses heretofore held great progress has been made in demonstrating to foreign countries the cultural methods adopted in the poultry business, and the pure breeds of chickens that have been shown have been greatly to the advantage of the poultry industry in the country, which, by the way, is the fifth largest of all the agricultural industries appertaining to America.

I am conscious of the fact that the amendment is subject to the point of order, Mr. President, in that it is not for the purpose of carrying out existing law. It is true, however, that the House passed a bill on this subject but a day ago that was messaged to the Senate yesterday. The Foreign Relations Committee, to which it had been referred, in my opinion, in violation of law, was discharged from consideration of the measure, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. In behalf of that committee, I have reported the bill favorably, and so it is on the calendar.

Of course, knowing the rules, I am aware that the amendment is subject to a point of order; but I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania, in view of our having previously established the precedent, both as to the poultry industry and the dairy industry, and in view of the fact that other nations of the world participate in the movement which America initiated, now to withdraw from the exhibit support would be very unfortunate to this industry, which, I repeat, is the fifth largest agricultural interest in the country.

The Senator's point of order is well taken, but, in view of the circumstances surrounding this amendment, I hope he will permit it to go to conference.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, if the amendment covered only an exhibit at the poultry congress I would not have objected, but as long as it contains the item of $15,000 for a junket to London, I am not going to permit it to be adopted if I can prevent it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have the floor. Let me suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I should be glad to eliminate the appropriation for expenses of delegates and leave the $25,000 appropriation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator from Oregon will do that, I will make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the proposed modification of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, after the word "send," the words "delegates and"; also, after the date "1930," to strike out "$15,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State for expenses of delegates designated by the President and"; also, following the numerals "$25,000," to strike out the word "additional"; and, after the word Congress, to strike out "in all $40,000," so as to make the amendment read:

World's Fourth Poultry Congress: To enable the United States to send an exhibit to the Fourth World's Poultry Congress, to be held in England in 1930, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $25,000, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for preparation, transportation, installation, and demonstration of a suitable national exhibit for display at the proposed congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will prevail. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] spoke of the poultry industry as the fifth industry. It is the third industry in America. It is a billion-dollar business that goes into every State in the Union; and we should give it the greatest possible encouragement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. ODDIE obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ODDIE. I do.

Mr. WHEELER. I have an amendment that will take just a couple of minutes, to be inserted on page 52, line 15. I send it to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, line 15, after the word "lien," it is proposed to insert, before the period, a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That the Federal Power Commission in issuing any permits or licenses for the development of power or power sites on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, as authorized by the act of March 7, 1928 (45 Stat. 212, 213), is hereby authorized and directed to waive payment of the usual administrative fees or commissions charged under existing laws relating to or under regulations of said Federal Power Commission in the issuance of any such permits or licenses.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is one of the Indian matters that has the proper backing, and I shall make no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, in a few minutes I intend to send to the desk an amendment to the bill, and I desire to say a few words on it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment to offer an amendment that will not take any time?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 2, after "$48,000," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the care, custody, maintenance, and alteration of the premises are hereby transferred from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital: Provided further, That $2,000 of the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Weather Bureau, 1930," shall be transferred to this appropriation: Provided further, That the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to sell the Weather Bureau station known as Mount Weather, in the counties of Loudoun and Clarke, in the State of Virginia," approved March 13, 1928 (45 Stat. 311), is hereby repealed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that amendment relates to a subject that is already in the bill, and I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I want to say a few words. I shall take only two or three minutes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ODDIE. If it will not take any time. The time is getting short.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think there will be any controversy about this amendment.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from New York offers the following amendment: On page 109, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

Bath Home, Bath, N. Y.: For current expenses, subsistence, household, hospital, transportation, repairs, and farm, including the same objects specified under each of such heads for the Central Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in the act making appropriations for the War Department for the fiscal year 1929, for the camp for veterans at Bath, N. Y., leased by the State of New York to the Board of General Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $500,000, fiscal year 1929, and to remain available until June 30, 1930.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is a matter that has been belated, but it is a matter of importance, because it will provide homes for some 1,500 or 2,000 or more disabled volunteer soldiers.

I have taken the pains to take up the matter personally with the Budget Bureau, and nothing but a delay because of signing a lease has hindered its coming here with a written or printed indorsement.

I think the amendment should be adopted, and I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, in a few minutes I shall send to the desk an amendment which I will ask to have read. It refers to a claim of the State of Nevada against our Government. It is one of the most valid and meritorious claims that has ever come before the Senate. It has passed the Senate numbers of times in years past, and I hope it will go through on this bill this time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment for an amendment which will not require debate?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this amendment of mine will take just about two minutes. Then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BLACK. Very well.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate on this bill. It includes a statement from the Comptroller General on the request contained in a resolution which was offered by my colleague [Mr. PITTMAN] at this session, and passed by the Senate at the present session.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany amendment to second deficiency appropriation bill, H. R. ——:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment proposed to the second deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. ——) providing for the reimbursement of the State of Nevada in accordance with the statement of account rendered by the Comptroller General of the United States dated January 26, 1929, and printed in Senate Document No. 210, Seventieth Congress, second session, after due consideration beg to report said amendment favorably, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for insertion in the second deficiency appropriation bill.

Said amendment is as follows:

"To reimburse the State of Nevada the net balance due as certified by the Comptroller General of the United States January 26, 1929, and printed in Senate Document Numbered 210, Seventieth Congress, second session, the sum of $595,076.53."

In support of said amendment there is hereto attached and made a part hereof, Senate Report No. 1706, submitted by your committee on S. 5717.

Senate Report No. 1706, Seventieth Congress, second session, follows:

[S. Rept. No. 1706, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5717) providing for the relief of the State of Nevada, after consideration, reports the same favorably to the Senate and recommends that the bill do pass without amendment.

The subject matter of the bill was thoroughly examined into by your committee under S. J. Res. 41 and quite extensive hearings were held by a subcommittee and by the full committee, resulting in Senate Report No. 433, Seventieth Congress, first session. Reference is here made to said printed hearings and said report. S. J. Res. 41 passed the Senate March 2, 1928.

Under a resolution of the Senate (S. Res. 295) the Comptroller General under date of January 26, 1929, rendered the account between the State of Nevada and the United States for moneys advanced and actually expended in aid of the Government during the War between the States. The report of the Comptroller General (Sen. Doc. No. 210, 70th Cong., 2d sess.) is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 26, 1929.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: There has been received Senate Resolution 295, Seventieth Congress, second session, authorizing and directing me to—

"* * * reopen and restate the account of the State of Nevada for moneys advanced and expended in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States, and on such restatement (1) to accept as a basis of calculation the balance due the State of Nevada on January 1, 1900, stated in the account set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury printed in House Document No. 322, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session; (2) to add to such balance the interest certified by the comptroller of the State of Nevada as actually paid by said State on the sums so advanced and expended from January 1, 1900, to December 31, 1928; (3) to deduct from the total sum so stated the interest at 5 per cent per annum on $8,559.61 repaid by the United States on April 10, 1888, from the date of payment to December 31, 1928; (4) to deduct $12,283.04 repaid by the United States on July 1, 1910, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1910, to December 31, 1928, and certify to the Senate the balance found due the State of Nevada."

Complying therewith I have the honor to certify that the account of the State of Nevada for moneys advanced and expended in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States has been reopened and restated as directed in said resolution, and on said reopening and restatement the balance found due to the State of Nevada is $595,076.53, as follows:

1.	Basis of calculation, balance due to the State of Nevada on Jan. 1, 1900, as stated in the account set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury printed in House Document No. 322, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session	$462,441.97
2.	Plus interest certified by the comptroller of the State of Nevada as actually paid by the State of Nevada on the sums so advanced and expended from Jan. 1, 1900, to Dec. 31, 1928, at 5 per cent per annum, on principal sum of $119,800.12 advanced and expended by the State of Nevada in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States	173,710.17
		636,152.14
3.	Less interest at 5 per cent per annum on $8,559.61 repaid by the United States on Apr. 10, 1888, from date of payment to Dec. 31, 1928	17,429.92
		618,722.22
4.	Less $12,283.04 repaid by the United States on July 1, 1910, with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1910, to Dec. 31, 1928, $11,362.65, or a total deduction of	23,645.69
	Net balance	595,076.53

Respectfully,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

For the information of the Senate a general statement of facts on which reimbursement is founded follows:

GEOGRAPHICAL FACTORS

In 1864, when said expenditures on behalf of the United States were made, the following state of facts obtained:

(1) West of Kanas, the only States were California and Oregon on the far Pacific coast. The vast region between was partitioned into Territories, sparsely settled and occupied by powerful Indian tribes, restive and resentful of the westward migration of the whites, and incited to hostilities by the general war conditions prevailing. No railroads west of the Missouri River; emigrant travel and transportation of passengers, mail, express, freight, and military supplies were by stagecoach, wagon trains, or saddleback. The westward route followed was the Overland Trail, made by the tread of emigrant trains (1844 to 1864) from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, Calif., a distance of over 1,500 miles.

(2) This fourth and crucial year of the Civil War, ocean communication with the Pacific coast via the Isthmus or Cape Horn was all but abandoned from war hazard.

THE OVERLAND TRAIL

(3) The Overland Trail thus became the most important line of communication between the East and West. Along it, moreover, stretched the Western Union telegraph, whilst corps of surveyors and engineers of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Cos., chartered by acts of Congress in 1862, were exploring its course for favorable mountain passes and connecting routes across the plains and deserts to link West with East by railroad, which the Secretary of War had declared was of the utmost military importance (An. Rept. War Dept., 1864–65, p. 149), and the Government (July 2, 1864) was to aid with loans and land grants.

TERRITORY OF NEVADA

The Territory of Nevada at this time had become the goal of fortune seekers west and east. In five years the magic of discovered gold and silver had populated its wastes with some 15,000 adventurous people. Virginia City sprang into existence as the most important town on the Overland Trail.

James Nye, governor, was a commanding figure. Formerly on the bench of New York and first president of the metropolitan board of police, subsequently United States Senator, a close friend of Lincoln and Seward, he ranked among the foremost orators of his time. Other residents of the Territory were destined to play large parts in the affairs of the Nation. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), deputy secretary, was gathering the materials for Roughing It, the immortal picture of a phase of American history and life without counterpart.

Assessed valuation of property was under twenty millions. The Territory was too poor to own or contemplate a capitol building, its officials commonly having offices in their residences. The Territorial assembly, a score or more of whose members were from New York and the New England States, sat on rude benches in a building donated by a public-spirited citizen, the floors carpeted with sawdust and the two houses separated by a canvas partition. Despite the wealth of the mines and the extreme carefulness with which public funds were appropriated, the treasury uniformly ran dry before the receipt of the December taxes. On November 1, 1864, when the State government succeeded the Territorial, there was but $1,101.98 cash balance in the treasury with $39,228.54 outstanding warrants issued against it.

FIRST REQUISITION FOR TROOPS

Regular troops stationed along the Pacific coast had been withdrawn to the Atlantic seaboard the first years of the war. California volunteers, by 1863, were protecting not only that State but the Southwest Territories to the boundary of Texas; those of Oregon were similarly extended to guard the Northwest.

Interruption of ocean communication with the Pacific coast by 1863 had made the protection of the Overland Trail a matter of grave military and national concern.

The first call on Nevada Territory for volunteers, dated April 2, 1863, was addressed the governor by General Wright, commander of Department of the Pacific:

"SIR: I have been authorized by the War Department to raise volunteer companies in Nevada Territory for the purpose of moving east over the overland route in the direction of Great Salt Lake City. If it is possible to raise three or four companies in the Territory for this service, I have to request your excellency may be pleased to have them organized. I should be glad to get two companies of Cavalry and two of Infantry, the mounted troops to furnish their own horses and equipment. Arms, ammunition, etc., will be furnished by the United States. Should your excellency consider it improbable that this volunteer force can be raised, even one company will be accepted. I will send a plan of organization and an officer with the necessary instructions for mustering them into the service."

While correspondence was in progress the following telegram was transmitted:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1863.

Brig. Gen. G. WRIGHT,
San Francisco, Calif.:

The Secretary of War authorizes you to raise additional regiments in California and Nevada to reenforce General Conner and protect the overland route. Can not companies be raised in Nevada and pushed forward immediately? General Conner may be able to raise some companies in Utah or out of emigrant trains.

H. W. HALLECK, General in Chief.

General Wright the following day, April 16, 1863, addressed a second and more urgent appeal to the governor, in all material parts, as follows:

"The Indian disturbances along the line of the overland mail route, east of Carson City, threaten the entire suspension of our mail facilities, as well as preventing any portion of the vast immigration approaching from the east reaching Nevada * * *. My force immediately available for operation on that line is small * * *. Some infantry companies will be thrown forward from this side of the mountains as soon as transportation can be prepared and the roads are in order. In the meantime it is of such importance to keep the mail and emigrant route east of you open that I would earnestly recommend that one or two companies of cavalry be promptly organized and prepared for muster into the service of the United States. It is impossible for us at this moment to purchase horses and equipments. Each man would have to furnish his own. I can furnish arms, ammunition, forage, clothing, provisions, etc.; in fact, everything except horses and equipments. * * * This is the first appeal that has been made to Nevada Territory * * *." (Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)

FOUR COMPANIES RECRUITED

The response was a proclamation of the Governor of the Territory eight days later, calling for volunteers to serve three years or during the war.

Four companies of cavalry were recruited and mustered into the service, of which two were stationed at Fort Churchill, Nev., the others sent to Fort Douglas, Utah.

SECOND CALL FOR TROOPS

The latter part of November following General Wright requisitioned the Territory "under authority conferred upon me by the War Department" (see letter Brigadier General Wright to Adjutant General, U. S. Army, December 22, 1863) for "one regiment of infantry and two more companies of cavalry."

December 4, 1863, a second proclamation of the governor was issued calling for volunteers.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT ORDER OF FEBRUARY 9, 1863

The four companies of cavalry enlisted under the first call, despite delay in securing horses and equipment at the soldiers' expense, had been recruited and mustered in the service in a few months.

Under the second call, however, so little progress was made in securing volunteers that by February it was clear only a small part of the quota could be enlisted without remedial action by the Territorial Assembly.

The situation arose from an order of the Treasury Department, dated February 9, 1863, instructing the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at San Francisco that—

"checks of disbursing officers must be paid in United States notes." (See letter of Deputy Paymaster Gen. George H. Riggold, February 13, 1863.)

Up to this time troops and marines of the Department of the Pacific had been paid in coin.

It is pertinent to remark that the subtreasury at San Francisco held a vast amount of gold and silver, product largely of the mines of California and Nevada. Also, that in the same month as the departmental order the price of gold in Treasury notes on the New York Stock Exchange (February 28, 1863) touched 170.

EFFECT OF THE ORDER ON SOLDIERS' PAY

The effect of this order on the troops of the Department of the Pacific as well on further recruiting may be gathered from a recital of certain conditions, as follows:

First. That during the entire period of the Civil War and subsequently, the only money in circulation or common usage on the Pacific coast was gold and silver coin; all transactions, obligations, prices, salaries, wage, and services being stated therein.

Second. The greater part of all manufactured commodities were imported; with the interruption of ocean transportation as stocks on hand diminished, prices rose accordingly.

Third. In the Territory of Nevada such condition was accentuated by the fact that nearly everything used or consumed, apart from lumber, fuel, beef, and hay, had to be freighted over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, blocked from December to May by snow, in mule trains, the distance from Saramento ranging from 200 to 450 miles. Freight costs per ton to Virginia City approximated $80, and correspondingly higher to other mining towns. From Leavenworth, Kans., freight approximated $800 per ton. A bushel of corn shipped from Leavenworth, Kans., to Salt Lake City cost $17. (Rept. Secretary of War 1865–66, pt. 1, pp. 23–112. Also report of General Halleck to Secretary of War, War Dept. Rept., 1866, pp. 31–32.) The range of prices of necessities in Nevada, 1861–1865, gold valuation, was from 50 to 100 per cent higher than the corresponding currency prices east of the Missouri River.

Finally. Treasury notes in regions remote from San Francisco could not be used as money except at an extortionate discount below the current New York quotations.

March 16, 1863, General Wright, commander of the Department of the Pacific, transmitted to The Adjutant General of the United States Army a letter of Major Drew, commandant at Fort Baker, Oreg., containing an explicit statement of the effects of, and a formal protest against, paying his men in greenbacks, to which General Wright added his own indorsement, saying:

"The difficulties and embarrassments enumerated in the major's communication are common to all the troops in this department, and I must seriously ask the consideration of the general-in-chief and of the War Department to this subject" * * *.

SITUATION IN NEVADA

The four companies of Nevada Cavalry had been raised before the Treasury order of February 9, 1863, had become generally known or its effects understood. Troops in the outlying districts were not paid with any regularity, frequently being months in arrears, and this appears to have been the case in Nevada.

When the governor's second proclamation was issued, however, the situation was well known. Pure patriotism alone could induce men to accept $13 per month Army pay, when choice required the relinquishment of fortune-seeking or employment at from $4 to $10 daily wage in gold. When the soldier's pay was cut by departmental order to the equivalent of about $6 per month, payable in Treasury notes having no currency on the Pacific coast, justice and fair play required some character of relief be granted to help the volunteers to meet the high cost of living.

THE TERRITORIAL VOLUNTEERS ACT

February 20, 1864, an act of the Territorial Assembly of Nevada was approved, entitled:

"An act to encourage enlistments and give bounties and extra pay to our volunteer soldiers." (Nev. Ter. Laws, p. 81.)

The Territorial volunteers act provided, in all material particulars, as follows:

"Bounties, so called, were authorized to be paid to captains or commanding officers of companies of $10 in gold per capita per recruit enlisted and mustered into the service of the United States in lieu.

"Extra pay, so called, was authorized to be paid volunteer troops, officers, and soldiers of $5 per month in gold during the period of service; first settlement at the expiration of one year, unless sooner terminated by death or honorable discharge; final settlement at the termination of enlistment or muster out.

"To provide the moneys therefor a soldiers' fund of $100,000 was created; bonds in that amount to bear 10 per cent interest authorized to be issued and sold and an annual tax of 25 cents on each $100 taxable property levied to meet the debt."

THIRD CALL FOR TROOPS

The effect of the Territorial volunteers act is shown in the muster rolls. The exigencies of the Government in protecting the Overland Trail had become so acute that in October, 1864, Gen. Irwin McDowell, then commander of the Department of the Pacific, removed his headquarters to Virginia City, Nevada Territory, and on the 13th requisitioned the Territory "under authority of the Secretary of War," to complete the organization of a regiment of cavalry and one of infantry. About the end of the year Nevada had recruited a total of six companies of cavalry and three of infantry, aggregating 1,180 men. These troops were actively engaged, 1864 to 1866, in Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Nebraska, and Kansas. (Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)

NEVADA ADMITTED AS A STATE

Eight months after the passage of the Territorial volunteers act (October 31, 1864), Nevada was admitted into the Union. The State constitution provided that all laws of the Territory not repugnant to its provisions were continued in full effect until modified or repealed by the State legislature. The Territorial debt and obligations were assumed and authorized to be carried separately from and independent of the limitations governing the State debt proper.

The soldier's fund bonds had proved unsalable, and the burden of meeting the liabilities accrued and accruing under the Territorial volunteers act devolved upon the State.

The State legislature authorized the issue and sale of $150,000 bonds bearing 2 per cent per month interest. It was out of the proceeds of this issue that the State met the first accrued claims of the Territorial volunteers. Twenty-four per cent interest to raise funds in 1865, 18 per cent in 1866, and 15 per cent in 1867 to 1872 (not to mention 9½ per cent 1872 to 1879), were the prices Nevada paid for statehood.

STATEHOOD ASSUMED FROM LOYALTY

It is pertinent at this point to mention that Nevada assumed the burden of statehood at the invitation of the United States, persuaded from loyalty to do what its sound judgment had rejected. For in the year 1864, on the 19th day of January, the people of the Territory overwhelming defeated a proposed State constitution and application for admission as a State. On March 21 following the Congress of the United States, notwithstanding such rejection, passed an enabling act inviting Nevada into the Union. An additional State was required to insure the adoption of the thirteenth amendment and the choice of President Lincoln was Nevada. (See Recollections of the Civil War, by Charles A. Dana, Assistant Secretary of War, Lincoln's administration p. 174.) (Senate Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)

STATE VOLUNTEERS ACT

The Territorial volunteers act had made provision partially to equalize the soldier's pay on account of the abnormal prices prevailing, but had not provided for any additional pay to officers in excess of that allowed volunteers in general. Public sentiment in Nevada in favor of doing justice became strongly urgent that some measure of relief should be given the Nevada volunteer officers.

The State legislature then being in session and considering the matter of such relief, on March 8, 1865, the commander of the Department of the Pacific wrote the Governor of Nevada concerning the progress made in recruiting and recommending additional pay to volunteers.

It was the receipt of this letter which caused the legislature to pass the State volunteers act of March 11, 1865, continuing the provisions of the Territorial volunteers act of February 20, 1864, notwithstanding the veto of the governor (Blaisdell).

NEVADA'S EXPENDITURES TO PROTECT THE OVERLAND TRAIL

The liabilities assumed by the State of Nevada as successor to the Territory of Nevada and honorably fulfilled cost the State, as shown by the official reports, the principal sum of $119,800.12, of which $109,048.53 were for so-called bounties and extra pay, no part of which has ever been reimbursed.

Of the remainder of said amount of $119,800.12, $8,559.61 was reimbursed the State as of April 10, 1888, leaving unreimbursed the further amount of $2,191.98. The items of this latter portion of the principal sum comprise salary and expenses of the adjutant general of Nevada and of his office from the date of the official close of the war to the final muster out in 1866 of the last contingent of Nevada volunteers. Inasmuch as the adjutant general of Nevada was the officer designated under the Territorial volunteers act and subsequent State volunteers act to audit the claims of officers and soldiers for bounty and extra pay, such unreimbursed expenditures accrued in consequence of said Territorial volunteers act and are properly inclusive within its force and legal authorization.

It is established by the reports of the successive State comptrollers of Nevada and the statutes of the State that from February 10, 1865, to the present time Nevada has carried said principal sum as a Territorial debt and paid interest thereon, and that of the interest so paid but $12,283.04 (settlement of July 1, 1910) has been reimbursed the State, leaving the net balance due the State of Nevada, as reported by the Comptroller General on January 26, 1929 (S. Doc. 210, 70th Cong.), of the sum of $595.076.53.

REIMBURSEMENT BEFORE PREVIOUS CONGRESSES

Misconception of fact and law at the foundation of the Nevada Civil War expenditures for the benefit of the Government has hitherto deferred settlement.

The assumption has been in error that reimbursement accrued only as an obligation of the Government under the act of Congress of July 27, 1861.

It accrued instead under an act of the Legislative Assembly and Governor of the Territory of Nevada, subsequently approved and ratified by the Congress of the United States, and the legal, equitable, and moral commitment of the United States to its settlement rests solely thereon. Hence reimbursement, in its controlling aspects, was not before the Court of Claims nor adjudicated in its decision of March 14, 1910, all of which will hereinafter be conclusively shown.

No valid understanding of the unprecedented nature of Nevada's disbursements for the benefit of the United States can be had apart from review, such as hereinbefore presented, of its geographic, economic, and historical setting and the controlling circumstances of time and locality.

The expenditures of Nevada were exhaustively investigated by committees of the two Houses of the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses and favorably reported for settlement by direct appropriation, the Senate invariably passing the bills, but such bills failed from one cause or another in the House.

The special nature of the expenditures was then recognized but until after the Fifty-sixth Congress there had been no decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States under which its legal authorization by Congress and the commitment of the Government to its indemnification could be defined.

The equitable and moral validity of reimbursement, however, was attested by those best informed on its character and merits, as shown by the following extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (56th Cong., 1st sess., vol. 33, pt. 7, p. 6278):

"Senator Hawley, of Connecticut, chairman Committee on Military Affairs: 'There is no sort of question of its justice.'

"Senator Eugene Hale, of Maine, ranking member Committee on Appropriations: 'The Senate is committed to this State claim by vote, by sentiment, and it is only a question of time when it will pass.'

"Senator Teller, of Colorado, chairman Committee on Claims: 'If there are any claims that are just and proper which the United States ought to pay, this is one of them. It is as sacred an obligation, in my judgment, as the national bonds.' (Hearings on S. J. Res. 41, 70th Cong.)"

Nevertheless, after the lapse of many years, Nevada yet carries the debt so incurred, the benefits of which accrued to the imperiled Union and the burden of which fell on the State. And at a cost then and since to its sparse population in excess of half a million dollars.

The set-offs thereto are one of $8,559.61 applicable to the principal sum, and the other of $12,283.04 as interest thereon, both of which items with interest from time of payment to date have been credited to the United States in the report of the Comproller General dated January 26, 1929. (S. Doc. No. 210, 70th Cong., 2d sess.)

REIMBURSEMENT OF NEVADA BEFORE THE DEPARTMENTS

On November 1, 1882, pursuant to the act of June 27, 1882 (22 Stat. 111), the State of Nevada transmitted to the authorities of the Government a statement of the aforesaid expenditures accompanied with the original vouchers and other evidence of every kind then in her possession. It was not until four years later that provision was made for the detail of a board of three Army officers under Special Orders, No. 232, dated October 6, 1886, to examine and report on said expenditures. The board in 1887 submitted majority and minority reports; the latter allowed $8,559.61 of such expenditures, which amount was approved and paid the State on April 10, 1888. The particular differences in the allowances of the two reports related to the salary of the adjutant general of Nevada and expenses of his office, the minority report terminating it as of August 20, 1866, the official date of the end of the war, instead of December 31 following, as approved by the majority, when its affairs were wound up and the office terminated.

The audit of the board discovered a double charge for rent of $38.33 which the State had paid, no other errors or improper items being found in the disbursements.

SO-CALLED BOUNTIES AND EXTRA PAY

As hitherto stated, up to that time there had been no decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States under which any legal commitment of the Government to reimburse the Nevada Territorial expenditures, as distinguished from the expenditures of other States and Territories, could be established; hence reimbursement of Nevada was included under the act of June 27, 1882, supra, with those of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, and Kansas for Civil War and Indian war expenditures. The act was general in its provisions for the entire section embraced, and among other things provided:

"SEC. 2. That no higher rate shall be allowed for the services of said forces, and for supplies, transportation, and other expenses, than was allowed and paid by the United States for similar services in the same grade and for the same time in the United States Army serving in said States and Territories. * * *"

With respect to Nevada Territory, it is pertinent to remark that there was no United States Army in the Territory or State when the Nevada expenditures were made, except as comprised the Nevada volunteers.

The provisions of the foregoing act, moveover, were construed by the department in connection with the act of July 27, 1861 (12 Stat. 276), and the Chase regulations governing its provisions, particularly in the following:

"III. Personal expenses of commissioned officers in recruiting their companies prior to their being mustered into the service will not be allowed; but commissioned officers may be allowed the same rates for subsistence and quarters (board and lodgings) as privates from the date of enrollment until muster into the service * * *.

"VIII. Bounties or donations to men or their families to induce men to volunteer will not be recognized * * *."

REPORT OF WAR CLAIMS EXAMINERS

The report of the war claims examiners contains the following statements relative to bounties and extra pay as allowed and paid by Nevada:

"The bounty was paid to captains for expenses incurred by them in enlisting, lodging, and subsisting the men of their companies prior to their entering the United States service, in lieu thereof, as is shown by the fact that no other bills are presented for those expenses, and, under the circumstances, this expense was economical; but this claim having been submitted by the State of Nevada as a premium or bounty, the examiners are debarred from considering it, as, under the second section of the act of 1882, no higher rate can be allowed than was paid by the United States, which was $2 per enlistment.

* * * * * * *

"Prices of commodities of every kind were extravagantly high during the war period in Nevada, which depended for the transportation of its supplies upon wagon roads across mountain ranges that were impassable for six months of every year; and at certain times, at least, during the said period the rich yields of newly opened mines produced an extraordinary demand for labor, largely increasing wages and salaries. These high prices of commodities and services were consistent with, though in their causes independent of, the depreciation of the Treasury notes, which did not pass current in that section of the country, though accepted through necessity by the troops serving there; and it is safe to say that in Nevada the soldier could buy no more with a gold dollar than could the soldier serving in the Eastern States with the greenback or paper dollar.

"On the whole, therefore, we are decided in the conviction that in granting them this extra compensation the legislature was mainly instigated by a desire to do a plain act of justice to the United States Volunteers raised in the State and performing as arduous frontier service, by placing them on the same footing, as regards compensation, with the great mass of the officers and soldiers of the United States Army serving east of the Rocky Mountains. * * * But the fact remains that the declared purpose of the monthly allowance was to give a compensation to the Nevada Volunteers, and that when measured by the current prices of the country in which they were serving their compensation from all sources did not exceed, if indeed it was equal to, the value of the money received as pay by the troops stationed elsewhere—i. e., outside of the Department of the Pacific." (S. Rept. No. 433, 70th Cong., 1st sess.)

Nevertheless, because the Territory of Nevada had used the words "bounty" and "extra pay" in the statute under which it had reimbursed officers the costs of recruiting in lieu thereof and did a "plain act of justice" to its volunteers, all but a small fraction of its expenditures made for the benefit of the United States was rejected on such technical ground.

REIMBURSEMENT BEFORE THE COURT OF CLAIMS

The act of Congress of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. 235), making appropriation for the payment of certain claims, among other things, provided:

"That the claim of the State of Nevada for costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by the Territory of Nevada * * * under the act of Congress of July 27, 1861 (12 Stat. 276), and joint resolution of March 8, 1862 (12 Stat. 615), as interpreted and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States in * * * New York against the United States, decided January 6, 1896 (160 U. S. 598), not hitherto allowed or hitherto disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be reopened, examined, and allowed, and, if deemed necessary, shall be transmitted to the Court of Claims for findings of fact or determination of disputed questions of law to aid in the settlement of the claims by the accounting officers."

The particular force of the New York decision referred to was to declare interest paid by a State on moneys borrowed for the benefit of the United States was an expenditure "properly incurred" within the meaning of the acts of 1861 and 1862.

The controversial questions of fact and law submitted to the Court of Claims for determination amounted to these: (1) What classes of expenditures should be allowed the State of Nevada, and (2) what interest charges are allowable?

The court in its opinion (45 Ct. Cl. 279) specifically states:

"The sole question of law before the court is whether the expenditures for which claim is made by the State were 'properly incurred' within the meaning of the acts of 1861 and 1862.

"The question of the good faith of the State in incurring the expenditures for which it now claims reimbursement; the question of the pressing need of the State for troops during the period of the Civil War; the duty of the United States to provide for the common defense, and the benefits which may have accrued to them from troops raised in Nevada to aid in protecting the Pacific coast may all be conceded without enlarging the liability of the United States under the acts of 1861 and 1862."

That the State may have an equitable claim against the United States was conceded (p. 285, supra):

"That laws enacted * * * at the instance of the officer commanding the military department of the Pacific to provide funds with which to meet the expense of Volunteers was quite natural and commendable under the conditions existing * * * and may give rise to some equity in favor of the claim; but that can have no legal force in the construction of the act of 1861 * * * but where there is a law, equity must follow, and hence we are called upon to determine, not the equities of the claim, but the controverted questions of law."

The court upheld the rules promulgated by Secretary Chase as governing the construction of the act of 1861. As all but $8,559.61 of the claim had been disallowed in 1887 under such rules as hereinbefore set forth, the sole effect of the decision was the allowance of interest on $8,559.61, amounting to $12,283.04, which was paid the State July 1, 1910.

That portion of the opinion which held that—

"Whatever valid claim exists in favor of the State of Nevada for reimbursement for moneys expended in raising troops to aid in suppressing the rebellion accrued, if at all, under the act of July 27, 1861"— is obiter dicta; no question having been submitted, nor was within the jurisdiction of the court to hear and determine under the statute submitting the claim, as to any liability of the United States in the premises other than as accrued under the acts of 1861 and 1862.

ACTS OF 1861 AND 1862 NOT APPLICABLE

The acts of 1861 and 1862 specifically applied to States in their sovereign capacities and were not intended to nor did they apply to the Territories, which were under the direct authority of Congress. The act of Congress of July 27, 1861 (as amended by the joint resolution of March 8, 1862), in all pertinent provisions provided as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed * * * to pay to the governor of any State * * * the cost, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such State for enrolling * * * paying and transporting its troops employed in aiding the United States * * *." (12 Stat. 276.)

The radical distinction in relationship to the General Government of the States and Territories precludes any construction that said act applied, or was intended to apply, to the Territories.

"The State is a sovereign having no derivative powers, exercising its sovereignty by divine right. It gets none of its powers from the General Government. It has bound itself by compact with the other sovereign States not to exercise certain of its sovereign rights, and has conceded these to the Union, but in every other respect it retains its sovereignty which existed anterior to and independent of the Union. (Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 Fed. 908.)

"See also New Hampshire v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 76; Ohio L. Ins., etc., Co. v. DeBolt, 16 How. 416; Spooner v. McConnell, 22 Fed. Cases No. 13245."

As contradistinguished from this reserved, unconceded sovereignty of the States, Chief Justice Waite, in the case of Brunswick First National Bank v. Yankton County (Dakota Territory, 1880) (101 U. S. 129), held:

"All territory within the jurisdiction of the United States not included in any State must necessarily be governed by or under the authority of Congress. The Territories are but political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States. Their relation to the General Government is much the same as that which counties bear to the respective States, and Congress may legislate for them as a State does for its municipal organizations. The organic law of a Territory takes the place of a constitution as the fundamental law of the local government. It is obligatory on and binds the Territorial authorities; but Congress is supreme, and for the purposes of this department of its governmental authority has all the powers of the people of the United States except such as have been expressly or by implication reserved in the prohibitions of the Constitution."

In the more recent opinion, in the case of Christensen v. King County (Wash.) (239 U. S. 356), the Supreme Court stated:

"There is, of course, no dispute as to the sovereignty of the United States over the Territory of Washington or as to the consequent control of Congress. As an organized political division the Territory possessed only the powers which Congress had conferred. * * *

"See also Ex parte Morgan (Ark. 1883) (20 Fed. 208); Murphy v. Ramsey (Utah, 1885) (114 U. S. 15); Church of Jesus Christ v. U. S. (Utah, 1890 (136 U. S. 1); U. S. v. McMillan (Utah, 1897) (165 U. S. 604)."

It was not until October 31, 1864, date of Nevada's admission into the Union, that the acts of 1861 and 1862 were made applicable by the express provisions of section 11 of the enabling act of Congress of March 21, 1864—

"That from and after the admission of the said State of Nevada into the Union, in pursuance of this act, the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within said State as elsewhere within the United States."

Prior thereto, on February 20, 1864, the Territory had passed the act under which the expenditures here in question were made.

LEGAL, EQUITABLE, AND MORAL BASIS OF REIMBURSEMENT

The question of the legal, equitable, and moral liability of the United States in the premises resolves primarily into what congressional authorization, approval, or ratification, if any, attaches to the Territorial volunteers act and so invests it with a status different from that of an ordinary act of a Territorial assembly or the similar acts of States.

ACT RATIFIED BY CONGRESS

The organic act of the Territory of Nevada, approved March 2, 1861, required (sec. 3) that copies of the laws and proceedings of the legislative assembly and governor be transmitted to the President and the Congress of the United States. It appears from the following section of the Revised Law of the United States (1878):

"SEC. 1850. All laws passed by the legislative assembly and governor of any Territory except the Territories of Colorado, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming shall be submitted to Congress and, if disapproved, shall be null and void—" that the only other Territories during the period 1861–1865 subject to this requirement were Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona, Washington, and Utah.

The Nevada Territorial volunteers act was duly transmitted and laid before the two Houses of Congress. (House Journal No. 62, 38th Cong., 2d sess., 1864–65, p. 7.)

Congress having the authority—and in respect to another act of the Territorial Assembly of Nevada, relating to corporations (12 Stat. 709), having exercised such authority—to disapprove and annul all or any portion of said act and not so doing, but allowing said act to stand, thereby approved and, in the premises, ratified said act as the act of the Territory of Nevada under authority of the United States; and is estopped from denying reimbursement. (Sowers case, 213 U. S. 5.)

The Territorial volunteers act was not an ordinary, but instead an extraordinary, act of the Legislative Assembly and Governor of the Territory of Nevada. It was not related to, but disassociated from, the ordinary subjects of Territorial legislation. It was, in effect, the assumption of an obligation of the Government of the United States and not of its own, in order to aid and assist the Government in an exigency with which the Government was unprepared to meet and cope. The Territory of Nevada was its primary resource, as hitherto shown, and acted only on urgent requisitions transmitted through the commander of the Department of the Pacific on behalf of the Secretary of War.

TERRITORIAL VOLUNTEERS ACT GOVERNS

The acts of 1861 and 1862, supra, not having been extended or made applicable to Nevada Territory, the Territorial volunteers act, as so approved and ratified by the Congress of the United States, became the governing law in the premises, to wit: An act of the Territory of Nevada under authority of the United States.

On this point the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of McLean v. D. & R. G. R. R. Co. (203 U. S. p. 38) held:

"The right to legislate in the Territories is conferred under constitutional authority by the Congress of the United States and the passage of a Territorial law is the exertion of an authority exercised under the United States."

In the case of Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Sowers (213 U. S. 5) the Supreme Court reaffirmed the decision in the McLean case and stated:

"The passage of a legislative act of a Territory is the exercise of authority under the United States."

The force of the Nevada Territorial volunteers act did not terminate with the admission of Nevada as a State. Section 2 of article 17 of its constitution, as approved by President Lincoln under authority, and "without further action whatever on the part of Congress" (Nevada enabling act of March 21, 1864), provided:

"SEC. 2. All laws of the Territory of Nevada at the time of the admission of this State, not repugnant to this constitution, shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitations, or be altered or repealed by the legislature."

On March 11, 1865, for reasons hereinbefore stated, the State Legislature of Nevada passed an act, notwithstanding the veto of the governor, repealing and simultaneously reenacting the provisions of the Territorial volunteers act; the sole material change being an increase of extra pay to officers according to rank and so equating their compensation on substantially the same basis relatively as allowed the soldiers; the relief made retroactive to cover the period of service.

"The repeal and simultaneously reenactment of substantially the same statutory provisions is to be construed not as an implied repeal of the original statute but as a continuation thereof." (36 Cyc. 1084.)

Federal and State decisions supporting the above text are so uniform and voluminous that it has become an accepted principle of law.

The State of Nevada having been in honor bound to assume the liabilities accrued and accruing under the Territorial volunteers act, and the Congress of the United States having approved such assumption, the State is entitled to the full benefit of the Territorial volunteers act as the governing law defining the liability of the United States in the premises. It would therefore now appear that Congress inadvertently specified the act of 1861 applying to States only instead of the Nevada Territorial act under which the expenditures were made in the reference of the Nevada case to the Court of Claims.

ADJUSTMENT OF OFFICERS' PAY

The only portion of the unreimbursed principal sum of the expenditures made by the State of Nevada which did not accrue under the original provisions of the Territorial volunteers act was the increased allowance to officers by the State's amendment of March 11, 1865, the amount of which is comparatively small.

On the foregoing date the following state of facts obtained:

No premonition that the Civil War would speedily end.

The exigency of the Government for troops to protect the Overland Trail continuing and Nevada its primary recourse.

The third requisition of the Secretary of War upon Nevada to complete the recruiting of a regiment of cavalry and one of infantry still lacking, respectively, four and seven companies to complete the quota.

Recruiting halted by the fact that men suitable for officers were needed both for the service and to recruit the men they were to command and who were unable, on account of the high cost of living, to make the sacrifice without some assistance.

Under these circumstances the State legislature, on March 11, 1865, had the right to rely on the Territorial volunteers act as governing in the premises, and that the approval by Congress of said Territorial act sanctioned the granting of extra pay to Nevada volunteers in the exigency presented.

Moreover, Nevada, in responding to the urgent requisitions of the War Department to recruit troops to protect the Overland Trail, had acted and still was acting, for and in behalf of the United States as principal. In the agency so undertaken, the situation being remote, the conditions being extraordinary, and the emergency one of national concern, it was expected to act in concurrence with the recommendations of the commander of the Department of the Pacific, as seemed best to accomplish the ends for which the agency was imposed.

Nevada so acted by amending the Territorial volunteers act as stated, and which action was necessary, proper, and indispensable in the premises and the authority for which was the Territorial volunteers act itself and the continuation of the exigency which had caused its sanction by Congress.

The rule of agency as expressed in Story on Agency is applicable:

"Whether the authority be expressed or implied it necessarily carries with it or includes in it as an incident, all the powers which are necessary or proper or usual as means to effectuate the purposes for which the agency was created."

The leading case defining the authority of an agent in an emergency is that of Forrestier v. Bordman. (9th Fed. Case 4945, also 1 Story, 43.) The principal laid down therein has since threaded all American jurisprudence. If we substitute the word "agent" for "supercargo" and "principal" for "owner" as used by Justice Story in the decision, the governing rule is as follows:

"An agent is not bound to observe the exact terms of his instructions if thereby the interests of the principal would be sacrificed or his objects frustrated.

"In cases of necessity or great urgency it is only necessary that the agent should act bona fide and with reasonable discretion in order to bind the principal."

In United States v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co. (149 Fed. 809), the court held that when the emergency passes the privilege ceases.

On March 11, 1865, neither the emergency situation along the Overland Trail nor the exigency of the United States for troops to protect it had passed. The Legislature of Nevada was not bound to observe the exact terms of the Territorial volunteers act if thereby the interests of the United States would be sacrificed or its objects frustrated. It was only necessary that it should act in good faith and with reasonable discretion.

That it acted in good faith and with reasonable discretion has never been questioned. Moreover, it so acted at the express suggestion of the chief military officer of the United States in the region of the emergency, the commander of the Department of the Pacific (letter of March 8, 1865), and not independently of, nor contrary to, his recommendations.

The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Miners' Bank case, cited by the court in the Atchison v. Sowers case, supra, is very pursuasive. From the opinion written by Mr. Justice Daniel, we quote the following excerpt:

"Congress, in creating the Territorial governments, and in conferring upon them powers of general legislation, did not, from obvious principles of policy and necessity, ordain a suspension of all acts proceeding from those powers until expressly sanctioned by themselves, whilst, for considerations equally strong, they reserved the power of disapproving or annulling such acts of Territorial legislation as might be deemed detrimental. A different system of procedure would have been fatal to all practical improvement in those territories, however urgently called for; nay, might have disarmed them of the very power of self-preservation. An invasion or insurrection or any other crisis demanding the most strenuous action would have had to remain without preventive or remedy 'till the Congress, if not in session, could be convened, or, when in session, must have awaited its possibly procrastinated aid.'" (Miners' Bank v. State of Iowa, 12 How. 8; 19 U. S. 6.)

Applying the foregoing statements to the actual conditions existing in the Territory of Nevada at the time the debt in question was contracted by the Territorial legislature solely for the benefit of the United States—a vast desert region, sparsely populated, shut off from the rest of the Nation by impassable mountain barriers, both to the east and the west, for practically six months of each year; an Indian uprising which lasted for many years which, according to the commanding general of the Pacific, threatened the entire closure of communication with the Pacific coast—the action of the Territorial legislature under these circumstances was directly in accordance with the powers by it possessed, as stated by the Supreme Court in the Miners' Bank case rendered in 1861, such action receiving the approval of Congress.

LIABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES

The legal liability of the United States rests on the following grounds: (1) By approving said Territorial act of February 20, 1864, providing extra pay, Congress accepted said act as a modification of the act of 1861 and the regulations made thereunder, so far as Nevada alone was concerned, and thereby made such extra pay here in dispute valid. (2) It is proven that such extra pay was made by the Territory of Nevada avowedly for the benefit of the United States alone with the approval of Congress; and as stated by the Supreme Court such Territorial act was the exercise of the authority of the United States. (3) Congress is estopped from denying just reimbursement.

The moral liability of the United States rests on the fact that its sparse people struggled to build a Commonwealth upon a desert, burdened themselves with the cost of statehood and debt to serve the Union in its exigencies at its urgent call.

The Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. Realty Co. (163 U. S. 427) said:

"That the case as presented to Congress was enough upon which to base the assertion that there was a moral and honorable claim upon the Public Treasury which that body had the constitutional right to recognize and pay; that even though in its purely legal aspects an invalid law could not be made the basis of a legal claim, the planter had acquired a claim against the Government of an 'equitable, moral, or honorable nature'; that the Nation, speaking broadly, owed a 'debt' to an individual when his claim grew out of right and justice—when, in other words, it was based upon considerations of a moral or merely honorary nature."

Reimbursement in accordance with the account stated by the Comptroller General in Senate Document No. 210, Seventieth Congress, second session, is strongly based on "right and justice," as the State of Nevada is not asking Congress to appropriate a dollar she has not actually expended for the benefit of the United States.

Mr. ODDIE. The statement of the Comptroller General shows that the money is due the State of Nevada from the United States.

Mr. President, under the rules it can not be said that this reimbursement of a sovereign State for the money it actually expended for the benefit of the United States on an implied contract of repayment, as found by the Comptroller General, is a private claim. It does not come under the category of private claims.

Rule XVI states:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

This resolution passed the Senate at this session, and comes under this rule that I have just read, and the bill itself passed the Senate a few days ago.

This amendment has been reported favorably by a standing committee of the Senate, the Judiciary Committee, and is for money that the State of Nevada actually expended during the Civil War in combating the Indians in that western country who were attacking the United States mail and overland traffic. They were a serious menace, and it was necessary that the Overland Trail be kept open; and the only way in which it could be kept open was by raising troops in Nevada under great difficulties, because the population was small and the people were undergoing hardships and difficulties. This was requested by the commanding officers of the Army of the United States. Nevada was a Territory at that time. This action of the Territory was later approved by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I hope this amendment will go through. I now introduce the amendment and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 100, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

To reimburse the State of Nevada the net balance due as certified by the Comptroller General of the United States January 26, 1929, and printed in Senate Document No. 210, Seventieth Congress, second session, the sum of $595,076.53.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am very sorry that we can not always do as we should like to do for Senators associated with us; but for a great many years we have been bound to observe the rule that claims can not go on deficiency bills, so I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment. I shall be very glad to help otherwise in any way that I can; but the amendment can not go on this bill.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I respect very much the opinion of the Senator regarding claims; but, as I have stated, this does not come under the head of a claim. It is a reimbursement of a sovereign State for money it actually expended for the benefit of the United States on an implied contract of repayment as found by the Comptroller General, to which I have referred.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. It is a just claim if there ever was a just claim before the United States Senate. There are numbers of precedents which will permit favorable action on this amendment, but, because of the limitation of time for each amendment under the agreement, I can not go into them and the leading arguments in favor of it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The Chair, in ruling upon the point of order, will remind the Senate that there is a clear distinction between public and private claims—so much so that in the other body there are two different calendars, one known as the Private Calendar and the other the Union Calendar. The Chair will declare that this claim is a private claim, and therefore is out of order.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question]. The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask for a roll call on the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 213, strike out lines 20, 21, and 22, in the following words:

SHORT TITLE

This act may be cited as the "deficiency act, fiscal year 1929."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill and call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 102, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

The sums of $308,036 and $39,500, appropriated for technical construction for Air Corps, Army, in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, are hereby made available for expenditure for improvement of landing field at Selfridge Field, Mich., $125,000, and Shreveport, La., $50,000; school building, $100,000, and noncommissioned officers' quarters, $42,000, at Maxwell Field, Ala.; moving and reerecting technical buildings, $15,000, at Boston Airport, East Boston, Mass.; night-flying lighting system, $3,775, and runways, $10,775, at Fort Crockett, Tex.; authorized in the act entitled "An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes," approved February 29. (Acts of March 23, 1928, vol. 45, pp. 334–337.)

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this is merely a transfer from already authorized appropriations.

I have examined this amendment at the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama. It is in strict accordance with the recommendations of the War Department. It does not call for the appropriation of any new money, but merely provides for the transfer of existing appropriations, which it is believed by the department can be more advantageously spent at the points indicated in the amendment than at the other places originally designed.

The War Department did recommend a transfer from Chanute Field, Ill.; but in line with the assurance that I gave to the Senators from Illinois when Scott Field was under consideration, I have asked the Senator from Alabama not to include any transfer from that field.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us what fields are affected?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry? Have we not provided for all these improvements and extensions and that sort of thing? We have passed bill after bill about these different posts and stations. I thought they had already been taken care of.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, at the time the housing bill was being reported the Secretary of War sent me a letter, dated January 22, 1929, which is printed in our report on the housing bill, and that explains the need of each of the transfers accomplished by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. This is in strict accordance with our action on the housing bill last month.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one additional statement? It is in accordance with it except that it does not include all of the appropriations that the War Department recommended; only about one-third of them.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. BLACK. Only about one-third.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. As I have explained, some of the transfers have not yet been made, but this was described in our report on the housing bill, and the necessity for it shown at the time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will not the Senator tell us just what fields are being given up and transferred to this new improvement?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know that I can give the complete list that goes into this aggregate, but I can give enough illustrations to show the Senate what is planned.

At Fort Crockett, Tex., a dope and paint house had been provided for. At the time the money was appropriated for that, it was felt that it was urgently needed. They find that they are having trouble with the runways there, and to develop that field might run us into the expenditure of far more money than we ever designed, so probably the money will never be spent there, and it would better be spent at Maxwell Field, where it is urgently needed.

In the Hawaiian Department appropriation was made of $39,500 for a hangar at Luke Field. Probably the Air Corps activities are going to be moved to the tracts A and B, as they are called, one of them close to the eastern side of Pearl Harbor, and it would be wasteful to build that hangar at Luke Field, as originally planned. That is where $39,000 comes from.

It was planned to build concrete floors in the Middletown Air Depot up near Harrisburg, in Pennsylvania. It is now found that the warehouse can be built in such a manner as not to require the expenditure for concrete, and that provides about $38,000 more.

It represents savings all down the line at a number of fields of that sort, the kind of savings we ought to encourage in making appropriations, I think. Practically, they find the money of this new technical work by saving it at a lot of spots where they are able to economize, and they are not asking us for new money.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator for his explanation.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question for information. A short time ago a judgment was rendered in favor of the Sioux Tribe of Indians against the United States approximating, including principal and interest, some $300,000. That money does not belong to the United States; it belongs to those Indians.

I submitted an amendment to the committee asking for the payment of that money, and they ruled it out on some point of order. Yet amendment after amendment has been adopted on this bill up to the present time that were subject to points of order, taking money out of the United States Treasury, but the amendment which I have offered would not take any money belonging to the United States out of the United States Treasury, it would give to the Indians money which belongs to them, which has been awarded to them by a decision of a United States court. I can not understand why the Committee on Appropriations insists that that shall be ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this matter has reference to a judgment of the Court of Claims now pending as an amendment to the first deficiency bill. The committee in considering this proposed amendment was met with the rule against legislation on an appropriation bill. As the Senator has said, judgment after judgment is provided for in this bill, but the Senator's proposition has to do with how the amount of money adjudged to be due is to be used after it has been paid.

Mr. McMASTER. Let me ask the chairman of the committee this question: Did the committee make any effort to get in touch with the Treasury Department to ascertain about it?

Mr. WARREN. I did not argue the case because I did not have the details of it.

Mr. McMASTER. It seems strange that appropriation after appropriation is allowed on the floor of the Senate, providing for money to be taken out of the United States Treasury, but this is a matter in which a judgment has been rendered. I think the bill may be held up long enough so that we can get that information.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has had a week to get the information.

Mr. McMASTER. No; we have not had a week. I was informed by my secretary that the bill was just brought up on Monday.

Mr. WARREN. But we had the matter under consideration.

Mr. McMASTER. If that is what the Senator wants, we can hold the bill up, then, until we can get the certificate.

Mr. WARREN. I do not consider that it is necessary to have any dispute about it. We simply can not do this.

Mr. McMASTER subsequently said: Mr. President, I submitted to the committee an amendment for the payment of money to the Sioux Indians. We were told here by the Appropriations Committee that the judgments had not been certified to Congress, and, therefore, they could not take any action until that matter had been attended to.

On investigation, however, I found that on January 8, 1929, the President of the United States as well as the Budget Bureau certified those accounts to Washington. The messages were sent to the United States Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations on January 9, 1929. I just wish to insert that statement in the RECORD to clear up the situation. I do not attach any blame to the members of the Appropriations Committee. I think the fact that this matter was not called to the attention of the committee was due to the lack of attention of the clerical force. As the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is here, I simply wanted to straighten out the RECORD on that matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say that in a long service here, this is the first time I was ever presented with a matter of this kind with the statement that it failed to receive attention in my office. It may never have gotten there, or it may never have come to us. I have not in mind any clerk who may have overlooked it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from South Dakota that there are not any more diligent clerks in the whole Senate than the clerks of the Appropriations Committee, nor any clerks who work harder.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I do not wish to cast any reflections on anyone. I simply want to show that the document transmitted by the President of the United States and by the Budget Bureau was sent here on January 9 and was referred by the Senate to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to suggest, in justice to the clerk of the Appropriations Committee, that he has been bedfast and sick for seven or eight weeks and is not able to get out yet. The other clerks are first class, too.

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely first class.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there has been, as stated, an absence in the force of our committee. We are without our main clerk, and have been for some time; but there are others under him who are equally fitted and industrious. I will look up this matter and see what the situation is. I know very well that it never went across the table down there.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to say a word about the employees in the Appropriations Committee. I think they are fine gentlemen, hard-working men, and faithful public servants; and I can not speak of them in too high terms.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we not have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will take their seats. There is too much confusion in the Chamber. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from West Virginia offers the following amendment, to insert at the proper place the following language:

That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay the salary of Representative VICTOR L. BERGER, of the fifth Wisconsin district, for his services in the Sixty-sixth Congress, to which he was regularly elected and denied admission because of an alleged violation of the espionage act, which said conviction was later reversed on appeal by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that there will be no time taken up with the discussion of this proposed amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order against this amendment as being new legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 196, after line 5, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the city of Binghamton, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,002.79, representing the amount which would have been assessable for local improvements during the years 1927 and 1928 against the property owned by the United States at the junction of State, Henry, and Washington Streets in such city if such property had been privately owned.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is a well-known fact that the Treasury does not pay for improvements made adjoining its property, its post offices, and such buildings. They sometimes pay for the sidewalks and the curbing, but for paving the streets, and for other improvements, they do not pay. Anyway, we could not consider this now; there is no Budget estimate for it. Therefore I will have to make the point of order against the amendment as being legislation.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to raise a point of order against this?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the committee raises the point of order, and the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk be authorized to correct the totals and to renumber the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, if there are no further amendments to be offered by any Senator, I desire now to take a few moments to explain the Federal employees' pay amendment that was agreed to by the Senate, especially in its relation to the situation in the House of Representatives, so that we may understand why it should be held in the conference agreement.

At the last session of the Congress the House passed what was called the Welch pay bill. There were some advances to some of the higher-grade employees in that bill which the Senate did not change in any way.

The Welch bill as it came to the Senate cut off the two lower steps in nearly all the grades, and in most of them it only put on one step at the top. That made it impossible to grant a uniform advance to all the employees in the different grades.

The Senate then amended the bill and put on two steps at the top and advanced all of the employees the same. That bill passed the Senate, I believe, by unanimous vote at that time.

Later a ruling of the Comptroller General cut down more than one step at the top, in fact cut down about half of the steps; and this amendment we have just agreed to corrects those two matters and makes an even advance again for the employees, as the Senate originally passed the bill.

The situation in the House is this: A similar bill was brought before the committee and all of the matters covered in this amendment agreed to in the Senate were agreed to in the committee, and a bill has been reported and is on the House Calendar to that effect, but they added other provisions to the bill, cutting down some of the advances that were made in some of the higher grades.

The advances which are cut down in the higher grades are advances which the House distinctly made in the Welch bill, and were not disturbed by the Senate in its former enactment. Therefore both the House and the Senate at this time have agreed to the propositions in this amendment agreed to by the Senate to-day, and I think it would be unfair to rule out these advances to which both Houses have already agreed, because there are some other situations where one House wants to make some reductions. The Senate committee would not favor those reductions, and I think the Senate itself would not, whereas the House seems to be favorable to them.

Those matters are not related to the propositions of advances in this bill, and therefore there is no real conflict between the two Houses upon the amendments agreed to in the Senate, and I believe that if the conferees present the situation in that way they will have no trouble in getting an agreement to this amendment as it was agreed to here to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. KEYES, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, owing to the absence of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], who was one of the conferees on the first deficiency bill, I asked that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] be placed on the conference committee in the place of the Senator from Colorado.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the action of the House on the Interior Department appropriation bill be laid before the Senate. I shall move that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 39.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the motion is going to be debated. Before it is made, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of action on the Interior Department appropriation bill the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning where we left off on the last call.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that that course should be pursued, but I want to express the hope that as soon as that is done we may have an executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. I am going to ask for an executive session later on.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator means later in the day?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire what hour the Senator fixed for taking up the calendar?

Mr. CURTIS. As soon as action is taken on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it is possible there will be some bills to be reported to-day by committees. I ask that those reports may be included in the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the request of the Senator from Kansas, it means that we shall proceed with the calendar from the point where we left off the other day and go to the end of the calendar, but not return to the beginning.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Utah is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

NEW ORLEANS ARMY SUPPLY BASE

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a request which will not take any time, I am sure?

Mr. SMOOT. I want it distinctly understood if it leads to any debate at all I shall object.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think it will lead to any debate whatsoever.

From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably and unanimously the bill (H. R. 16701) to provide for the payment of rental to the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans of the property known as the New Orleans Army Supply Base, New Orleans, La.

As the title indicates, the bill provides for payment to the commissioners of New Orleans of rental which is due them under a written lease between the time the United States notified them that it was going to exercise its option of purchase and the time when it actually paid the money. The United States stopped paying rent when it gave the notice, and then it was three years before the Government became satisfied with the title. In the meantime, the United States remained in possession. The War Department recommends the bill, it was unanimously passed in the House, and it ought to be passed here.

There is an amendment on the second page to make the amount accord with the amount on the first page. It is simply a clerical error in the bill. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I have no objection if it does not lead to any debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 2, line 10, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$38,638.40" and insert "$39,686.54," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans, rental in the sum of $39,686.54 for the use and occupancy of the property known as the New Orleans Army Supply Base, New Orleans, La., said rental being for the period from August 1, 1924, on which date the United States ceased to pay rental for the said property, to August 26, 1927, on which date the United States tendered a check in payment for the purchase of the said property to the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans, from which the same was purchased, said rental being at the rates provided for in contracts between the United States of America and the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans, dated May 29, 1918, and June 19, 1918.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $39,686.54 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes set forth in section 1 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SUPPLEMENT TO NATURALIZATION LAWS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I have a very short conference report, which will not lead to debate, I am certain. It is a conference report on the bill (H. R. 349) to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes. It is almost exactly as it passed the Senate and as it was reported by the Committee on Immigration. The only change made in it is that the amnesty provision dates back to 1921 instead of 1924. The Senate bill would have given amnesty and would have allowed the naturalization of persons who came in prior to 1924. In conference we have receded from that and have put the date back to 1921, so that anybody who came in before 1921, and who under the present law can not be deported, and who is a person of good moral character, may be naturalized now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the basis for changing the date from 1924 to 1921?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The reason for that is that the House was unwilling to legalize the entry of any person who came irregularly since the first quota law was adopted. So the date of the first quota law, June 3, 1921, was fixed as the dead line.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The present arrangement then is more restrictive than that contained in the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes. The conference report is stronger against the illegally admitted aliens than was the bill itself as passed by the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 349) to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

On page 1 of the Senate engrossed amendment, line 11, strike out "July 1, 1924" and insert "June 3, 1921";

On page 3 of the Senate engrossed amendment, lines 4 and 5, strike out "After the expiration of 60 days after the enactment of this act no" and in lieu thereof insert "No";

On page 3 of the Senate engrossed amendment, line 7, after "valid," insert a comma;

On page 5 of the Senate engrossed amendment, line 2, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "in addition to the affidavits required by this act to be included in the petition";

On page 8 of the Senate engrossed amendment, line 22, strike out "or under section 1993 of the Revised Statutes";

On page 9 of the Senate engrossed amendment, lines 16 and 17, strike out "be conclusive evidence of the citizenship of the individual named therein" and insert "have the same effect as a certificate of citizenship issued by a court having naturalization jurisdiction";

On page 11 of the Senate engrossed amendment, line 4, after the semicolon, insert "any political subdivision of a State not included within any county" and a semicolon; and

On page 12 of the Senate engrossed amendment, after line 5, insert the following:

"SEC. 12. Sections 1 to 10, inclusive, of this act shall take effect on July 1, 1929. The remainder of the act shall take effect upon its enactment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

HIRAM JOHNSON,
DAVID A. REED,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ALBERT JOHNSON,
BIRD J. VINCENT,
GEO. J. SCHNEIDER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CHOWAN RIVER BRIDGE, NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 16954) granting the consent of Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Chowan River in Gates and Hertford Counties, N. C. The bill passed the House and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Camp Manufacturing Co., a corporation of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Chowan River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at a point distant in a southerly direction along the center of said river about 1.3 miles from the Virginia-North Carolina line, in Gates and Hertford Counties, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Camp Manufacturing Co., a corporation of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns; and any corporation to which, or any person to whom, such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLASS, the bill (S. 5831) granting the consent of Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Chowan River, in Gates and Hertford Counties, N. C., was ordered to be definitely postponed.

MEHERRIN RIVER BRIDGE, NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. GLASS. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 16955) granting the consent of Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Meherrin River, in Hertford County, N. C.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Camp Manufacturing Co., a corporation of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Meherrin River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at a point distant in a northwesterly direction along the center of said river about 4.6 miles from the confluence of said Meherrin River with the Chowan River, in Hertford County, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Camp Manufacturing Co., a corporation of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLASS, the bill (S. 5830) granting the consent in Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Meherrin River, in Hertford County, N. C., was ordered to be indefinitely postponed.

H. E. JONES

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there is a bill which has just come over from the House, the bill (H. R. 16867) for the relief of H. E. Jones. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLEASE. I think it is understood that we are going to take up the calendar later in the day. If we are going to take up all the House bills that are sent over from the House in this way none of us know when we may get to the consideration of any Senate bills. At this rate we shall never get to the consideration of bills on the calendar. Therefore I must object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2410. An act to amend section 1440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

S. 3736. An act for the relief of soldiers who were discharged from the Army during the World War because of misrepresentation of age.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13752) to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1577) to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest, Idaho, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COLTON, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. EVANS of Montana were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 4385) to establish the Teton National Park in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COLTON, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. EVANS of Montana were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 4848) for the relief of T. L. Young and C. T. Cole, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. IRWIN, Mr. DYER, and Mr. BOX were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the action of the House on the Interior Department appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 39 to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 39. Briefly I will state——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I would like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McKellar	Simmons
Barkley	Fletcher	McMaster	Smith
Bayard	Frazier	McNary	Smoot
Bingham	George	Mayfield	Steck
Black	Gerry	Metcalf	Steiwer
Blaine	Glass	Moses	Stephens
Blease	Glenn	Neely	Swanson
Borah	Goff	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Gould	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Greene	Nye	Trammell
Broussard	Hale	Oddie	Tydings
Burton	Harris	Overman	Tyson
Capper	Harrison	Pine	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hastings	Pittman	Wagner
Copeland	Hawes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Heflin	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Dale	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Deneen	Jones	Sackett	Watson
Dill	Kendrick	Schall	Wheeler
Edge	Keyes	Sheppard
Edwards	King	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would really explain to the Senate at this time just why he thinks the Senate ought to recede from this amendment which it has twice approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, amendment numbered 39 provides for the condemnation of land by the Government in national parks. The bill as it came from the other House authorized such condemnation. The Senate amended the bill by striking out the provision allowing the Government to condemn land in the national parks. In conference it developed at our first meeting that the House conferees were not going to yield on amendment numbered 39, which had been adopted by the Senate.

On January 17 the first vote was taken in the House. I told the House conferees that the Senate conferees would not yield until there should have been a vote taken by the House. The result of that vote was 72 to 16 against the Senate amendment. By the way, that was a standing vote. I and the other members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate insisted that the House take a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment. On February 19 that vote was taken. I told the conferees on the part of the House that I would not make a report to the Senate until there should have been a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment in the House. That vote, which, I repeat, was taken on February 19, resulted 28 for the Senate amendment and 304 against the amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator please state just what is the matter under consideration? I have just come into the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate is now considering the motion made by me to recede from amendment numbered 39 on the Interior Department appropriation bill now under consideration. I am discussing that amendment. By receding from that amendment, the bill will be passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if this amendment would apply to Smoky Mountain Park, in eastern Tennessee? Could the Government condemn lands for park purposes there?

Mr. SMOOT. The provision would apply if that is a national park.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it is a national park. The Government, the State, and private interests combined are buying lands in order to complete the Smoky Mountain National Park. There are a great many people who own little homes in the various mountain and cove districts, some of whom want to stay there. I am not sure that it would be wise to give carte blanche authority to the Secretary of the Interior to condemn those lands. In my mind, it is doubtful whether or not we ought to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there will be any occasion for condemning lands in that kind of a park.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think those lands ought to be bought or, if certain contingencies arise by which they should be condemned, I think the park authorities should submit those contingencies to Congress and obtain the specific right to condemn the lands rather than for the Secretary of the Interior merely to have a blanket authority to condemn. I am just wondering whether the Senator from Utah agrees with me in that view?

Mr. SMOOT. It has not been the practice at all on the part of the officials of the Government to condemn lands such as the Senator from Tennessee has reference to. The thought is that the national parks are becoming of very great importance to all of the people of the country. The number of visitors to them is going to increase every year from now on. A few years ago only a few thousand people visited the parks, while now there are hundreds of thousands who do so, and every year the number is increasing. In certain parks where the Government officials and the owners of land can not agree upon the price, particularly as to timberlands, and so forth, this amendment, if agreed to, would authorize the Government to condemn the lands.

There may be, and no doubt will be, cases where the private parties and the Government can not agree, but in most cases they will be able to agree on the value.

There is no intention whatever of driving out homesteaders either in that park or in the Glacier National Park, as was stated at the time the bill was under consideration in the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the attention of the Senator to the language used which I understand it is intended to retain in the bill. It reads:

> Or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. p. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government.

That is a very broad authority.

Mr. SMOOT. It is general condemnation authority; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and it gives the power to just one man in the entire Government. Where the taking of private property, for park purposes at any rate, is concerned, it seems to me the authority might be hedged about somewhat. I doubt whether any one man should be given the right to condemn property of citizens for park purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. The price of the land in case the individuals and the Government can not agree will be fixed in condemnation proceedings by the court.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I have said, when the vote was taken on the amendment in the House on February 19, the result was 304 against the Senate amendment and 28 for it. After that there were several propositions made by way of modification, but the conferees on the part of the House would not yield to any proposition that was submitted to them by the conferees on the part of the Senate. The conferees on the part of the Senate again declined to agree, and a disagreement was again reported upon the amendment No. 39. It went back to the House for another vote, and that vote which was only a standing vote and taken near the close of the session, was 42 to 12.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator state to the Senate the situation in regard to this matter? If the conference report shall be adopted, what will then happen? Will that leave the Department of the Interior free to condemn private property just exactly as the department may feel it is justified in doing?

Mr. SMOOT. The provision which gives the Secretary of the Interior the power to condemn lands is in these words:

> For the acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments by purchase or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it intended under this provision to give the Secretary of the Interior the power to take all privately owned lands without regard to their character and without regard to the purposes to which they are now being utilized.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the wording of the House provision he would have the right to condemn all privately owned land or standing timber within the boundaries of national parks.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And there is no limit whatever placed on his authority; he is given absolute jurisdiction and discretion to take any lands for any purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what it means.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Or for no purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Or for no purpose. There is not any occasion in the world for the existence of such authority or for the exercise of such authority.

Mr. SMOOT. There are some cases where condemnation is necessary; for instance, in one of the parks, particularly in California——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no objection to giving the Secretary of the Interior the power to take timberlands, and there is no objection to giving him the power in cases where the necessity exists to condemn lands, but it is the undue extension of bureaucratic control to give him unlimited authority, and I do not think the Senate is going to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. We want to pass this bill, and we can not do it in any other way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, we frequently get the information that we can not pass a bill unless we do something that there is no justification for doing.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to resign as one of the conferees.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no; nothing whatever would be accomplished by that.

Mr. SMOOT. I have done everything in my power to bring this thing about. The House has voted, as I have already stated, overwhelmingly. It has also had a bill presented——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As a matter of fact, this is legislation on a general appropriation bill; it violates the fundamental rules of procedure; and, unless there is a strong justification for it, it ought not to be insisted upon. I do not care from what source the insistence comes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Another thing, Mr. President: Let me say to the Senator that I do not think either the House or the Senate should arbitrarily take the position that "unless we have our particular way this bill will fail." If the House takes that position, let them take the burden of it.

I do not think we ought to yield on a matter of vital importance and of real principle. If the Secretary of the Interior has in mind any land which ought to be condemned, and will make a report of that to the Congress, the department can get the authority whenever it pleases; but, as the Senator from Arkansas has so splendidly pointed out, we ought not to give this blanket authority to take land for any purpose, or without any purpose at all.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. This issue is not yet clearly placed before the Senate. Am I right in this?

If the conference report should be adopted, it would give the Secretary of the Interior absolute power to condemn any property in the sections involved. That is the first proposition. Second, if the amendment adopted in the Senate should prevail, it would leave in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior the power of condemnation except as regards private homes and church establishments and hotels.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that amendment has not been agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. No; it has not been agreed to, but that is the issue?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It has passed the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not in issue at all now. The question is just as the Senator stated it in the first place: If the Senate amendment is agreed to—and the House say they will not do it—but if it is, then, of course, these privately owned lands or standing-timber lands can be acquired by purchase. That is what the bill would provide if amendment No. 39 of the Senate were agreed to by the House; but the House will not agree to it.

I want to say to the Senator, and he knows it, that I have made the same proposition to limit this to private residences, hotels, and timber.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator must not be sensitive. There is no reflection upon the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly not.

Mr. COPELAND. It is simply a question of the issue before us.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is a matter of principle.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all; and that is what I want the Senate to decide upon—whether we are going to let this bill fail, or whether we are going to yield on amendment No. 39.

(At this point a message was received from the House of Representatives, which appears elsewhere in to-day's RECORD.)

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. BROUSSARD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield first to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has not yet conceded that the issue is as I have recited. I am anxious to have it clear-cut.

Mr. SMOOT. I stated to the Senator that he had stated the proposition correctly. There is not any doubt about that. Not only that, but I will say to the Senator that he has stated it very clearly; and that is the issue. The issue here is whether we are going to give the Secretary of the Interior power to condemn privately owned lands or standing timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments by purchase or by condemnation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Or whether we shall restrict his authority to——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. To the cases where there is a necessity for condemnation in the public interest.

Mr. SMOOT. But, so far, every proposition has been turned down by the House by a vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well; let them turn it down.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not feel that way about it. I feel that nothing is going to happen within a year that is going to hurt anybody particularly, and if there is an abuse of the authority at any time within the coming year we will have some basis to ask for the amendment of the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this provision would amend the law. It gives the Secretary of the Interior absolute power of condemnation at will, and that is too great a power to give him; and if the House can not see that, I shall be astonished.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment does not do that. The amendment gives him that power.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it gives him that power. To pass a bill, and say "If it does not work right we are going to repeal it," is something we ought not to do unless it meets our approval.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply say that that could be done. I do not say that that is what ought to be done; but we do have that to fall back on.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator does not think I am criticizing him, because I am not.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator has done the best he could about the matter; but the Senate ought to back up the Senator again, and we ought to let the House know that we are not going to recede on this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senator to know that if that is done now, the bill will fail.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it will not fail.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what will happen. I have every reason to believe that.

I do not think it is proper for me to refer here to Members of the House. That would not be proper.

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. SMOOT. But I have every reason to believe, and I want to say now to the Senate of the United States, that if this amendment of the Senate is not receded from, we are not going to have any appropriation bill by the 4th of March.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. I think the Senate might be interested to know about this: Where does the demand come from for vesting this extraordinary power in the Secretary of the Interior when both the Senators from the State of Montana are opposed to the bill, as well as the Congressman from that State? Who is making this demand?

Mr. SMOOT. This does not apply to one State only. It applies to all of the national parks and all of the national monuments in the United States.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It does apply to all of them?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly; every one of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am here protesting for my State. I do not want to have this blanket authority granted.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator may be amazed that I take an interest in this bill; but the fact is, that every single conservation society in my city and State has written me about it, and they are vitally interested. They are particularly interested in the big trees. That term, perhaps, does not mean much to some people, but to them it means everything.

The Senator has stated that the only difference in the world between the conference report which he is urging upon us and the action of the Senate lies in the fact that the Senate very properly, as I see it, with all God's out of doors open for condemnation, reserved and exempted from the operation of any condemnation scheme certain privately owned and used property, the homes of a few American citizens, hotels which have been built upon those beautiful lakes, and certain religious establishments.

I must contend that that is a very proper limitation to make. If we were talking about a comdemnation in this city, where we had to put up a public building, and there were privately owned establishments near by, of course we would have to exert our right of eminent domain, or whatever it is, to take possession. But here there are thousands, possibly millions, of acres involved; and the Senate has very justly said that so far as these progressive citizens are concerned who have gone into that territory and have spent their money to build homes where they go to enjoy themselves in the summer time, and hotel men who have bought property and erected buildings, and religious institutions that have located establishments there, of course they should be exempted.

Regardless of what position may be taken in other branches of the Government, it is right that the Senate should demand that its view relative to these matters in question be considered. I think I have stated the situation as it is, and that is the way I feel about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the whole question is before the Senate to decide. I do not doubt the accuracy of what the Senator has stated at all, but if the Senate does not yield on amendment No. 39 we are not going to have any Interior Department appropriation bill at this session of Congress. It has been held up in conference for 40 days. Some $400,000 of this money is to be made immediately available. I know in some of the cases men have had to stop work entirely; they are holding their forces in some places absolutely at their own expense because of the fact that there is no money to pay them. There are other items, to the amount of over $200,000, where the contractors have now borrowed money from the banks; they are paying 6 and 7 per cent upon that money, and there is no provision whatever under which the Government can reimburse them. If this report is not agreed to, I am quite sure we are not going to have any bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my recollection is that this bill carries the appropriations for continuing the reclamation work for the next year.

Mr. SMOOT. It does.

Mr. JONES. If the bill should fail, and, assuming that no emergency bill were passed, would not practically all reclamation work stop on the 1st of July?

Mr. SMOOT. I think most of it would. There are some projects where there would be some money.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That could be provided for during the special session.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know about that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That does not indicate that the Senate ought to recede from its position relative to the matter any more than that the House should.

Mr. SMOOT. How are we going to overcome a vote in the House, where the matter was put up directly to them? I did not ask a conference here, and I told Mr. CRAMTON I would not, so that they could have the papers and have a yea-and-nay vote, and not have the excuse of not having the papers. When the matter went back to the House, there was a yea-and-nay vote, and the vote was 304 to 28.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I get sick and tired, so far as I am concerned, of having the Senate say "Let us not do it because we are going to offend somebody," or "Let us put this on the bill in order to use it as a club over somebody else." I contend that it is the business of the United States Senate to do what it thinks is right, and if the other people in the Government do not care to coincide with us, that is their affair, not ours.

Mr. SMOOT. The truth is that the House is a part of this Government just as much as the Senate is.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does the Senator think that the Senate should, with reference to all of its great supply bills, yield to the whim of the House? This is but a whim, this matter of exempting from condemnation a few homes and a church and a school, when the House says, "If you do not let us condemn them, you shall not pass this bill."

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any intention along that line.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why is the right to condemn insisted upon, if it is not to be exercised?

Mr. SMOOT. They want the authority granted. There may be cases where it is needed.

Mr. SIMMONS. The position of the House is that unless the Senate will consent to the granting of the power for the condemnation of these few homes, and these few churches and schools, as a part of a vast domain that is subject to condemnation, this bill shall not pass.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that the bill shall not pass.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said it would not pass. Then, why will it not pass? Because the House will not agree to the report unless we agree to the demand of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The statement of the Senator from North Carolina is strengthened by the fact that the Senator from Utah says there is no intention of exercising the power to condemn homes, hotels, and churches——

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Or church sites, but at the same time the right to do so is insisted upon. I respectfully suggest that the power to condemn ought to be limited to the extent to which it is expected to be exercised.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what we have had a vote on.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We will have some more votes on it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, this is not the first case of the kind. We have had several cases in which we were told that unless we consented to some little items of minor importance in a bill there would be no legislation upon a subject involving expenditures of the Government affecting the various and sundry interests of the people.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator speaks of this one little item. There were 41 amendments, and the House has yielded on nearly all of them. The Senator from North Carolina has been on conferences enough to know——

Mr. SIMMONS. But I have not seen this spirit that we have heard of manifested recently.

Mr. SMOOT. I could call attention to a case where the same spirit was exhibited in connection with a bill on which the Senator and I were conferees, and we had to yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know what the Senator is talking about now.

Mr. SMOOT. I could tell the Senator, but there is no necessity of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Utah, but I understood him to say that everything depended upon our yielding in this little matter, and that if we did not yield to the House with respect to this minor item there would not be any legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. There are 41 amendments, and they have all been agreed to with the exception of this one, and this one the House has voted upon three times. We would not yield here and sent it back. Now the time has come——

Mr. SIMMONS. How many times has that happened during this session with respect to big appropriation bills?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all that I know of.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have heard of it several times.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not. This has been in conference 40 days now.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that the attitude of the House was that the department had no intention of condemning the property enumerated in the Walsh amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. It gives them the power to do so. I understand now that the Great Northern Railroad has already made an agreement there about the hotel.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What is the difference whether it is owned by the Great Northern or anybody else?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no difference, but the department will agree wherever it is possible to agree within reason. As I have said, there were 41 amendments. This is the only amendment not agreed upon, and on this amendment numbered 39 we have had vote after vote in the House, and the House will not yield.

Mr. SMITH. The point is, the other amendments on which agreement has been had may not involve as vital a principle as the one now under consideration. This gives such broad, unlimited power that the Secretary of the Interior can go in and, at his own sweet will, do as he pleases with privately owned property, and the property enumerated in the exceptions mentioned by the Senator from Montana. I thought I understood the Senator to say that the House conferees had no intention of giving the Secretary of the Interior the power to do the things which are sought to be prevented by the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am a servant of this body, and I am perfectly willing for the body to take a vote upon this, but I want Senators to know what the vote means. I thought it is my duty, as a servant of this body, to tell the conditions. I have done that, and I do not want to say anything more about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to ask that the Senate take action on a bill about which there will be no controversy.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. WAGNER. May I explain to the Senator that this is eagerly sought by the War Department on behalf of the Government and by the city of New York? It affects simply a situation in Staten Island, N. Y. A very small portion of Miller Field is ceded to the city of New York in return for which the city of New York has agreed to pay all of the expenses of improving the approach to Miller Field, which will lessen the danger to pedestrians from Government and other motor vehicles.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill——

Mr. WAGNER. Nobody has any objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. But if I yield to the Senator on this, how can I say to another Senator that we can not yield? I want the Senate now to pass upon this amendment to the appropriation bill. I want them to say what they want to do with this conference report.

Mr. WAGNER. I appreciate that.

Mr. SMOOT. To-day is Thursday, and we will be through practically on Saturday. We have before us for final action a bill carrying $285,000,000, and I ask the Senator not to request action on his bill at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this is purely a technical matter, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not block it. It will take just a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows very well that I would yield to him as quickly as to anybody, but I can not yield to the Senator from New York and then refuse to yield to others, and I beg him not to ask it.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator will make no objection if I call the bill up after the disposition of the pending matter?

Mr. SMOOT. None at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want in the introduction of the discussion of this matter, to express my thanks to the conferees on the part of the Senate for the fidelity they have exhibited in endeavoring to secure an approbation by the House of the position taken by the Senate with respect to this matter. It has an importance far beyond the considerations applicable to this particular amendment. It really presents the question as to whether the Senate of the United States shall continue as an essential, integral part of our legislative system, or whether it shall find its prerogatives seriously impaired, if not quite destroyed.

I am sure that even those who have been kind enough to express their concurrence in the attitude I have taken with respect to this matter do not fully appreciate the situation as it is here presented to us. Under the Constitution of the United States, bills for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. There is no such provision with reference to general appropriation bills.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I think this matter is one of such importance that there should be more Senators in attendance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. BLEASE. I think the Senator from Montana is right, this is one of the most important matters that has been before the Senate this year, or that has come before it for a long time, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Brookhart	Deneen	Glass
Barkley	Broussard	Dill	Glenn
Bayard	Burton	Edge	Goff
Bingham	Capper	Edwards	Gould
Black	Caraway	Fess	Greene
Blaine	Copeland	Fletcher	Hale

McMaster	Ransdell	Stephens	Watson
McNary	Reed, Pa.	Swanson	Wheeler
Mayfield	Robinson, Ark.	Thomas, Idaho
Metcalf	Robinson, Ind.	Thomas, Okla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOFF in the chair). Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, while there is no constitutional requirement that bills in the nature of general appropriation bills shall originate in the House of Representatives by a practice which has attained practically all the force of a constitutional provision that is the case. Appropriation bills invariably originate in the House of Representatives. If, under such a practice as that, general legislation in that body may be incorporated upon an appropriation bill, and then the Senate of the United States may be told that it must agree to that general legislation thus proposed exactly as it was written in the House without ever crossing a "t" or dotting an "i," or there will be no appropriation bill, and the Senate yields to that sort of a threat, its usefulness as a legislative body, as I have indicated, is not only impaired but practically destroyed. That is the situation presented here.

A new policy is inaugurated by the bill. Heretofore private holdings within the exterior boundaries of the national parks have been tolerated and indeed, so far as Glacier Park in the State of Montana is concerned, have been encouraged by the legislation of Congress, for the act creating that park not only secured to those within the park their holdings there but authorized the Secretary of the Interior to lease restricted areas for the purpose of being occupied as homes.

The situation in which the Senate finds itself has not been passed unobserved by the press of the country. I have here the editorial page of the New York Times of yesterday, Wednesday, February 27, in which occurs the leading editorial entitled "The House Feels Its Oats." I read:

> Not for several years has the House of Representatives shown so many signs as at present of a determination to assert itself against the Senate. Its action on bill after bill has made certain Senators turn purple with rage, but perhaps that is one of the very things which the leaders of the House hoped to accomplish. They have resolutely stood by their own ideas of what the general deficiency bill should be, especially in the matter of money for prohibition enforcement. They have compelled the Senate to recede from many of its amendments to the Interior Department bill, and have insisted, at last accounts, upon rejecting even the pet fragment of an amendment which Senator WALSH strove to draft upon that measure. When Senator SMOOT told Mr. WALSH that if he remained stubborn the whole bill might fail, he rejoined, "Let it fail." Apparently his thought was that the House would not dare incur that final responsibility. But it has boldly altered several other bills dear to the senatorial heart, and seems bent on vindicating its own dignity and authority in a way that seems novel.
>
> It was not always the case that the Senate was the "dominant member" of Congress. For a long time after the Civil War the House was, in the public impression at least, the more important body. Its debates were the more fully reported. Its personalities were the more vivid and commanding. But little by little, in the slow accretion of political power, largely through an increasing control of the increased Federal patronage, the Senate began to overtop the House, and for a long time past has been the chief source of legislation and the most interesting center of discussion. Washington correspondents long ago were sensitive to the change and transferred their major activities from the Press Gallery of the House of Representatives to that of the Senate and to the Senate Office Building. Just now there seems to be a swing backward toward restoring the House to something of its old eminence.
> This movement will be hastened if reports of Mr. Hoover's attitude are even partially correct. He has been holding frequent and long conferences with Speaker LONGWORTH. This of itself is calculated to intensify the apoplectic jealousy of the Senate. To think of a President arranging his legislative program with main dependence upon the House of Representatives! But the defense made by Mr. Hoover's friends is that to his orderly mind the Senate seems a chaotic and unmanageable assembly. The House has rules permitting it to do business. It has leaders who can count upon their followers, whereas the Senate leaders never know when they will be deserted. Particularly with reference to a farm relief bill and a limited revision of the tariff it is explained that Mr. Hoover sees more hope in the House than in the Senate. It is even hinted that if the Senate takes the House bill for limited tariff changes and stuffs into it all kinds of upward revisions of its own, he will refuse to sign any such measure.

This is probably premature. Yet the mere rumor of it is enough to cause cruel senatorial heartburnings. If Mr. Hoover is really resolved, after he becomes President, to exalt the horn of the House of Representatives, Senators will vow that they have horns of their own with which to gore him.

Mr. President, my esteemed friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] calls attention to the fact that the pending bill, which is in peril of failure, carries appropriations for the great reclamation projects of the West and for many other important activities of the Government. That undoubtedly is true. That is why this general legislation is incorporated upon it in the House, namely, because it is felt that thereby such pressure can be brought to bear that legislation which the Senate would not otherwise accede to can be secured. Of course, my State is interested in the reclamation appropriations in the bill exactly the same as the State of Washington.

But, as I have tried to indicate here, there is an important principle, as I see it, involved in the question. Bear in mind that we have never had this kind of policy before, the policy of the Government acquiring all privately owned lands in national parks. No bill to that effect has ever been introduced, so far as my information goes, in this body or in the other body. No committee of either body has ever considered the wisdom or unwisdom of that policy. Naturally, if a bill were introduced to that effect, it would go to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys or it would go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the policy would there be debated, and if it was adopted by both bodies, then the Committee on Appropriations would make the proper appropriations to carry out the policy and to comply with the authorization for the appropriations which the bill carries. But nothing of that kind has transpired. This is injected into an appropriation bill in the House and the Senate is told, "You can take it now or you will not have any appropriation."

Mr. President, I now come to the specific question and I want to indicate how far the Senate has gone in order to meet the attitude and position of the House with respect to this proposed legislation. We have gone almost the entire route. The bill, as it came from the House, contained a provision, as follows:

For the acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments by purchase, or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government.

The Senate, upon the recommendation of its Committee on Appropriations—the action of that committee being unanimous and the action of the Senate being unanimous—struck out the provision authorizing condemnation of lands in the national parks. That amendment went to the House. The question of agreeing to that amendment was the one which was submitted to that body and determined by the vote to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has on a number of occasions referred.

The country was widely circularized, Mr. President, in opposition to this Senate amendment. Representations were made that the big trees of California were in peril. The good people all over the country were urged to rally to the support of those big trees and to protect them from ruthless destruction. The fact about the matter is that the big trees, so-called—that is, the giant sequoias—are within the Yosemite National Park upon lands that are not privately owned at all; they are on Government lands, and never were in the slightest peril. Those who were better informed about the matter said that instead of the big trees, the giant sequoias, being endangered, there was a group of very valuable white pine within the bounds of the Yosemite Park, and that that was in peril of immediate cutting by the lumber companies which owned the property. I put into the RECORD a telegram from the owners of that timber, to the effect that they had no purpose whatever of cutting any timber within the bounds of the Yosemite Park, at least, not before the month of May, 1930. So no trees within any of the parks were at any time in any peril whatever.

However, in order to show my interest in this matter and my desire to be accommodating, I suggested to the Senate conferees that they propose to the House conferees that the condemnation provisions of this bill should be made applicable to the Yosemite National Park only, so that the situation there, under any circumstances, could be taken care of. I assume that very likely the Senate conferees submitted that proposition to the House conferees and that was rejected.

I then proposed, Mr. President, as a further compromise of the difficulties, that the condemnation proceedings be applicable to all timber lands in any of the parks, but that proposition also was rejected.

Then, Mr. President, as a last attempt at adjusting these difficulties, I suggested the proposal which was subsequently adopted by the Senate, which would make the provision under consideration read, as follows:

For the acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments by purchase or as to any privately owned lands as are not now occupied exclusively for residence, hotel, or religious purposes by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government.

If that amendment proposed by the Senate should be acceded to by the other House, the Secretary of the Interior would have carte blanche to condemn any lands in any of the parks except such lands as are occupied for homes, for hotels, or for religious purposes.

There was another amendment proposed by the Senate, likewise unanimously recommended by the committee, and adopted by the Senate. We have already spent something like a million and a half dollars in the construction of what is known as the transmountain road in the Glacier National Park, over which tourists by automobile can go across the mountains. At the present time there is no road which will permit automobile traffic from the eastern part of the park to the western part of the park or that will permit the passage of automobiles traveling, we will say, from Minneapolis and St. Paul to the Puget Sound country, unless they shall go south from the Glacier National Park a distance of something like 200 miles. There is no other way of getting across the mountains. It will be understood that this park lies upon both sides of the summit of the main range of the Rocky Mountains, with no opportunity whatever to get across the mountains except by a detour of some 200 miles.

As I have stated, one and a half million dollars have already been spent in the construction of that road, which, when completed will be one of the scenic highways of the world. It is now completed to the very summit of the mountain. The work has been in progress some six years. Appropriations have been annually made to the amount of $5,000,000 for roads and trails in the national parks, and a certain portion of that appropriation has been allotted each year to the prosecution of this work.

But last summer a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, being out in that western territory, declared that not another dollar should be spent on the completion of that transmountain road until Congress should enact legislation which would authorize the acquisition by condemnation or purchase of all lands held in private ownership in the national parks. This provision now before us is the legislation which we were told and which the public was told by a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House almost a year ago would have to be passed before that work would be resumed. So, Mr. President, the work goes on in all of the other parks, but is suspended for the present in the Glacier National Park by reason of this condition of things.

This bill likewise carries an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the construction of roads and trails in national parks, but the same member of the House committee went to the Director of the Park Service and exacted from him a promise that not a dollar of the appropriation of $5,000,000 should be spent on the completion of that transmountain road. So, although there is an appropriation in this bill of $5,000,000 for the construction of national-park roads, all in the discretion of the Secretary, there is a private arrangement between the Director of the Park Service and a Member of the House of Representatives that work shall be stopped on the transmountain road in Glacier National Park and not a dollar spent on it.

The Committee on Appropriations, disagreeing with that policy, put in another amendment which provided that the $5,000,000 so appropriated should be spent on the work of the completion of this road as well as other roads within the parks. In other words, they sought to cancel the agreement between the House Member and the Director of the National Park Service, and they provided that the appropriation should be used, among other purposes, "for the continuance of construction of the transmountain road in said Glacier National Park."

I merely refer to this, Mr. President, for the purpose of indicating that not only has this pressure been attempted to be put upon the Senate of the United States, but pressure is put upon the owners of the privately owned lands by the threat that if they will not sell at just such figure as the Government may see fit to offer, then there will not be any more work done on this transmountain road.

I think it is easily to be gathered from the remarks of the Senator from Utah that he is in entire accord with me as to the unwisdom of giving this great grant of power to the Secretary of the Interior. The Senator from Utah knows the situation as to Glacier Park fairly well; he is a western man.

Let me remark, Mr. President, because so much has been made of the fact that I own an inconsequential little tract of about two-thirds of an acre of ground within the Glacier National Park, that there is a class of people there much more deserving and worthy of consideration than am I, who are benefited by this legislation. Prior to the time that this park was created in 1910 some two dozen or more families went into that area, then practically a frontier country, a wild country. Some 25 or 30 years ago they went in there and located homesteads within the park. Over in the western portion of the park there is a comparatively level area. The entire region is mountainous, but little areas can be cultivated, and homes can be made there. The two dozen or more people who went in there and took up homesteads eventually got patents to their lands. They have lived there all of these years; they have reared their families there; their children have grown up there and, naturally, they have a sentimental attachment for their homes, as everybody has or at least ought to have. Some of the finest sentiments that have ever been uttered by the poets have reflected the attachment of people to their homes. Those people still live there, and it is proposed now, although the Government does not want that land for any purpose whatever, to give to the Secretary of the Interior the power, at any time he sees fit, to condemn the homes of those people and turn them out upon the world with so much cash as a jury is willing to give them for their property.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that if the Government wanted an acre of this ground or a lot of this ground for any purpose whatever, there would be no objection to it at all; but I repeat that the Government does not want the homes of these people for any purpose, and it passes my understanding why the Government wants to get them out of there.

As it is, they have a half dozen cows and sell milk and cream and butter to tourists within the park; they have chickens and sell eggs; they have little garden spots on which they raise vegetables which they sell to tourists. They occupy a region in the park that is not particularly noted for its scenic attractions, as might very readily be expected, those areas particularly valuable for their scenic attractions having no value whatever for agricultural purposes or as homes. I repeat that the Government does not want those homes for any purpose whatever, but somebody has got a whim, a notion, an obsession, that there ought not to be any private holdings in the national parks, and so the Secretary of the Interior is to be given power to condemn them.

We are told, however, that if we give this power to the Secretary of the Interior he will not exercise it as to these people. Well, if he will not exercise it, why should he have it?

But what is the fact? We are not without experience with respect to the operations of these great grants of power that are given to the departments. Of course, we all realize that the Secretary of the Interior is not going to be out in the Glacier National Park, or in the Zion Park in Utah, or in the Smoky Mountain Park down in Tennessee. He will have to act upon the recommendation of the local officials; and what does this mean? It means that whenever the superintendent of the park wants to get out of the park one of those homesteaders he will get the authority and the power to institute proceedings to condemn if he can not arrange a purchase from him.

In other words, Mr. President, there is a sword of Damocles held over the heads of these people all the time. They never know when shall come the day and hour when proceedings to condemn their lands will be taken. Under those circumstances how can they improve their property and spend money to make it a place of which they and the friends who come to see them shall be proud?

I repeat that this is a tyrannical thing; it has no justification whatever, and no defense can be made for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many times has the Senate expressed itself on this matter?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senate expressed itself in the first place by putting in the amendment cutting out the condemnation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It expressed itself in the second place by adopting the amendment suggested by me, restricting it. That is twice that the Senate has voted against the policy of this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is inconceivable to me that the Senate would change its resolution on this matter; and I believe that whenever it is submitted to the Senate for a vote the position that it has taken heretofore will be sustained again, because I think this conference report will be voted down.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If I could get any assurance whatever that those sentiments are shared upon the other side of the Chamber, I should not trespass further upon the time of this body.

Reference was made by the Senator from Utah to the fact that the amendment as last proposed by the Senate was taken to the House and was voted down by a vote of 42 to 12.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following joint resolutions and acts:

On February 28, 1929:

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of title to certain lands in the counties of Benton and Walla Walla, Wash., adjacent to the Columbia River bird refuge in said State established in accordance with the authority contained in Executive Order No. 4501, dated August 28, 1926;

S. J. Res. 206. Joint resolution to authorize the President of the United States to appoint a Yellowstone National Park Boundary Commission to inspect the areas involved in the proposed adjustment of the southeast, south, and southwest boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park;

S. 2068. An act for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy;

S. 3590. An act to amend section 110 of the Judicial Code;

S. 3770. An act authorizing the Federal Power Commission to issue permits and licenses on Fort Apache and White Mountain Indian Reservations, Ariz.;

S. 4063. An act to amend certain sections of the teachers' salary act, approved June 4, 1924, and for other purposes;

S. 5073. An act to amend the act of Congress of June 26, 1906, entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes";

S. 5193. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of the State of Pennsylvania; and

S. 5621. An act to repeal paragraphs 127 and 128 of the act entitled "An act to discontinue certain reports now required by law to be made to Congress," approved May 29, 1928.

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the House has passed House bill 16209, to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to make certain changes in the boundaries of the park; and the Senate has passed Senate bill 5339, dealing with the same subject. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be taken up and passed, and that Senate bill 5339 be taken from the Calendar and indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. Let the bill be read.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate bill has already passed the Senate unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The legislative clerk read the bill (H. R. 16209) to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission, established by act of March 4, 1913, to make slight changes in the boundaries of said parkway by excluding and selling therefrom certain small areas, and including other limited areas, the net cost not to exceed the total sum already authorized for the entire project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of Senate No. 17 to the bill and concurred therein, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to amendments Nos. 1, 13, and 15 and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 431) providing for an investigation of Grover M. Moscowitz, United States district judge for the eastern district of New York.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 675. An act to establish the Ouachita National Park in the State of Arkansas;

S. 1338. An act for the relief of James E. Jenkins;

S. 2360. An act relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma;

S. 3001. An act to revise the north, northeast, and east boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park in the States of Montana and Wyoming, and for other purposes;

S. 5453. An act authorizing the payment of Government life insurance to Etta Pearce Fulper;

S. 5684. An act to amend the War Finance Corporation act approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide for the liquidation of the assets and the winding up of the affairs of the War Finance Corporation after April 4, 1929, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6687. An act to change the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12351. An act amending section 72 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C. title 28, sec. 145), by changing the boundaries of the divisions of the southern district of California and terms of court for each division;

H. R. 13981. An act to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases;

H. R. 16954. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Chowan River, in Gates and Hertford Counties, N. C.;

H. R. 16955. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Meherrin River, in Hertford County, N. C.; and

H. R. 13752. An act to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House on the naval appropriation bill, as announced in the message just received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 28, 1929.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 17 to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 1, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "exclusive, however, of pay, allowances, or other expenses on account of members of any class of the Naval Reserve incident to their being given flight training unless, as a condition precedent, they shall have been found by such agency as the Secretary of the Navy may designate qualified to perform combat service as pilots of naval aircraft, $4,740,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 13, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: " : Provided, That of the appropriations contained in this act under the head of 'Increase of the Navy,' there shall be available immediately such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the engagement of technical services, including the purchase of plans, and the employment of additional clerks, draftsmen, and technical employees in the Navy Department and in the field owing to the construction authorized by the act of February 13, 1929".

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 15, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In line 9 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$1,725,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,225,000."

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does this represent a final agreement?

Mr. HALE. This represents a final agreement. There were four items that had to be voted on in the House under the House rules. One of them accepted the exact amendment made in the Senate, and the other three accepted the amendments with changes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

DEGREE-CONFERRING INSTITUTIONS IN THE DISTRICT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BLAINE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 2366. The report is on the clerk's desk. I move that the report be approved. I may say that the managers on the part of both Houses are unanimous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2366) to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the language inserted by the House insert the following:

"2. That any such degree shall be awarded only after such quantity and quality of work shall have been completed as are usually required by reputable institutions awarding the same degree: Provided, That if more than one-half the requirements for any degree are earned by correspondence, or extramural study, such fact shall be conspicuously noted upon the diploma conferred: Provided further, That no diploma shall be issued conferring a degree in medicine or any healing art, or in dentistry, for study pursued or work done by correspondence."

And the House agree to the same.

JOHN J. BLAINE,
D. O. HASTINGS,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FREDK. N. ZIHLMAN,
CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. SMOOT that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 39 to the bill (H. R. 15089), making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, when the amendment last suggested by the Senate was taken to the House, it became the subject of discussion in that body—the first time that anything approaching the merits of the question involved was the subject of discussion in the House. It was participated in, against the amendment, by the Representative from Michigan, Mr. CRAMTON, and by the Representative from Colorado, Mr. TAYLOR. I do not care to comment on the remarks of the Representative from the State of Michigan, except to call attention to one sentence in his remarks, as follows:

In other words, it—

That is, the Senate proposal—would forbid resort to condemnation in connection with a great part of the lands that are to be secured.

A report made to the House Committee on Appropriations by a representative of the Park Service indicated that, in all probability, the highest or almost the highest proportion of privately owned lands exists in the Glacier National Park, the amount there held in private ownership being represented to be 5,183.76 acres. That includes all lands held by homesteaders, by hotels, by religious organizations, and as summer homes, as well as all timberlands—5,183.76 acres.

Mr. COUZENS. What percentage is that of the whole?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Glacier National Park comprises 1,400 square miles, 896,000 acres, and 5,000 acres are held in private ownership—less than one-half of 1 per cent of the land within that park. Anyone who knows anything about the situation knows that it is a perfect trifle in amount. For instance, most of these summer homes are about Lake McDonald, shown upon the topographic map that was exhibited here in the Senate a few days ago. That lake is about 10 miles long. It would, therefore, have a perimeter of about 25 miles.

There are five homesteads around that lake, making a frontage upon the lake, including the hotel property, of five times one-half a mile; that is, two and a half miles. That is to say, one-tenth of the lake frontage was, prior to the time the park was created, held in private ownership, and is now held in private ownership. That is to say, there is ten times as much lake front as ever was appropriated for private purposes.

But, Mr. President, I spoke about the hotels. Now, bear in mind—if I may speak about my own property—no one wants my property at all. The Government has no use whatever for it. If it has, it is perfectly welcome to it, and it would not need to resort to condemnation proceedings to get it; but it does not want it. It simply does not want me there; but it is inviting everybody to come and see these parks and to stay in the parks, and in order to do so people come to the Glacier National Park and they stay all summer. They stay during the entire season of three months, and when they do they must have some place to stay. There must be hotels in the parks.

The statement is made, "We do not allow people to hold lands in private ownership in Rock Creek Park. We do not allow people to hold lands in private ownership in Central Park in the city of New York." Certainly we do not, because we do not invite people to come there and stay there overnight, and stay weeks and months at a time within the park. If we did, we should have to provide housing for them.

As I say, the Government does not want my property. It wants to burn down my house, and then, if I go to the park, I must go to a hotel. Where is the sense of that sort of thing?

Moreover, under this bill, if it shall become a law as proposed by the House, the property of the hotel manager and owner will be subject to condemnation.

It is said that the Great Northern has purchased this hotel on Lake McDonald. It has a string of hotels on the eastern side of the park, but none on the western side; but what is the difference whether it is owned by Mr. Lewis, who now owns it, or whether it shall be owned by the Great Northern? By what right, upon what principle, can the Government seize that property and sell it to some one else whom it shall authorize to conduct a hotel there? What is the sense of it, and what is the reason for it?

I call attention again to this statement:

> In other words, it would forbid resort to condemnation in connection with a great part of the lands that are to be secured.

That is the sort of argument, spread out around the country, that has obtained for the House provision a great portion of the support which it has thus far commanded.

I wanted, however, to refer particularly to the comments of Representative TAYLOR. I read:

> No national park or State park or city park can be conducted in an orderly manner, and made a proper and orderly outing pleasure resort, if there are a lot of private property owners scattered all over it, capitalizing the opportunities of profiteering on the crowds, and conducting any kind of business or game to fleece the public, and without any control over them. These private property owners cause an immense amount of annoyance in these national parks.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] told us the other day that he was fortunate enough to have an opportunity to visit the Glacier National Park. I congratulate him upon the opportunity he had, and I hope every Member of this body may seize the opportunity to see that great place some day; but I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he discovered any such conditions in the Glacier Park when he was there?

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President; I saw no evidence whatever of what the Senator has said.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have been going there for 30 years, and I can assure the Senate that there is no foundation whatever for the intimations thus made. I want to remind the Senate that the Congress of the United States has already granted to the Secretary of the Interior full power and authority to take care of any situation such as is here suggested. He is made the czar of every national park by general legislation. His word is law. He can make just exactly such rules as he sees fit for the government of the parks, the lands held in private ownership, as well as the lands that are owned by the public. No one can carry on any business there except in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

I read section 2 of the general act creating the Glacier National Park:

> That said park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States as he may deem necessary or proper for the care, protection, management, and improvement of the same, which regulations shall provide for the preservation of the park in a state of nature so far as is consistent with the purposes of this act, and for the care and protection of the fish and game within the boundaries thereof. Said Secretary may, in his discretion, execute leases to parcels of ground not exceeding 10 acres in extent at any one place to any one person or company, for not to exceed 20 years, when such ground is necessary for the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors, and to parcels of ground not exceeding one acre in extent and for not to exceed 20 years to persons who have heretofore erected or whom he may hereafter authorize to erect summer homes or cottages; he may also sell and permit the removal of such matured or dead or down timber as he may deem necessary or advisable for the protection or improvement of the park.

We have established therein a commissioner, who exercises judicial powers, and all violations of the rules and regulations thus established by the Secretary of the Interior are subject to punishment before that tribunal.

We passed another act applicable to all the national parks; and bear in mind that in the case of every one of these national parks a condition precedent was that the State should surrender all authority and jurisdiction within it, so that the State has no power there at all. The jurisdiction is ceded to the National Government, and the Congress has reposed in the Secretary of the Interior the power to make all necessary rules and regulations, and he has just exactly the same power within the national parks that a city council would have to set up sanitary rules and regulations to govern everybody, without any regard to who owned the land in which they operated.

Section 3 of the act of Congress of August 25, 1916, provides:

> SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the use and management of the parks, monuments, and reservations under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and any violations of any of the rules and regulations authorized by this act shall be punished as provided for in section 50 of the act entitled "An act to codify and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, as amended by section 6 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 U. S. Stat. L., p. 857). He may also, upon terms and conditions to be fixed by him, sell or dispose of timber in those cases where in his judgment the cutting of such timber is required in order to control the attacks of insects or diseases or otherwise conserve the scenery or the natural or historic objects in any such park, monument, or reservation.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior has not been lax at all in the enactment of such rules and regulations. I have before me a copy of the rules prescribed by him for the government of the Glacier National Park, from which I read, as follows:

> No person, firm, or corporation shall reside permanently, engage in any business, or erect buildings in the park without permission in writing from the director of the National Park Service, Washington, D. C.

Application for such permission may be addressed to the director through the superintendent of the park. So even with respect to the lands that are held in private ownership, a man can not erect a building upon them, unless he gets the permission of the Secretary of the Interior.

I have no doubt in the world that the authority is restricted by constitutional provisions of one kind or another, but, so far as it is necesary to carry out the general scheme for which the park was created, so far as becomes necessary for the sanitation of the park, and everything of that kind, he may exercise exactly the same police powers that a city government may exercise over the city. So that if there are any conditions in any of the parks such as is thus told of by the Representative from Colorado, the Secretary of the Interior is already clothed with all the authority and power to correct it.

I read further from Representative TAYLOR'S remarks:

> These private property owners cause an immense amount of annoyance in these national parks. They clamor to have the Government spend millions of dollars developing the parks for them to get the benefit of it, not only by enormously enhancing the value of their property but enabling them to conduct filling stations, soft-drink joints and hot-dog stands, and any kind of a scheme to get the money, and with practically no restraint on them.

I might say the legislation also provides that all Federal laws defining acts as criminal are applicable in these parks that are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. But the legislation goes further and provides that if there is any offense not defined by the laws of the United States, but is defined by the laws of the States within the exterior boundaries of which these parks may be, the State law shall be deemed applicable, and the offender becomes responsible in the Federal court to a violation of the State law if that authority can be granted.

Enabling them to conduct filling stations.

Filling stations can be erected in these parks just exactly where the Secretary of the Interior says they may be, and they can not be erected at all if the Secretary of the Interior forbids that they be erected there. Likewise as to—

Soft-drink joints and hot-dog stands, and any kind of a scheme to get the money, and with practically no restraint on them.

That is the kind of argument that is being made in support of this provision.

I advert to the suggestion:

They clamor to have the Government spend millions of dollars developing the parks for them to get the benefit of it.

I do not remember about any clamoring of any of the representatives from States in which these national parks exist for appropriations to develop them; but if they have clamored, they have done it in what now is charged and said to be a great public interest.

The idea is conveyed here, as it is elsewhere, that these people who live out in the West are rather peculiar people, with itching palms, ready to grab any and every thing that belongs to the Government of the United States. I am astonished that a Representative from the State of Colorado should be advancing that kind of an idea. However, the idea is conveyed that these people out in the West have no appreciation whatever for the beauties of their surroundings, that they are perfectly willing that they should be sacrificed to satisfy the greed or the avarice of some one.

The fact about the matter is that all of these parks were created at the instance of the people who live in those communities and who first brought their glories to the attention of the world. As I have heretofore stated, the Yellowstone National Park was first told of to the world by a party organized in my home town of Helena, and the story was told in an eastern magazine by a distinguished citizen of my State, Judge Cornelius Hedges, who came down here to the city of Washington away back in the seventies and stayed here until he got the act passed creating the Yellowstone National Park. So far as the Glacier Park is concerned, it was the people living about there who appreciated the beauties of it, who suggested to the Congress the establishment of that place as a park.

The Glacier National Park is distant about 40 miles from the city of Kalispell, in the State of Montana. I read from a letter dated April 18, 1907, addressed to the Senators from the State of Montana, praying for the creation of this national park, as follows:

KALISPELL, MONT., April 18, 1907.

Hon. THOMAS H. CARTER, Washington, D. C.
Hon. JOS. M. DIXON, Missoula, Mont.

DEAR SIRS: For healthfulness of climate, scenic beauty, natural wildness, and grandeur, the region at and in the vicinity of Lake McDonald is not excelled by any region on the American Continent. It abounds in rugged mountains, beautiful lakes and streams, numerous and immense waterfalls, and enormous glaciers of ice and snow. The region extends from Lake McDonald to the international boundary, embracing in its territory the main range of the Rocky Mountains and several spurs. Game, consisting of moose, elk, deer, goats, mountain sheep, and several varieties of bear and other fur-bearing animals, is now plentiful. The numerous lakes and streams teem with fish, mostly trout of several varieties. The region, except on the higher mountains, is mostly heavily timbered, some of the timber being marketable size, but the larger portion of it being small. This region, if preserved in its natural beauty and grandeur, with its timber kept free from ravage by the axman, is destined to become within the next future one of the greatest and most popular health and pleasure resorts within the United States.

Indeed it is now visited annually by people from all over the country and many go there, especially to Lake McDonald, and camp for the summer. The whole region now lies within the Government forest reserves and, as is well known, it is the policy of the Forestry Department to sell the matured timber on the reserves. Already some of the timber fiends have been after and others are contemplating going after the timber bordering on Lake McDonald. To despoil and devastate this most beautiful and grand region by denuding it of its timber would be almost a national calamity, and it is the object of this letter to interest you and your colleagues in Congress (each of whom is mailed a copy of this) in the matter, and prevent if possible the irretrievable ruin of this magnificent region, with the view and ultimate object of having the whole region made into a national park after proper investigation by the Government.

We most urgently urge that you take immediate steps to stop the sale of any timber in this region, especially in the vicinity of Lake McDonald, which is one of the most beautiful sections and is the gateway to all of the grand country mentioned beyond. The comparatively small amount the Government would receive from the sale of the matured timber would be exceedingly inadequate compensation for the vast damage and despoliation surely to be done by the cutting down and removal of the timber sold. Logging roads would have to be cut and run hither and thither through the forests and the slashings from the timber cut could not be piled and burned without seriously menacing and most likely eventually destroying the remaining younger timber, or a great portion of it. If the timber is to be saved and the natural beauty of the country conserved for the enjoyment of the people for all time, as it should be, prompt action in the matter is very necessary and imperative. As above stated, the timber "barons" already have their greedy eyes on the commercial timber and we have heard of one and there may be more applications now in to purchase. Owing to the fact that the timber around Lake McDonald would be easily and inexpensively logged, it will be about the first timber to be sought by the "barons." The citizens of the country and all over the State, as well as outside the State, realizing the calamity it would be to permit the devastation of this sublime wonderland and pleasure ground, are anxious that steps be taken immediately to prevent the sacrilege.

In conclusion, we beg to impress upon you the importance of this matter, not only to the present generation but to posterity as well, and also to the State and Nation. Again we beg you to enlist your efforts in our behalf, in behalf of the people, and to urge you to take immediate action to prevent the contemplated despoliation. With a view to assist you in the matter all in our power, we beg to say that we are mailing a copy of this letter to the President.

Very sincerely,

Mr. Conlon owns a home within the park and wires me his protest against this legislation.

It is all wrong to imagine, Mr. President, that the people in that section of the country do not fully appreciate, and appreciate as keenly as the people in any section of the country, the necessity of preserving this park against spoliation or desecration of any kind whatever.

Let me continue the comment on the address of the Representative from Colorado. Mr. President, it is undoubtedly true that the completion of this transmountain road will enhance the value of the private holdings within the Glacier National Park. The actual entry upon the construction of the road has already operated to increase the value. Indeed, Mr. President, I undertake to say that the increased value has already taken place because it is realized as a matter of course that this work is not going to be permanently abandoned and that eventually it will go forward. But what of it, Mr. President?

At the present time, at much expense to the Government of the United States, Sixteenth Street in the city of Washington is being extended out into the country to the northward into the State of Maryland. Of course, that work is going to increase the value of the property along the line of that street and beyond it. But is that any reason why the work should not be undertaken?

The memorial bridge is now being constructed across the Potomac River and it has already increased and will in the future increase greatly the value of lands over in the State of Virginia beyond the farther end of the bridge. But is that any reason why the work should not go forward?

Bear in mind that when the work was started five years ago the situation was no different than it is now. The simple question is: Shall the work stop and shall pressure be brought to bear upon the owners of these private lands by the threat that the work will not go on and it will be suspended there?

Mr. President, as I have said, we have already expended $1,500,000 in the construction of the road. We have done so because it is expected that returns will come to the people of the United States in some form or other by this work. That money costs us at least 4 per cent per annum so that as long as it lies there uncompleted the Government of the United States in effect is losing $60,000 a year in one form or another.

I continue:

If the people of these States containing so-called national parks do not want them, they should memorialize Congress to repeal the law creating them—

That is a splendid argument—and if they do want a real national park, instead of a private graft—

Private graft—

they ought to help Congress and the National Park Bureau to put private enterprises out of them and make them real pleasure resorts free from private exploitation. What these Montana gentlemen want is to have the large number of private property owners in their national park exempt.

Exempt from what? These private-property owners by the express provision of the act creating the park pay taxes upon their property to the county of Flathead just the same as any other property owners within the bounds of that county.

They say in effect that they are exceedingly anxious for the Government to spend vast sums on building roads to enhance the value of their properties in the park and that if Uncle Sam wants any of it he will pay them whatever they see fit to ask for it, or let it alone.

There is no justification for anything of that kind. If the Government of the United States wants one acre of this land for any purpose it can have it. What we object to is the taking of the property when they have no purpose to which to put it whatever and they do not pretend that there is any purpose to which they desire to put it.

They are not even willing to let the Federal Government have the right of condemnation in their own courts and before their own juries. This House has twice emphatically disapproved of Montana's position. Then the gentleman tried to pass a special bill to exempt 73 acres belonging to a religious organization from ever being taken by the Government.

That was not true. Whenever the Government had any purpose to take this land, the religious organization no more than any other private owner was perfectly willing that they should take the property. They object to the Government taking it when they did not want to put it to any specific purpose.

The basic principle involved and what this House has twice decided is that no property in a park or anywhere else under our flag should ever be declared by Congress to be superior to the right of the Federal Government to take it for Government purposes, by an orderly proceeding in condemnation.

That is entirely beside the question. Whenever they want the land for any purpose whatever they are perfectly welcome to it and there is not going to be the slightest opposition to their taking it.

This affects not only the Glacier National Park, but all of the national parks. If Congress directly or tacitly or impliedly waives that Federal right of eminent domain in one park all of them will at once demand the same exemption.

It is absurd to talk about waiving the right of public domain. We do not ask any waiver of public domain. We simply ask if there is any desire to have the land for a particular purpose that the right of condemnation be restricted accordingly.

I have insisted and our committee have insisted that we should not waive the right of Uncle Sam to take any private property if necessary in any of the parks and should treat them all alike.

We are quite in accord upon that proposition.

Aside from the Yosemite, where it may become necessary, I do not know of any park where there is any present intention of resorting to any condemnation proceedings, but I am not willing by an act of Congress or otherwise to surrender the Government's right to do so if it should become necessary.

That is the kind of argument addressed to the House of Representatives with respect to this matter.

That it may be understood that the views I express with reference to this legislation are not by any means peculiar in myself, I read a resolution unanimously adopted by both houses of the Montana Legislative Assembly only a week or 10 days ago, as follows:

Whereas exclusive jurisdiction was ceded to the United States over and within all territory included in, or thereafter to be included in, that tract of land in the State of Montana, set aside by an act of Congress approved May 11, 1910, for the purposes of a national park, to be known as Glacier National Park; and

Whereas exclusive jurisdiction over said territory was ceded to the United States, reserving to the State of Montana the right to tax persons and corporations, their franchises and property included in said tract; and

Whereas the said Glacier National Park, at the time it was so ceded to the Government of the United States, included within its boundaries the homes of many of the citizens of the State of Montana, and their property, by means of which said citizens obtain their livelihood; and

Whereas it, the said Glacier National Park, contains property from which revenue is now being obtained by the State of Montana, and by several of its counties; and

Whereas the said Glacier National Park was established and jurisdiction thereof accepted by the Government of the United States, with full knowledge of such conditions, such property rights and such rights of the State of Montana, and its several counties, to obtain taxation revenue therefrom; and

Whereas it has come to the attention of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, that there has been introduced in the National Congress a bill for an act the purpose of which is to provide for the taking of such property, by eminent domain, by the appropriate arm of the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the loss by the citizens of the State of Montana of their homes above described, and the loss of the property by means of which such citizens obtain their livelihood, and the loss of such right of taxation, above set forth, to the State of Montana and its several counties, can not be compensated by payment of the value of such property: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That we do respectively protest against the enactment of such a law by the National Congress, in that its enactment would enable agents of the Government of the United States to perpetrate a breach of faith on the part of such Government with the State of Montana and with individual citizens thereof; and direct that copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, and to the Representatives and Senators of the State of Montana in Congress.

Approved by J. E. Erickson, governor, February 12, 1929.

Mr. President, reference is made in that resolution to what is charged to be a breach of faith to the people of the State of Montana, with respect to which I desire to say a few words. When the proposal was first made for the creation of this park the people to whom I have heretofore referred, residing in the western portion thereof and making their living there upon their homesteads, protested against being included within the park limits. They were even then apprehensive that some day or other somebody would contend that these lands ought to be acquired by the General Government and they would be driven from their homes. Accordingly, they proposed that the western boundary of the park, instead of being the central line of the north fork of the Flathead River, should pursue a course at the base of the mountain which would leave them outside of the park, and they were insistent upon thus restricting the area which was to be included within the park. Their opposition, however, was withdrawn upon the assurance that the Government of the United States never would inaugurate any such policy. Thus, Mr. President, the act passed under an implied agreement with those people that condemnation would not be resorted to in order to deprive them of their homes; and yet that is just exactly what is proposed by this bill.

What is it going to cost to buy all private holdings in all of the national parks? One would naturally think that before the Government embarked upon any such enormous enterprise of buying private lands its officials would try to get some kind of reliable information as to how much it was going to cost; but with respect to that we have only the most meager kind of information. I shall give the Senate whatever information I have about it, and that consists of a report submitted to the House Committee on Appropriations by a member of the force of the National Park Service. It is found at pages 349, 350, and 351 of the House hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

I have independent information, Mr. President, that the figures given here are a mere guess, both as to the acreage involved and as to the amount that must be expended in order to acquire this property. It is represented, and I have no doubt correctly, that interested private parties are willing to put up a million dollars for the acquisition of these privately owned lands, the Government to meet that amount. So the bill makes an appropriation, for that purpose, of $250,000. It contains a further provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into contracts for the acquisition of these lands, incurring obligations to the amount of $750,000 more. So that, in effect, the expenditure of a million dollars is authorized by this bill toward the acquisition of those lands. How much will it take?

On yesterday the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys approved a bill to extend the area of the Yosemite National Park in the State of California so as to include within its exterior boundaries an area that is heavily timbered by white pine, which is now commanding in the market a very high price, owing to the rapid extinction of that very desirable timber tree. So, as I say, the figures given in this report are only suggestive of the amount of the obligations that this will impose upon the Treasury of the United States. This, however, is what the report states:

Exclusive of mineral claims, complete data on which is not yet available, alienated land and timber holdings in the national parks total 92,101.84 acres, of which 2,935 acres are involved in power-site withdrawals, which may be subject to cancellation in whole or part, 47,662.19 acres are in State ownership and for the most part acquirable by lieu exchange, and 2,321.82 acres of lands in Yosemite, owned by the city and county of San Francisco and subject, in whole or part, to conveyance to the United States under terms of the so-called Raker Act of December 19, 1913, granting certain power and water privileges to the city and county, leaving 39,182.83 acres to be acquired through purchase or donation.

That is, the Government is going to go out and purchase practically 40,000 acres of land; and it is going to give up assets which it now has in one form or another sufficient to acquire practically 100,000 acres of land within these parks.

I stated a moment ago that a proposition of that kind ought to go to some committee of the Congress for consideration other than directly to the Appropriations Committee.

But bear in mind, Mr. President, this does not include mining claims; this is exclusive of mining claims. I have been told, for instance, by the junior Senator from the State of Washington [Mr. DILL] that mining claims in the Rainier National Park are asserted by locators; and more particularly I am advised by the Delegate from Alaska that within the Mount Washburn National Park in Alaska there are any number of mining claims. We have no information at all as to their extent or number, but more particularly we have no kind of information as to what it is going to cost to acquire these mining claims.

Of course the locator of a mining claim is always an optimist; he would not go out into the hills and live the hard life of the prospector, if he were otherwise. He thinks, and thinks very honestly, that his property is immensely valuable; that if he could only get the money to work it, to sink a shaft or to run a drift or a tunnel, he would be a millionaire. Anyway, Mr. President, this property is to be acquired; it is to be acquired by condemnation; and the value of it is to be submitted to a jury for determination. So, I say that we have no kind of an idea of the extent of the obligation that this implies. I continue to read from the hearings:

Of the latter acreage, 3,207.77 acres represent timber rights held by the Yosemite Lumber Co. on Government-owned land, and 150 acres represent land only on which the Government owns the timber, both parcels being in Yosemite National Park. The remaining 35,825.06 acres is classified as follows: Timberlands, 18,704.49 acres; nontimberlands, 15,455.45 acres; and town sites and villa sites, 1,665.12 acres.

Lands classified as timberlands are those lands containing timber of merchantable value by reason of species and character of timber, accessibility, and character of terrain as affecting logging operations. Of the 21,912.26 acres of timberlands and timber rights privately owned, 8,887.83 acres are in Yosemite, 5,183.76 in Glacier, 4,429.55 in Rocky Mountain, 1,946.27 in Crater Lake, 640 in Lassen Volcanic, 520 in Sequoia, and 304.85 in Mount Rainier. Of the 8,887.83 acres of such lands in Yosemite, 7,213.40 acres are in the hands of a logging concern which has been lumbering in the region since 1912, but which closed down in the fall of 1927 because of unfavorable market conditions. Resumption of cutting may be expected in 1929 unless some means is found for acquiring these holdings. No active timber operations are in progress in other parks at the present time.

Of course, whatever expectations may ever have been indulged as to cutting operations in 1929, as suggested in this report, have been dispelled by evidence which is now before the Senate that there is no purpose on the part of the owners of those lands to begin any cutting.

The designation of certain lands as nontimberlands does not necessarily mean that lands so designated do not contain timber. Lands so listed are those whose primary value lies in their suitability for resort development purposes or their strategic location with respect to park administration. Of the 15,455.45 acres of such lands, 5,158.74 acres are in Glacier, 3,491.32 in Rocky Mountain, 2,164.82 in Yosemite, 1,359.60 in Lassen Volcanic, 1,291.22 in Sequoia, 790 in Mesa Verde, 586.25 in Zion, 432.16 in Grand Canyon, and 180.74 in Mount Rainier.

One holding is designated as land only. This is a tract of 150 acres in Yosemite the timber on which was acquired in 1923 from J. B. Curtin in an exchange with the Yosemite Lumber Co., the owner at the time refusing to convey the land, which was the key to certain grazing rights both inside and outside the park in that area. The tract is located at Crane Flat, astride the present Big Oak Flat Road, and will be equally as strategically located with respect to the new road when built. It has great potential value for tourist-resort development or for subdivision into summer-home sites.

One thousand six hundred and sixty-five and twelve one-hundredths acres of land has been or is being subdivided into town sites and summer-home sites. Except for the logging situation in Yosemite, these holdings constitute the greatest immediate menace to park administration, protection, and development. As the timberland menace is most pronounced in Yosemite, so is the summer-home site evil at its worst in Glacier, where at both ends of Lake McDonald nearly 200 individual owners have erected flimsy, unattractive structures, presenting a striking example of landscape despoliation; 597.50 acres of land is involved in the two subdivided areas at either end of the lake, both areas being traversed by the new transmountain road, the final completion of which has been deferred pending acquisition of control of these holdings by the Government.

There is the statement made by this representative of the Park Service to which I alluded a while ago that work on this road has been suspended until these private holdings have been acquired.

Moreover, Mr. President, I call attention to this remark:

As the timberland menace is most pronounced in Yosemite, so is the summer-home site evil at its worst in Glacier, where at both ends of Lake McDonald nearly 200 individual owners have erected flimsy, unattractive structures, presenting a striking example of landscape despoliation.

The artistic sense of the writer must have been overdeveloped to find any such structures at either end of Lake McDonald. The truth about the matter is that in these buildings, so classified and so designated, there is a beautiful hotel of rustic architecture that has been admired by everybody who goes to the park and sees it. In addition to that most of the homes referred to here are neat structures, quite appropriate to summer residence, where the tourists go for a brief period of not to exceed 3 months at the outside out of the 12.

I continue:

Even larger areas and a larger number of individual owners are involved in similar subdivisions in the Yosemite.

I hurry through, Mr. President, to give such information as I have concerning what this means in dollars and cents to the Government of the United States.

This report says:

The total estimated present value of all alienated holdings, except mineral claims, power sites, and State lands, is placed at $5,810,261.29—

Note, Mr. President, that is the estimate of the value of these properties, exclusive of mineral claims, power sites, and State lands—divided among the various parks as follows: Glacier, $1,553,763.57; Yosemite, $1,510,846.80; Rocky Mountain, $1,076,350; General Grant, $479,062; Lassen Volcanic, $475,100; Mount Rainier (including mineral claim appraised at $100,000), $337,919; Crater Lake, $147,119.92; Sequoia, $125,200; Grand Canyon, $84,550; Mesa Verde, $11,850; and Zion, $8,500.

I undertake to say, Mr. President, that $10,000,000 will not cover the cost of acquiring these lands if this legislation should go through.

Mr. President, I desire to conclude; and I wish to remind the Senate of the United States that not one word has been uttered upon this floor by anybody in support of the motion now made by the Senator from Utah that the Senate recede from its amendment. All that the Senator from Utah can say about the matter is that if we do not do it, there will not be any bill.

No one has endeavored to justify or excuse or defend this policy of taking away the homes of these people. Nobody has undertaken to show that there is any necessity to do it. Nobody has made any argument whatever against the wisdom of the position taken by the Senate with respect to the matter.

I want to remind the Senate now of the circumstances to which I adverted in the Senate. This appropriation bill originates in the House of Representatives. This general legislation is put on in the House of Representatives, put on in defiance of the rules of the House of Representatives, put on in defiance of the rules of the Senate, put on this bill in defiance of the Budget law, which requires in all of these cases involving the expenditure of money by the Government of the United States that the matter shall be referred to the Budget Bureau for a report on it. It never has been submitted to the Budget Bureau. They have never had it under consideration at all. In these circumstances, it seems to me a very weak argument to say that if we do not surrender our views about this matter there shall be no legislation at all, particularly when we have gone as far as we have gone in order to accommodate ourselves to the views entertained over in the House with respect to this particular matter.

Full power and authority is given to acquire any of these lands, of any character whatever, by purchase. Full power would be given to acquire any of these lands by condemnation except the relatively limited area of lands that are used for residence, hotel, or religious purposes; and it does seem to me that it does not comport with the dignity of this body to make any further recession in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	King	Sheppard
Barkley	Edwards	McKellar	Shortridge
Bayard	Fess	McMaster	Simmons
Bingham	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Black	Frazier	Mayfield	Smoot
Blaine	George	Metcalf	Steiwer
Blease	Gerry	Moses	Stephens
Borah	Glass	Neely	Swanson
Bratton	Glenn	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Goff	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Hale	Nye	Trammell
Bruce	Harris	Oddie	Tyson
Capper	Harrison	Pine	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hastings	Pittman	Wagner
Copeland	Hawes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Heflin	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Deneen	Kendrick	Sackett	Watson
Dill	Keyes	Schall	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, for the information of those who have not been in the Chamber, as a vote on the pending matter is about to be taken, I desire to say that the question is upon the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 39 to the Interior Department appropriation bill. Those who are in favor of giving to the Secretary of the Interior full power to condemn any lands in the parks will vote in the affirmative. Those who desire to restrict his power so that it shall not include the right to condemn lands occupied for homes or hotels or for religious purposes will vote in the negative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. WALSH of Montana called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If he were present he would vote "nay," and if I were permitted to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. NORBECK (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. In his absence from the Chamber I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. If he were present and I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay," and he would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I assume that that Senator if present would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote with the committee and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BURTON] is detained from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. GEORGE. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If I were privileged to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. STECK] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—23

Ashurst	Goff	Metcalf	Schall
Bingham	Hale	Moses	Smoot
Curtis	Hastings	Oddie	Vandenberg
Deneen	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Fess	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Glenn	McMaster	Sackett

NAYS—50

Barkley	Dale	Kendrick	Steiwer
Bayard	Dill	McKellar	Stephens
Black	Edge	Mayfield	Swanson
Blaine	Edwards	Neely	Thomas, Idaho
Blease	Fletcher	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	Nye	Trammell
Bratton	Gerry	Pine	Tyson
Brookhart	Glass	Pittman	Wagner
Broussard	Harris	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Bruce	Harrison	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh, Mont.
Capper	Hawes	Sheppard	Wheeler
Caraway	Heflin	Shortridge
Copeland	Jones	Smith

NOT VOTING—22

Burton	Howell	McNary	Simmons
Couzens	Johnson	Norbeck	Steck
George	King	Overman	Tydings
Gillett	La Follette	Phipps	Warren
Gould	Larrazolo	Reed, Mo.
Greene	McLean	Shipstead

So the Senate refused to recede from amendment No. 39.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment, ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. KEYES, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. MCKELLAR conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WALTER F. GEORGE, OF GEORGIA

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, on last evening my colleague, in an able address before the Southern Club of Boston, discussed subjects of great public interest. I ask unanimous consent that his address, as published in the Atlanta Journal, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address follows:

[From The Atlanta Journal of Saturday, February 23, 1929]

GEORGE RECALLS HENRY GRADY IN BRILLIANT SPEECH BEFORE SOUTHERN CLUB OF BOSTON

By Harllee Branch

BOSTON, MASS., February 22.—One of the finest and most stirring orations delivered in Boston since the famous speech of the immortal Henry W. Grady, of Georgia, thrilled the people of this city and the entire country 40 years ago, was the address delivered Friday evening before the Southern Club of Boston, by United States Senator WALTER F. GEORGE, another brilliant and eloquent Georgian, who spoke before the same organization addressed by Mr. Grady.

Senator GEORGE'S address was delivered at a banquet which the club held at Hotel Somerset in commemoration of the birthdays of Gen. George Washington and Gen. Robert E. Lee, two of the South's most illustrious sons.

In the course of his reference to Washington Senator GEORGE said: "His name and his fame yet fill and will fill to the latest time the brightest page in our country's history, and on that page the orators and statesmen, the scholars and historians of the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts have contributed their indelible lines. Whatever else fails, the fame and name of Washington is secure."

Senator GEORGE'S tribute to Lee included the following: "Always a soldier, and at last very eminent as a soldier, he was, nevertheless, the finest example of the Christian soldier and gentleman produced by any age or any country. He never sunk the man into the mere military man, and his letters to his wife, even from the field of battle, approach the exalted character of sacred literature."

RECALLS HENRY GRADY

The Georgia Senator recalled the visit and speech of the lamented Grady and that in the course of it he had reminded his Boston hearers of the difficulties of the race problem and had given "sincere assurance of the South's purpose to solve it in justice to the black man and white man alike."

"Perhaps," said Senator GEORGE, "we have not completely solved the problem, but for 40 years we have been on the road to solving it in honor and in justice to both races. To sensitive souls it exists as a problem, but the South does not now think of it as a problem. We are mindful that all suspicion has not yet been allayed, but the final answer is slowly but surely being made in the steady progress of the men and women of both races in the South.

"Side by side the races are working out the problems of our civilization. The leaders of both races understand, whatever may be the lack of understanding elsewhere, that the South has been compelled to recognize the law to which men and nations have ever responded—the necessity of preserving the civilization of the South."

ADDRESS OF SENATOR GEORGE

Mr. President, members of the Southern Club, ladies, and gentlemen, 197 years ago a child was born in Westmoreland County, Va. That child became the commander in chief of the Revolutionary Army in the War of Independence; the president of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 and the first President of the United States. Agreeably to a practice long observed in the Senate of the United States, a distinguished colleague to-day read the Farewell Address of President Washington.

In the closing year of the eighteenth century that son of Virginia died, well deserving then and now the famous eulogy spoken by John Marshall, though penned by another, "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his fellow citizens." The author of the eulogy bore the honored name of Henry Lee, a soldier and officer under Washington in the Continental Army, later a Member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States, and Governor of the State of Virginia. Henry Lee was a compatriot in the Virginia convention of James Madison, John Marshall, Edmund Randolph, Patrick Henry—"the forest-born Demosthenes"—George Mason, Benjamin Harrison, and William Grayson. An ardent Union man, he nevertheless favored the famous Virginia-Kentucky resolutions of 1798–99, and said in debate: "Virginia is my country; her will I obey, however lamentable the fate to which it may subject me." It was in this prophetic school that his fourth son by Anne Carter Lee, his second wife, Robert Edward Lee, was reared. The 19th of January past 122 years ago, Robert Edward Lee was born in the State of Virginia and in the county of Westmoreland. Is there a country, is there a State, is there a county that has produced greater men than historic old Westmoreland? There were born Washington; James Madison, who from the tent of Washington forecasted the Constitution; James Monroe, whose bold declaration is yet the basis of our Latin-American policy; Charles Lee, Washington's Attorney General; Arthur Lee, an accomplished diplomat who negotiated the treaty between France and the Colonies in 1777.

Is there a house in any land like old Stratford house, in this same county of the Old Dominion, where in the same room was born Richard Henry Lee, the mover of the Declaration of Independence; Francis Lightfoot Lee, one of the signers of the Declaration; Sidney Smith Lee, one of the ornaments of the American Navy; and Robert Edward Lee, the pathetic leader of the lost cause, the supreme military genius of our country, the kindly Christian gentleman, "the knightliest of the knightly race."

To an American audience—to the Southern Club of Boston—it is idle to recount the incidents and events of the life, character, and the enduring public service of Washington. His name and his fame yet fill and will fill to the latest time the brightest page in our country's history, and on that page the orators and statesmen, the scholars and historians of the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts have contributed their indelible lines.

The present high position—the expanding power of the Nation—places the name of Washington easily among the foremost names of history. Whatever else fails, the fame and name of Washington is secure. One other name stands beside the name of Washington—that of Abraham Lincoln—and the name of Robert Edward Lee is linked with the imperishable memory of Lincoln. Truly, as has been said, more American hearts, North as well as South and South as well as North, are thinking more kindly of Lincoln and Lee than any of the other great names rolled into notice by the greatest martial conflict in the history of the Republic. To you, my fellow citizens of the Southern Club of Boston, I need not bring the assurance already given by a distinguished son of the South that there is not a foot of ground beneath Dixie's sky to-night whereon the great Lincoln, were he in life, could not lay his head and sleep in peace, well guarded by the sons and daughters of those who followed Lee.

The incidents and events in the life of George Washington are familiar to all Americans, even to the children in the schools; so also are the incidents and events in the life of Robert Edward Lee, especially to those whose lines run back to the States of the old South. By profession a soldier, a West Pointer, he fought in the Mexican War under Scott and surrendered his commission in the Army of the United States when Virginia called him, responsive to the sentiment of his father voiced in the Virginia convention. Always a soldier, and at last very eminent as a soldier, he was nevertheless the finest example of the Christian soldier and gentleman produced by any age or by any country. He never sunk the man into the mere military man, and his letters to his wife, even from the field of battle, approach the exalted character of sacred literature.

The objective of Washington was to establish the Union; the objective of Lincoln was to preserve it. Lee, the great soldier, called to lead the armies of the South in that irrepressible conflict regarded as sectional because it unhappily revolved around the institution of slavery in America, at the end of the conflict reminded the South that we were once again Americans, and by fine precept and high example led in the restoration of the Union in the hearts of Southern men and women. He never spoke in bitterness of his foe even in the midst of conflict. He fulfilled the prophetic utterance of Lincoln when he became the leader in the "chorus of the Union."

Nearly 40 years ago a distinguished citizen of the State of Georgia came to Boston. That fair empire to the South, in which the roots of your membership are firmly fixed, had then but lately emerged from civil war; from a state of destitution and desolation never before witnessed upon so wide a scale in America.

Among other things, Mr. Grady reminded his Boston audience of the difficulties of the race problem, upon which he had been bidden to speak, and in eloquent phrase gave sincere assurance of the South's purpose to solve it in justice to the black man and white man alike. Perhaps we have not completely solved the problem, but for these 40 years we have been on the road to solving it in honor and in justice to both races. To sensitive souls elsewhere it exists as a problem, but the South does not now think of it as a problem. We are mindful that all suspicion has not yet been allayed, but the final answer is slowly but surely being made in the steady progress of the men and women of both races in the South. Side by side the races are working out the problems of our civilization. The leaders of both races understand, whatever may be the lack of understanding elsewhere, that the South has been compelled to recognize the law to which men and nations have ever responded—the necessity of preserving the civilization of the South.

On the occasion to which reference has been made, Mr. Grady deplored the absence of New Englanders in our midst. Your sons have now come to us and are coming in increasing numbers. They have been welcomed in every part of the South. Our sons have likewise gone out into all parts of the country, and many of our negroes have taken up their abode in New England, the East, and in the West. In the providence of God this migration is helping to the final solution of the problem of which Mr. Grady so eloquently spoke.

On the occasion of his visit the distinguished speaker drew the picture of a Georgia funeral. He then reminded his audience that the grave was made in the midst of a marble quarry, in the heart of a pine forest, but that the casket was imported from Cincinnati, and the little tombstone above the grave from Vermont. The grave was made within touch of an iron mine, but the nails in the casket and the steel in the implements with which the grave was made were imported from Pittsburgh. Said Mr. Grady, "the South furnished the corpse and the hole in the ground."

The steel in the implements and the casket are now welded in southern forges, made of the ore taken from the sides of the Georgia mountain. The funeral shroud is now woven of the fiber of our fields. In that wondrous domain cotton is no longer king but he is a loyal subject; and each recurring autumn hangs out his snowy signals of surrender to the nimble fingers of a contented people. The hum of New England spindles, transplanted to a more genial clime, I may without offense remind you, is now heard in the South, and the loom that was once New England's responds to the deft touch of Southern hands. The factory has been builded in the midst of the cotton field; it has prospered and multiplied under equal laws, justly administered; it has lightly felt the burden of reasonable taxes fairly adjusted to the necessity of government; it has responded to the touch of abundant labor supply drawn from the homes of the fields and plains and mountain valleys of the South. We have asked nothing of the owner of the New England mill, who has builded his industry in the South as an important unit in the new industrial expansion of the section, which has not been asked of the southern-born man who first ventured his capital in a like enterprise. We ask both to remember that the fiber used in their mills drew its strength from the fertility of our soil and has in its the hope and faith of mothers, the courage and fortitude of fathers, and the laughter and tears of children.

Since Appomattox we have called the world to witness the "indestructible union of indestructible States." The political entity of the former and the geographic lines of the latter may well be regarded as secure. But our objective is yet to preserve the Union.

If section is to be arrayed against section, race against race, creed against creed, the foundations of the Union for which Washington fought are threatened.

If States are to be submerged, their initiative, self-reliance, and power lost to an overshadowing general Government exercising control of the instrumentalities of our social and economic life, the States for which Lee drew sword are endangered.

The old theory of the right of the State as it was asserted prior to 1861 was submitted to the arbitrament of the sword. That theory has passed away, but the question remains and will remain as long as our dual system survives. In its present form the problem is how to give to the Federal Government those general powers which it alone can properly exercise for the well-being of all the people, and at the same time reserve unimpaired to the States those powers over the daily life and activities of the people within the several States which the States alone can safely exercise. History proclaims one truth: Free government rests at last on local self-government. In a satisfactory sense the freedom of the individual can not be made secure except under government administered by local authority and responsive to local opinion. I engage in no captious criticism, but many of the regulations, if not indignities, to which the citizen is subjected by the Government far removed from him in its attempt to administer laws deemed by Congress necessary to the common weal, would have been regarded and resisted as tyranny by the leaders of American thought all the way from Washington to Lee.

While the struggle for wealth goes on we are no longer disturbed by the task of creating it in the country of Washington. Here we have made the machine, the instrument of the industrial revolution, our friend. We have pushed our frontiers westward to the Pacific and to the islands in the sea and northward to Alaska. The initiative, energy, and unconquerable will of the people, inspired and strengthened by the genius of our free institutions, have given to us the commanding position in the progress and material civilization of the world. Statistics everywhere compiled and on every hand available disclose the magnitude of our income and wealth. At the present peak we face the age-old problem of how to distribute justly this wealth among the masses of free men.

It will not suffice to assert that the classes, so-called, are merely the naked trustees of the vast wealth accumulated in America and the masses, so-called, are in fact the beneficial users of that wealth. In large measure we have democratized art, science, literature, and many of the finer things that make life worth while. The social advantages and benefits of accumulated wealth with us can not be denied the masses it is true; yet the concept underlying our institutions, the basic philosophy of our free constitution, which has shaken thrones and empires over the world, is not compatible with a state of economic dependence in the United States, though the dependents are the unavoidable beneficiaries of unparalleled wealth in the hands of the few. The question raised can not be satisfactorily answered by taking the map and noting the course of empire across the continent; by tabulating our railroad mileage, by computing our banking capital, nor yet by taking account of our import and gratifying export trade balances.

At bottom the struggle is spiritual, though the immediate factors are economic. Spiritual values are at stake, though the immediate battle has to do with wages, social betterment, and the equitable distribution of material things among those who labor.

Less government of the wrong sort is always desirable; but the imperative demand of the present time is the vigorous and effective use of the powers of government both local and general to the end that the powerful may not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned, may not break the spirit of the average man by reducing him to an insensible cog in the modern economic and industrial machine. It is always desirable to keep government out of private business, but the paths of opportunity must be kept open to the feet of the humblest under the flag if government in its objectionable sense is to be kept out of business hitherto regarded as "private."

It is a matter of sober gratification that so many material blessings have been and are yet enjoyed by the people in America. Education, which lay so close to the heart of Washington, has become almost universal, and facilities for its spread are constantly multiplying and expanding. On the whole, our political theories of liberty have survived with slight impairment. So likewise spiritual values have been retained. At the present peak of our industrial and economic power the precept and example of Washington, who put aside the kingship which a generous people were ready to offer, are of supreme importance to his countrymen. In this hour when the unchecked and dangerous spirit of speculation in stock market and exchange brings concern to men and women of sanity, though recent manifestations of it in our country have been obligingly approved by the press in certain quarters, we may well consider the fine example of General Lee, who, though reduced in worldly circumstances, declined a princely salary tendered by a corrupt enterprise for the use of his honored name with the inspiring statement: "For four years the Confederate soldiers taught me how to die, and by the grace of God I will teach their sons how to live."

THE CALENDAR

RELIEF BILLS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, a very large number of Members of the Senate are interested in special relief bills which have been sent by the House to the Senate within the last two days. I want to explain to Senators why it is that it is not practicable to poll the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on those special bills. I think in justice to Senators who have asked that that action be taken I ought to make the explanation public.

We have had over 1,000 bills during the present Congress referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. For many years it has been our practice to refer private relief bills to subcommittees and it is only fair to the members of the committee to say that as subcommittees they have worked long hours and many evenings in the study of those bills. Whenever a bill has been studied that way it is reported to the full committee and it is given a very real consideration by the full committee. As I said, we have had over a thousand bills referred to the committee up to the end of last week. The committee spent most of last Friday and Saturday in a final effort to clean them up.

Now a very large number of new bills come over from the House and it is impossible for the members of the committee to get the time, in the paroxysm of the closing hours of the session, to give those bills the sort of study to which all the others have been subjected. When it is claimed that highly meritorious bills have passed the House and ought now to be considered by the Senate, I beg Senators to remember that the House has taken all of two years to consider those bills and sends us now a great batch of them, so that it is utterly impossible for the Senate Committee on Military Affairs to consider them with that sober earnestness and seriousness which the Senate is entitled to expect of our committee when it makes a report.

For that reason I have said to every Member of this body who has spoken to me, and there must have been 25 Senators who have asked a poll of the committee—and I have said it to every one, whether Republican or Democrat, Senator or Member of the House—that to the best of my ability I would prevent the committee from being polled, that if any bill is polled in the committee I shall object to its consideration on the floor. I intend to fight that, whether it is a bill in which I, myself, am interested or in which any friend of mine is interested. That decision will not be varied from. The House has no one but itself to blame if bills are not considered here when they are not sent over here until during the last three days of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first bill on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5648) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, as amended, was announced as first in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' HOSPITAL, SUNMOUNT, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 9966) to provide for the reimbursement of certain patients at the United States veterans' hospital, Sunmount, N. Y., for loss and damage to personal effects was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add a new section, as follows:

That the first sentence contained in the second paragraph of section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, is further amended by striking out the words "within one year from the date of the approval of this amendatory act" and inserting in lieu thereof "prior to May 29, 1930," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reimburse, out of the appropriation for medical and hospital services, those patients at United States veterans' hospital, Sunmount, N. Y., who suffered loss and damage to their personal effects on May 27, 1927, through the explosion of a rubber gasket in the high-pressure steam line passing through the storage room at that hospital: Provided, That the total amount paid hereunder shall not exceed $420. That the first sentence contained in the second paragraph of section

19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, is further amended by striking out the words "within one year from the date of the approval of this amendatory act" and inserting in lieu thereof "prior to May 29, 1930."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BRATTON subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the amendment adopted to H. R. 9966 I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Frank T. Hines, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, February 27, 1929.

Hon. SAM G. BRATTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRATTON: Further reference is made to your letter of February 14, 1929, transmitting a copy of S. 5782, "A bill to amend section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended," which proposes to provide an additional year for filing suits on insurance contracts.

You state that the Committee on Finance of the Senate to whom this measure has been referred will transmit it for report and request that action thereon be expedited in order that your efforts to have it enacted as an amendment to some other measure may be facilitated.

The Committee on Finance has not yet transmitted this bill for report. You are advised, however, that the position of the bureau on this extension is the same as that communicated to the Congress at the last session at the time the amendment to section 19, providing a Federal statute of limitations on insurance suits, was pending. You may recall that I advised the committee that whether or not there should be such a statute of limitations, and if so the time which should be allowed, was a matter wholly for the determination of the Congress.

For your further information you are advised that there is now pending before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union a bill (H. R. 16819) which, if enacted into law, will substantially accomplish the same purpose as proposed by S. 5782. This bill extends the time one year from date of its passage.

A copy of this letter is inclosed for your use.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

VETERANS' HOSPITAL NO. 42, PERRY POINT, MD.

The bill (H. R. 8223) to authorize the sale of certain buildings at United States Veterans' Hospital No. 42, Perry Point, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell or otherwise dispose of the following-described buildings now situated on the reservation of the United States veterans' hospital, Perry Point, Md., which are of wooden construction and are unsuitable for the hospitalization of beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau: Fifty-seven 2-story frame dwellings, designated as types D–1, D–2, D–5, D–6, D–8, and D–10, and Nos. 1001 to 1040, inclusive; 1189 to 1192, inclusive; 1194 to 1203, inclusive; 1205, 1207, and 1208.

SEC. 2. In addition to the foregoing, the director is further authorized to sell or otherwise dispose of seven 2-story frame dormitory buildings and one 2-story frame kitchen and mess building, numbered as follows: 23, 46, 46–A, 46–B, 46–C, 46–D, 46–E, and 47.

SEC. 3. The net proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMOTHY HANLON

The bill (H. R. 8423) for the relief of Timothy Hanlon was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Timothy Hanlon, out of the appropriation for medical and hospital services, the sum of $28.50 for services rendered in connection with the funeral and burial of Raymond F. Poore (C-541-245), deceased.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOLIET FORGE CO., JOLIET, ILL.

The bill (S. 2127) for the relief of William S. Welch, trustee of the estate of the Joliet Forge Co., Joliet, Ill., bankrupt, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$86,163.21 to William S. Welch, trustee of the estate of the Joliet Forge Co." and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000 to the Joliet National Bank, $15,000 to the Commercial Trust & Savings Bank of Joliet, and $10,000 to the Sharpe family, consisting of H. William, John J., Edward F., and Ellen C. Sharpe," and on page 2, line 1, to strike out the word "bankrupt" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000 to the Joliet National Bank, $15,000 to the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank of Joliet, and $10,000 to the Sharpe family, consisting of H. William, John J., Edward F., and Ellen C. Sharpe, of Joliet, Ill., as reimbursement for providing and furnishing additional plant facilities and materials for the construction of steel forgings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, during the war the Joliet Forge Co. was a flourishing company which had been built up through a period of years by the Sharpe family, being owned by the family of four persons, who enlarged the plant at the request of the Government. The enlargement cost the company all the capital it had in hand, besides $50,000 borrowed from the Joliet bank. The order was made by Mr. Sessions and his letters appear on page 3 of the report. The authority for his making the order appears on page 4 by the testimony of Mr. Piez. The capacity to which they were ordered to enlarge the plant was so that 6,000 tons of steel forgings might be furnished the Government when previously 500 tons was the capacity of the company. The money was loaned by the bank on the letter and personal direction of Mr. Piez.

The company is now bankrupt. There was no occasion for the enlargement except for purposes of the war, and the banks having advanced the money presented the matter to the House committee and the amounts which were loaned, without interest, $45,000 in one instance and $15,000 in the other instance, are appropriated by the bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MYRON C. BOND ET AL.

The bill (H. R. 1625) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Myron C. Bond, Guy M. Claflin, and Edwin A. Wells was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Myron C. Bond the sum of $48.04, to Guy M. Claflin the sum of $499.79, and to Edwin A. Wells $116.67, all of said persons having been officers in the Thirty-first Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and which said sums were reported by the Court of Claims, and said sums are hereby appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE M. LIZENBY

The bill (H. R. 2659) for the relief of Annie M. Lizenby was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Annie M. Lizenby, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement of all claims against the Government, the sum of $3,000 to compensate her for injury and damage sustained at Tacoma, Wash., December 14, 1922, when she was struck by a motor truck belonging to and operating under authority of the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLA MAE RINKS

The bill (H. R. 11500) for the relief of Ella Mae Rinks was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $772.35 to Ella Mae Rinks for personal injury resulting from being run down by a truck belonging to the Sequoyah Orphan Training School.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

N. P. NELSON & CO.

The bill (H. R. 13992) for the relief of N. P. Nelson & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to N. P. Nelson & Co., of Bozeman, Mont., as subcontractors of the Pioneer Construction Co., the sum of $1,760.31 in full settlement of all claims resulting from the requisitioning of the road construction crew of N. P. Nelson & Co. employed on the Paola section of the Belton-Java, Mont., highway project, by the forest supervisor for fire suppression work in connection with the Lost Johnnie Creek forest fire in 1926.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PORTER, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 15292) for the relief of the First National Bank of Porter, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 in settlement of the error made by the Treasury Department in crediting to the account of the First National Bank of Keota, Okla., on May 27, 1909, instead of to the account of the First National Bank of Porter, Okla., the sum of $500 on account of the bank's 5 per cent redemption fund.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BERTINA SAND

The bill (H. R. 7552) for the relief of Bertina Sand, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,560.25 to Bertina Sand, of Minneapolis, Minn., as reimbursement for loss of earning power and for expenses actually incurred by her as the direct result of personal injuries received by her on the 7th day of April, 1927, at Minneapolis, Minn., when she was struck by a Government motor vehicle then and there negligently operated by the Post Office Department of the United States Government, and as full compensation for said injuries, the pain and suffering from the same, and the damages resulting therefrom: Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which in the aggregate exceeds 5 per cent of the amount of any item appropriated in this bill on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than $1,000 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. This woman was knocked down by a careless driver of a vehicle belonging to the Government. One of her arms was broken and her side was hurt. She is practically an invalid, and the department recommends that the amount included in the bill should be paid to her.

Mr. KING. The explanation is satisfactory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. A. SMITH

The bill (H. R. 14728) for the relief of J. A. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Comptroller General of the United States" and insert in lieu thereof "Secretary of the Treasury," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to J. A. Smith, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $68, being the amount of check No. 131507, issued by the Veterans' Bureau to Ernest Britt, 3501 Kenesaw Avenue, Dayton, Ohio, but mailed to and received by Ernest Britt, route 1 B 68, Dillon, S. C., for whom it was cashed by J. A. Smith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM F. GOODE

The bill (H. R. 3537) for the relief of William F. Goode was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William F. Goode, former second lieutenant, Eight hundred and ninth Regiment Pioneer Infantry, the sum of $208, as reimbursement for medical and hospital expenses incurred by him while in military service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. M. GRAY, JR., CO.

The bill (H. R. 3677) for the relief of F. M. Gray, jr., Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow the F. M. Gray, jr., Co. the sum of $2,460.92 in full settlement of all claims under or arising out of contract dated September 21, 1921, for drilling a well at United States Public Health Service Hospital No. 2, Chicago-Broadview Hospital, Maywood, Ill., and there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,460.92 with which to pay the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT S. AMENT

The bill (H. R. 10045) for the relief of Robert S. Ament, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert S. Ament, of New York, N. Y., the sum of $6,301.33, in full compensation for damage to a pier at Provincetown, Mass. (of which he is lessee and which he has improved and decorated to the value of this claim), by the United States Coast Guard cutter Morrill, on November 16, 1926.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES M'COOMBE

The bill (H. R. 13888) for the relief of Charles McCoombe was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the United States Government, the sum of $600 to Charles McCoombe, as reimbursement for damages to his property as a result of the crashing of a naval airplane on March 24, 1928.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROLAND M. BAKER

The bill (H. R. 5338) for the relief of Roland M. Baker was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of Roland M. Baker, postmaster at Boston, Mass., in the sum of $1,756.89. Such sum represents the amount of a deficit in the account of the said Roland M. Baker caused by the embezzlement on or about June 8, 1922, of postal funds by an employee at the North Postal Station, Boston, Mass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. J. HEINZ CO.

The bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of the H. J. Heinz Co., Atlantic City, N. J., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, to the H. J. Heinz Co., of Atlantic City, N. J., the sum of $5,606, to compensate the said H. J. Heinz Co. for property damages sustained by them to their property in Atlantic City, known as the Heinz Pier, on August 22, 1924, caused by collision with said pier of scow No. 22, which was in the service of the War Department in connection with work being done by the United States dredge Corozal in Absecon Inlet.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY C. TASKER

The bill (H. R. 11153) for the relief of Harry C. Tasker was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harry C. Tasker, of Green River, Utah, the sum of $100 for the loss of a horse loaned to the employees of the Geological Survey and not returned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. T. NILAN

The bill (H. R. 9862) for the relief of M. T. Nilan was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, and hereby directed, to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to M. T. Nilan, of Eggleston, Minn., the sum of $121.10. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages resulting from the issuance of a check by the Department of the Interior on December 9, 1924, to Charles Wells, an Indian, which check was cashed by said M. T. Nilan and presented by him for payment, at which time the department refused to pay said check, claiming error on the part of its agent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DON C. FEES

The bill (H. R. 11014) for the relief of Don C. Fees was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. I notice that the claim was disallowed by the Comptroller General. We are passing these bills so rapidly that Senators scarcely have an opportunity to know what a bill is before it is passed. I wonder why the claim was disallowed?

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] is not present, so I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of the Senator from South Dakota, and on objection of the Senator from Utah, the bill will be passed over.

T. D. RANDALL & CO.

The bill (H. R. 9546) for the relief of T. D. Randall & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That T. D. Randall & Co. are hereby authorized to bring suit against the United States under purchase orders Nos. 1904 and 1914 to 1919, both inclusive, for furnishing hay to the Army during the late war, to recover whatever losses or damages they may have suffered by reason of car shortage or other war conditions. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and determine such action and to enter decree or judgment against the United States for the amount of any loss or damages as may be found to have been suffered by the said T. D. Randall & Co. under the said purchase orders, if any: Provided, That such action shall be brought and commenced within four months from the date that this act becomes effective.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The bill (S. 5616) to enable the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment on page 3, line 13, to strike out the words "which approval shall be conclusive upon the General Accounting Office in such amounts and for the purposes herein authorized as the commission in its discretion may deem proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $334,000 to enable the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington, hereinafter referred to as the commission, established by the joint resolution approved December 2, 1924, to carry out and give effect to plans approved and recommended by the commission for the following purposes:

(a) For editing, printing, binding, indexing, and distribution of a definitive edition of George Washington's writings, including illustrations, facsimiles, and clerical and photostat work in preparing copy:

(b) For the preparation, printing, and distribution of handbooks of the commission entitled, "Honor to George Washington," "Reading about George Washington," and "Directions for Celebrations and Pageants";

(c) For preparing and printing a wall map for general use, to be known as the "George Washington map";

(d) For preparing, printing, and binding in cloth a "George Washington atlas";

(e) For a photolithographic print of an approved "George Washington portrait";

(f) For all necessary expenses connected therewith: Provided, That the printing and binding herein authorized, exclusive of maps and portraits, shall be executed at the Government Printing Office upon requisitions of the commission with the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing, which committee shall determine the number of copies and volumes to be printed of each publication and the cost thereof based upon estimates submitted by the Public Printer, and shall also determine the price at which the definitive edition of the George Washington writings shall be sold to the public in whole or in part; and the funds derived from such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and the amounts thereof set forth in the annual report of the Public Printer;

(g) For compensation of the historian, executive secretary, and such assistants as may be needed for stenographic, clerical, and expert services and for actual and necessary traveling, subsistence, and other expenses incurred by the commissioners and officers in the discharge of their duties; and

(h) For contingent expenses, to be expended by the disbursing officer of the commission upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the executive committee of the commission.

SEC. 2. In carrying out the provisions of this or any other act relating to the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the commission is hereby authorized to procure advice and assistance from any existing governmental agency, including the services of technical and other personnel in the executive departments and independent establishments; and the Superintendent of Documents shall make available to the commission the facilities of his office for the distribution of the publications and maps herein authorized.

SEC. 3. Appropriations hereafter made in conformity with this act, and unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the purpose of the commission, shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 4. That the short name for the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington shall be "The George Washington Bicentennial Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL TO SIGNERS OF DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) to create a commission on a memorial for the signers of the Declaration of Independence was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment on page 2, line 20, to strike out "all expenditures of the commission shall be allowed and paid upon presentation of itemized vouchers therefor signed by the chairman," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created to be known as the Declaration of Independence Memorial Commission (hereinafter referred to as the commission). The commission shall be composed of two Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, two Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, and three citizens of the United States to be appointed by the President. The commission is authorized and directed to consider the form of a suitable memorial to the men who signed the Declaration of Independence to be located in Washington, the method of financing such a memorial, to procure such plans and designs and make such surveys and estimates of the cost thereof as it deems advisable, and to make a report to the Congress, together with its recommendations, at the beginning of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress. Appointments to fill vacancies occurring in any class of the membership of the commission shall be made in the same manner as the original appointments to that class. The members of the commission shall serve without compensation; but traveling, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in connection with the work of the commission may be paid from any funds available for expenditure by the commission.

SEC. 2. The commission may employ clerical and other assistants and make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere) as may be necessary for the performance of the duties vested in the commission. To carry out the provisions of this resolution there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOTOR-VEHICLE TRAFFIC, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 5757) to amend paragraphs (c) and (d) of section 9, and paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 10, of the act of Congress, entitled "An act to provide for the regulation of motor-vehicle traffic in the District of Columbia, increase the number of judges of the police court, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1925, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] explain the bill. We had a vehicular traffic bill passed a number of years ago, which those who advocated it said was a perfect measure. I thought it was very imperfect. We are tinkering with it already. I would be glad to know the necessity for this measure when we already have such a perfect measure.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the changes made give the court the discretion of sending an offender to jail or fining him. The present law provides that he must be sent to jail in certain cases. It was pointed out by the District authorities that in many cases, such as the third conviction on a charge for reckless driving, although the last conviction may have been some years ago, the law makes it necessary for the court to send the offender to jail, and in many cases the defendant demands a jury trial when he would otherwise be satisfied to permit the court to sentence him. Those are the only changes proposed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WOMAN'S BUREAU, POLICE DEPARTMENT

The bill (H. R. 6664) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, on account of the confusion in the Chamber I did not hear the proceeding in reference to Order of Business 1856, being House bill 6664, to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. Before it finally goes over I should like to say that there is on the calendar Order of Business 901, being the bill (S. 4174) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Let me say to those who have been in opposition to the woman's police department bill that the chief objection to the original bill was that it was proposed to provide in the bill rights and privileges for women that the men do not receive. The House has passed the bill striking that offensive language from the measure. Under the House bill, which is now on the calendar, the women in the police bureau shall be subject to the same restrictions and regulations as are the men. So I think that the objections which have been raised in the past have been met by the new bill. If there is continued opposition to the bill, I do not care to press it; but if this explanation softens the objection to it, I will be very glad if the bill might be allowed to pass.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. When the Senator states that the women will be placed under the same restrictions and regulations as the men, does he mean women prisoners or women officers of the police bureau?

Mr. COPELAND. I refer to women officers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the House has recently passed a bill——

Mr. COPELAND. The House bill is the one of which I have been speaking.

Mr. KING. Which embodies the provisions which were reported by the Senate committee. I suggest to my friend that if we should have a little consultation before the next call of the calendar I think we may agree upon a measure that may be satisfactory.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

ADDITIONAL SECRETARIES IN DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5614) creating the positions of Undersecretary and two Assistant Secretaries in the Department of Labor, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That effective March 4, 1929, there shall be in the Department of Labor an Undersecretary of Labor, who shall be appointed by the President. The Undersecretary shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor or required by law and, under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 4), in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of Labor, hereafter shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

SEC. 2. Effective March 4, 1929, there shall be in the Department of Labor two Assistant Secretaries of Labor, who shall be appointed by the President. The Assistant Secretaries shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the Secretary or required by law. The Assistant Secretaries, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Undersecretary shall, until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, perform the duties devolving upon the Undersecretary by reason of section 177, Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 4), unless otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section 179, Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 6).

SEC. 3. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to pay the salaries of the Undersecretary and the two Assistant Secretaries of Labor for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930, in accordance with the classification act of 1923.

SEC. 4. The positions of Assistant Secretary of Labor created by section 2 of the act of March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to create a Department of Labor," and Second Assistant Secretary of Labor created by the act of June 30, 1922, entitled, "An act creating the positions of Second Assistant Secretary and private secretary in the Department of Labor," are hereby abolished. The act of March 4, 1927, creating the offices of two assistants to the Secretary of Labor, is hereby repealed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the bill as it stands would create an undersecretary in the Department of Labor. I introduced the bill at the request of the Secretary of Labor, and without committing myself to the proposition that it contains. I can not recommend to the Senate that the bill be enacted in that form, but I do want to say this very briefly: About two years ago, when the work under the immigration law began to be very heavy, the Secretary of Labor asked me to introduce a bill creating two positions of assistants to the Secretary of Labor. He assured me at the time that when the work lightened up he would let us know, so that we could abolish one of those positions. Usually promises like that are written in sand, but the Secretary of Labor has been faithful to his promise, and he tells me that he can get along with one such official. So I want to propose an amendment to the bill as it stands on the calendar, not creating an undersecretary but creating an additional assistant Secretary and repealing the two positions of assistants to the Secretary of Labor that now exist. The result of that would be a saving to the Government in money paid in salaries, and, of course, in office expenses. The Secretary of Labor assured me that he would be able to perform the work of the department with efficiency if that shall be done. So I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask may be read.

Mr. KING. Why not wait until the next Secretary of Labor comes in and see what he wishes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, effective April 1, 1929, there shall be in the Department of Labor an additional Secretary, who shall be known and designated as Third Assistant Secretary of Labor and shall be appointed by the President. The Third Assistant Secretary shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, or required by law, and in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of both the Assistant Secretary and Second Assistant Secretary shall, until a successor or successors are appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, perform the duties devolving upon the Assistant Secretary by reason of section 177, Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 4), unless otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section 179, Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 6).

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to pay the salary of the Third Assistant Secretary of Labor for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 3. The act of March 4, 1927, entitled "An act creating the offices of Assistants to the Secretary of Labor," is hereby repealed, effective April 1, 1929.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret to object to the consideration of this bill, but I am not in favor of creating another office in that department, and especially as we are going to have a new broom soon, a new administration, and, perhaps, the new Secretary of Labor might prefer a different program to that suggested by my able friend from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, before Senate bill 5614 shall be finally passed over, may it be understood that the substitute which I send to the desk is adopted instead of the original bill, and then that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be considered as agreed to, and the bill will go back to the calendar as amended.

ARTHUR E. RUMP

The bill (S. 4325) for the relief of Arthur E. Rump was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, was objection made to that bill?

Mr. KING. I objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah please withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. I will withhold it if the Senator desires to speak.

Mr. HAWES. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, this is a measure which has excited considerable interest in the community in which I live, and I know it has aroused the sympathy of everyone who understands the circumstances underlying the bill. A similar bill has passed the House. The beneficiary of the bill was a clerk in the post office and was seriously injured by another clerk. He has been confined to his bed for over 10 years, and is in a very precarious condition. He is unable to live upon the money now provided for him, and this bill merely increases the sum set aside for his care.

I will say to the Senator from Utah that this measure has been discussed by the newspapers of St. Louis, and it has met with their approval. The case has been taken up by the Optimist Club and various other organizations of the city, and I know it to be a worthy one. This man is now an object of charity, a helpless invalid as the result of an injury for which the Government is responsible. He has not, as I have said, been able to leave his bed for 10 years. I certainly hope the Senator will read the report on the bill, and will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an award was made in this case, and the man was paid $2,000. If the amount now allowed is not adequate, I am perfectly willing to pass a measure which will refer the case back to the compensation commission with authority to allow whatever is just and fair, taking into account the payments heretofore made. But I do not think it is fair, a commission having been set up for the purpose of determining what compensation should be paid and, having acted on that question, to take it out of their hands and make special provision. If that shall be done every time that one is dissatisfied with the finding of the compensation commission, an appeal will be made to Congress, and the work of the commission will be reduced to a nullity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

CAPT. WILLIAM CASSIDY

The bill (S. 4756) for the relief of Capt. William Cassidy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, an identical bill has passed the House of Representatives. I ask unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill on the Calendar and that the House bill be considered at this time. The number of the House bill is 14975.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14975) for the relief of Capt. William Cassidy, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Capt. William Cassidy, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, in the sum of $4,740.39 on account of stoppage of pay as the result of the loss of public funds due to financial irregularities and frauds against the Government, in the handling of public funds by a civilian employee of the Quartermaster Corps at Camp Custer, Mich., during the period from April, 1924, to October, 1927, for part of which Captain Cassidy has been held responsible, and to certify the same to Congress for an appropriation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4756 will be indefinitely postponed.

ARTHUR E. RUMP

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, just a moment ago the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] asked for the consideration of the bill on the calendar preceding the bill which was just passed. I can not believe that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] understands the condition of the beneficiary of that bill for whom the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] is seeking relief. The Senator just told me that this man has been on his back for 10 years and is not able to do a stroke of work and is penniless. I submit that, while Senators are tired and want to get along and clean up the calendar of measures in which we are personally interested, I think the great Senate ought to pause long enough to do justice to a case like this, and I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection and let the Senator from Missouri have the bill passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. It appeals to my sympathy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Regular order has been demanded. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

JOHN B. MEISINGER AND NANNIE BELLE MEISINGER

The bill (S. 4809) for the relief of John B. Meisinger and Nannie Belle Meisinger was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, now I can occupy five minutes on that bill and five minutes on each succeeding bill until we can get some action on the measure for the benefit of the poor, stricken American citizen for whose relief the bill in which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] is interested is pending.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator if he will leave the matter to the Senator from Missouri and myself there will be no controversy.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of Senate bill 4809?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4809) for the relief of John B. Meisinger and Nannie Belle Meisinger, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An Act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of John B. Meisinger and Nannie Belle Meisinger; that in the administration of the aforesaid act John B. Meisinger and Nannie Belle Meisinger shall be held and considered to be the dependent parents of Dr. Clarence L. Meisinger, who was killed June 2, 1924, by the explosion of a balloon in which he was making a series of upper air observations for the United States Weather Bureau.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR E. RUMP

Mr. HAWES. I ask unanimous consent to recur to order of business No. 4325 and I ask that House bill 13430 be substituted on the calendar for Senate bill 4325, and that House bill be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and House bill 13430 is substituted for Senate bill 4325. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13430) for the relief of Arthur E. Rump, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur E. Rump during his natural life the sum of $117 per month, to date from the passage of this act, as compensation for injuries sustained while in the line of his duties as registry clerk at the St. Louis (Mo.) post office, said monthly payments to be paid through the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate bill 4325 will be indefinitely postponed.

ESTATE OF L. GORDON LEECH, BANKRUPT

The bill (H. R. 9385) for the relief of the estate of L. Gordon Leech, bankrupt, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that bill requires explanation.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, about three years ago Congress passed an act closing the bathing beach at the Tidal Basin. Mr. Leech had a contract with the Government for maintaining bathhouses there, and the contract provided that in the event the Government should close the bathing beach his property would be appraised and paid for at actual cost. The Director of Public Buildings and Parks, Colonel Grant, reports that an appraisal was made and that the amount carried in the bill was the amount due him, and Colonel Grant recommended the payment of the amount.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bill originally proposed to pay $5,931.32, which has been stricken out by the committee and $3,000 inserted, for damages sustained in connection with the termination of the tidal beach and other facilities, and so forth. It does not appear to be a payment for property, but it seems that it is payment of damages for closing the beach.

Mr. CAPPER. It is for the loss that this man sustained. As a matter of fact, the House thought it would compromise the amount which had been found due him in the appraisal and provided for the lump sum of $3,000, and called it damages; but that is what it refers to—the property that he lost by reason of the sudden closing of the bathing pool there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What was the basis for the reduction made?

Mr. CAPPER. The House was not disposed to allow the full amount.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But this is a Senate amendment. The House allowed $5,000 plus, and the Senate strikes that out and inserts $3,000.

Mr. CAPPER. There was some difference of opinion in the committee as to the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

ED. SNYDER AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 2137) for the relief of Ed. Snyder, William Paddock, Ed. Strike, and A. S. Heydeck was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE M'COLGAN

The bill (H. R. 2425) for the relief of Annie McColgan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "pay," to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Annie McColgan, of Philadelphia, Pa., widow of Peter McColgan, who, while a civilian employee of the Ordnance Department, United States Army, in the discharge of his duties and without fault or negligence, was killed by the explosion of fuzes at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., on February 5, 1903, the sum of $5,000, being the sum recommended to be paid her by the board of officers appointed to investigate said explosion by the commanding officer at Frankford Arsenal on February 6, 1903.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 4265) for the relief of certain officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, and for other individual claims approved by the War Department, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, after line 8, to strike out:

Maj. E. T. Comegys, Finance Department, the sum of $152.50, on account of payments made for two typewriters for use of and now in possession of the military service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 19, to strike out:

Harry G. Finley, formerly second lieutenant, Quartermaster Corps, the sum of $298.66, being the amount paid by him to one who represented himself as being Lieut. Paul A. Winchell, Air Service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like some explanation of this bill. There is no report about it in my file. Will the Senator from Oregon give us, in as few words as possible, an explanation of why these allowances are made?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, this bill is one of a group of three or four, all of which originated in the War Department. The others have been reported out and passed. This, I think, is the last one of the group.

The bill is for the relief of certain officers who were disbursing officers, and also for the relief of certain civilians. The disbursing officers are merely allowed credits where charges have been maintained against these officers on account of the rulings of the Comptroller General's office.

The bill was carefully considered by the committee; and in all those cases where there was a difference between the figures of the Comptroller General and those of the War Department we accepted the figures of the Comptroller General, and made amendments accordingly. In about half a dozen cases, which are reflected by the amendments, we found that the Comptroller General had reversed his former ruling and had allowed some of these claims. Therefore there was no necessity for any further relief, and we eliminated them from the bill by amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator for the explanation; but, Mr. President, I am going to make a statement again in relation to this class of claims against the Government.

There is not a session of the Senate at which we do not have hundreds of these claims for loss of money by theft by employees, loss of money by fires, and so forth. To the latter I take no exception; but it does seem to me that the time must come, sooner or later, when the Government of the United States will be protected by some kind of insurance against loss and stealing of public money.

No private institution in the United States would permit a situation of this kind to continue; and yet at every session of Congress tens of thousands of dollars are paid out just for the loss of money in post offices, stealing by employees of funds from this department or that department, and so on. The Government of the United States is standing the expense here, and it seems to me that passing these bills is only an invitation to all of them to go right along and be just as careless as they wish about public funds.

If the time is not already here, I say the time is approaching when the Government of the United States must insist upon having some kind of security for men who handle the funds of the Government. Particularly is that the case in the War Department and the Post Office Department; and I will say that there is not a department of the Government but that is involved in the same kind of loss of money of the United States.

I think every one of those disbursing agents—call them what you may—should carry some kind of insurance, and I will tell the Senate now that the insurance companies that would have to pay the money would constitute quite a check upon their being careless in handling funds. The quicker such legislation as that is passed the better it will be for the Government of the United States.

I am going to take it upon myself, if no one else does—and I am not a member of the Claims Committee—to work out some kind of legislation here, and ask that it be passed, so as to stop this kind of legislation.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, would the Senator have the Government pay the premiums on such insurance?

Mr. SMOOT. It would be far better for the Government to do that than it would be to let it go the way it is now.

Mr. EDGE. I am inclined to agree with the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Why not get honest employees?

Mr. SMOOT. That seems to be impossible. In other words, there is quite a lot of difference between the way public money is handled and the way private money is handled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 4, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,495.63" and insert "$2,492.99," so as to read:

First Lieut. Robert A. Hill, Corps of Engineers, the sum of $2,492.99, representing public funds for which he was accountable and which were lost through embezzlement by an employee of the Engineer Department on or about November 17, 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 7, to strike out:

Maj. De Witt C. Jones, Corps of Engineers, the sum of $5,450, representing the amount refunded to Gillett, Eaton, and Squire on their contract of September 4, 1917, for the construction of one pair of tandem compound condensing engines for stern paddle-wheel steam towboat.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to strike out:

Maj. C. C. Oakes, Finance Department, the sum of $136.50, representing the amount refunded to D. Kasdan in adjusting a sale of Government property.

Charles O. Pierson, disbursing officer, Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system, the sum of $400, which amount was stolen by an enlisted man of the Signal Corps.

Capt. Philip A. Scholl, Finance Department, the sum of $90, representing the amount paid on a fraudulent voucher.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 20, after the word "and," to strike out "seventy" and insert "eighty," so as to read:

American Commission Co., $448.08, being the value of 4,080 cans of tomatoes purchased from the Government at a sale of surplus supplies, which were seized by the Federal Food Administrator and destroyed as unfit for human consumption.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 8, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$350.48" and insert "$338.40," so as to read:

To Maj. Horace G. Foster, finance department (formerly pay clerk, Quartermaster Corps), for rental from November 13, 1912, to January 15, 1914, while stationed at the Presidio of San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $338.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 22, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$323.90" and insert "$321.60"; in line 24, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$278" and insert "$275"; in line 25, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$86.80" and insert "$74.40"; and on page 15, line 3, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$1,794.57" and insert "$1,776.87," so as to make the paragraph read:

Lieut. George D. Graham, Medical Corps, the sum of $301.20; to Capt. Edward D. Kremers, Medical Corps, the sum of $340; to Capt. Larry B. McAfee, Medical Corps, the sum of $293; to Capt. Laertus J. Owen, Medical Corps, the sum of $171.67; to Lieut. Col. Frederic P. Reynolds, Medical Corps, the sum of $321.60; to Capt. Adam E. Schlanser, Medical Corps, the sum of $275; and to Jay D. Whitham (formerly major, Medical Corps), the sum of $74.40, being the amounts paid by them for commutation of quarters and afterwards refunded by them from their private funds; in all, the sum of $1,776.87.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MAIL CARRIERS IN VILLAGE DELIVERY SERVICE

The bill (S. 3027) to increase the pay of mail carriers in the village delivery service was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the pay of carriers in the village delivery service, under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, shall be from $1,350 to $1,500 per annum. The pay of substitute letter carriers in the village delivery service shall be at the rate of 60 cents per hour."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the date of its approval.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF IMMIGRATION ACT

The bill (S. 5472) to amend the immigration act of 1924, as amended, with regard to the issuance of immigration visas, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah spoke to me in reference to this bill, which was presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. I find on examination what I did not recall when the Senator from Utah spoke to me—that it is a bill that was presented by the department, and one that is highly approved by them, and the Senator from Mississippi presented it to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 2 of the immigration act of 1924 is amended by adding the following paragraphs at the end thereof:

"Whenever it shall appear to a consular officer that an immigrant applying for an immigration visa has an alien wife, husband, and/or unmarried dependent children under the age of 21 years residing outside the United States and such wife, husband, and/or children are not applicants for immigration visas, the consular officer shall require the immigrant applying for an immigration visa to make a declaration under oath, as a part of the visa application, as to whether he or she intends to have the wife, husband, and/or such children join him or her in the United States at some future time. If an immigration visa be issued and if the facts in the declaration disclose that the wife, husband, or such children will at some subsequent time apply for immigration visas, the consular officer may accept at once the applications for immigration visas of the wife, husband, and/or such children. If the consular officer finds that the wife, husband, and/or such children are in other respects eligible to obtain immigration visas under the provisions of this act, such officer shall reserve sufficient consecutive immigration visa serial numbers for the wife, husband, and/or such children, and charge such aliens to the quota then existing for the appropriate country as determined by the provisions of this act. The actual issuance of immigration visas to the immigrants for whom reserve shall be deferred by the consular officer until the immigrants are ready to immigrate to the United States. Immigration visas reserved for future use under this paragraph shall be valid for one year subsequent to date of the reservation, notwithstanding the limitations on the issuance of immigration visas in subdivision (f) of section 11 of this act and the provsions of section 6 thereof, as amended by the act of May 29, 1928, but shall be subject to all the other provisions of said act: Provided, That the provisions of subdivision (c) of this section shall apply only after the immigration visas have actually been issued by the consular officer.

"An alien admitted to the United States under the immigration laws for permanent residence for whose wife, husband, and/or unmarried dependent children under the age of 21 years immigration visas have been reserved under the paragraph next above, may, not less than 60 calendar days prior to the expiration of one year immediately following such reservation, apply to the Secretary of Labor for an extension of the validity of such reserved immigration visa or visas. If it shall appear to the Secretary of Labor that refusal to grant such extension will result in unusual hardship to the aliens, he may approve the application, inform the Secretary of State of his decision, and the Secretary of State shall then authorize the consular officer with whom the application for the immigration visa has been filed to issue the immigration visa."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1929.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to present a report on an immigration bill which came from the House, to which the Immigration Committee has just given unanimous consideration. It relates simply to change of sovereignty. So many countries changed their rulers during the war that a man now is denied admission if he fails to name the right sovereign. This bill proposes to correct that.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from New York that that is contrary to the unanimous-consent agreement, which was that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of bills upon the calendar, and that at the conclusion of the printed calendar it should consider any other bills that had been reported.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I will ask to have the papers sent back to me.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 1714, House bill 9285, which was passed over. When this order of business was reached objection was raised to the bill, but I understand that the objection has been withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator that that is not included in the bills which are to be considered to-day. We began with Order of Business 1826.

Mr. McMASTER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, that can not be done.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5779) to establish the Badlands National Monument in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORBECK. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 379) extending the benefits of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 1, 1920, the act of Congress approved July 3, 1926, and the act of Congress approved May 23, 1908, to the Missouri Militia who served during the Civil War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when I had the honor to be a member of the Pensions Committee a number of years ago a measure of this character was before us, and, as I recall, was unanimously rejected. I do not see any reason for changing that action. I remember that at the time applications came from other States that the militia in those States should be included within the provisions of that act; and I know that the measure was before the committee when my colleague (Mr. SMOOT) was chairman. I think this bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ANNIE E. SPRINGER

The bill (H. R. 16406) to repeal the provision of law granting a pension to Annie E. Springer was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOTTIE A. BOWHALL

The bill (H. R. 16407) to repeal the provision of law granting a pension to Lottie A. Bowhall was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANTS

The bill (S. 5855) to amend the act approved July 2, 1864, and the joint resolution approved May 31, 1870, relative to Northern Pacific land grants, etc., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An identical bill is House bill 17212, which is on the calendar.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that bill is of peculiar and great importance to the State of Montana. I have sent copies of the bill out to various people of that State for comment, and I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

STATE OF MAINE AND CITY OF PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

The bill (H. R. 10664) for the relief of the State of Maine and the city of Portsmouth, N. H., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will let us take up that bill.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with it. I will listen to the Senator, however.

Mr. HALE. I should like to explain the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HALE. The expenditure of $500,000 for the building of a bridge across the Piscataqua River between Portsmouth, N. H., and Kittery, Me., was authorized by Congress in 1919 and an appropriation made with the understanding that the States of Maine and New Hampshire were to contribute an equal amount each.

Mr. BLACK. I asked for the regular order. There is nothing before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will allow me to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who objected withdrew his objection for the moment.

Mr. HALE. The bridge was completed in 1923. The reason for the Government participating was that the Kittery Navy Yard, situated in Kittery, Me., across the river from Portsmouth, had to get many of its supplies from across the river, and many of the workers in the yard had to cross over a ferry to reach the yard. This bridge obviated the necessity of the ferry.

In building the bridge, contracts were made, which were a little under the fifteen hundred thousand provided. The Government put in only $466,000, leaving $34,000 unexpended. Eventually, to complete the bridge, both New Hampshire and Maine had to contribute more than their proportions. The State of Maine had to contribute about $634,000, the State of New Hampshire $500,000, and the city of Portsmouth, in the State of New Hampshire, $134,000. This is simply taking the amount of $34,000, which has already been appropriated, and reappropriating it, so that half will go to the State of Maine and half to the city of Portsmouth, thus partially reimbursing them for their expenditures over and above the original project. The city of Portsmouth was not originally obliged, but assumed the obligation in order that the bridge might be completed. It seems to me a very fair proposition.

Mr. KING. I shall adhere to my objection. I have important data, and I will submit them to the Senator, and we can recur to it a little later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

NAVAL RESERVE AND MARINE CORPS RESERVE

The bill (H. R. 7930) to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, relative to the creation and maintenance of a naval reserve and a Marine Corps reserve, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. ODDIE. Will not the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. I object to that bill.

Mr. ODDIE. I will ask the Senator to withdraw his objection a moment until I can explain the measure.

This is a bill intended to clarify some legislation we passed several years ago. It provides that the men of the Fleet Naval Reserve must report for inspections. There is a flaw in the law to-day, and it is an important matter. I hope the Senator will reconsider the matter and let the bill be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah withdraw his objection?

Mr. ODDIE. The bill provides in part:

> That any pay which may be due any member of the Fleet Naval Reserve, transferred thereto prior to July 1, 1925, shall be forfeited when so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy upon the failure, under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, of such member to report for inspection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ODDIE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. There are two bills on the calendar, probably more than two, dealing with the marines, one calling for promotions much like promotions in the Navy. I object to them. Is this one of those bills?

Mr. ODDIE. No; this is not one of the bills to which the Senator refers.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand this is recommended by the department.

Mr. ODDIE. Yes; this is recommended by the Navy Department.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection. I will ask the Senator if, upon examination, I find it is one of the measures I have in mind I may ask for a reconsideration.

Mr. ODDIE. That will be all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. WALTER R. GHERARDI

The bill (S. 5737) for the relief of Capt. Walter R. Gherardi, United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let there be an explanation of that.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, Captain Gherardi is one of the best known and one of the ablest men in the Navy. He was injured while in line of duty on a trip of inspection with the Secretary of the Navy some time ago, and had to undergo a severe operation, which it is believed slightly incapacitated him for sea duty, but he is admirably adapted for shore duty. The Navy Department has strongly recommended that this legislation be passed.

Captain Gherardi has had a brilliant record, which the report shows. He has performed heroic and remarkable service and has shown himself to be a brave and most capable officer. The committee has passed on the case carefully, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that the Navy Department has recommended that this bill be passed, which is, in effect, doing away with the selection board?

Mr. ODDIE. No; this makes an exception, in a way.

Mr. BLACK. I think the bill should be passed, but I desire to call attention to the fact that I have had a bill before the committee since the first session of this Congress. I have never been able to get any action on it. Finally, it was submitted to a subcommittee day before yesterday, and they were to take it up. I have endeavored at great pains to get it acted on, and I understand the naval authorities have taken the position with reference to that bill that any bill which in any manner overrides the action of the selection board should not be passed.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Navy Department so held as to this bill as originally drawn, but the bill has been amended so as to apply to this particular case.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this would not result in the overriding of the action of the selection board. It simply provides that the selection board need not take into consideration the question of Captain Gherardi's physical ability to go to sea. He will have to go before the selection board, and if passed by them he will be selected. It is entirely up to the selection board.

Mr. ODDIE. A similar bill has just been passed by the House, House bill 17001, and I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17001) for the relief of Capt. Walter R. Gherardi, United States Navy, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the line selection board of the Navy, as provided by United States Code, title 34, section 292, in its consideration of the officers eligible for consideration for selection for promotion to the grade of rear admiral may base its recommendation in the case of Capt. Walter R. Gherardi upon his comparative fitness for the shore duties of the grade of rear admiral: Provided, That in the event of his selection and subsequent promotion he shall be carried as an additional number in grade.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 5737 will be indefinitely postponed.

ARMY TRANSPORT SERVICE NAVIGATORS

The bill (H. R. 10478) providing retirement for persons who hold licenses as navigators or engineers who have reached the age of 64 years and who have served 25 or more years on seagoing vessels of the Army Transport Service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that that bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES SILVERMAN

The bill (H. R. 9972) for the relief of Charles Silverman, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find that the Secretary of the Navy recommends against the enactment of this bill. Without an explanation, I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, it is true that the Secretary reported against the bill, but it involves but $76.

It seems that this man was punished for having misstated his age at the time he went into the Government service. It is true that he misstated his age, but he is of Jewish extraction, and calculated his age in accordance with the custom of his own people. The committee thought that he ought not to be penalized for a thing of that kind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is that the only reason why the Secretary of the Navy reported against the bill?

Mr. STEIWER. I will say, in answer to the question of the Senator, that when I read the Secretary's letter, and saw what he himself had said concerning the facts of the case, I could not imagine what occasioned him to put at the bottom of the letter the recommendation against the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIP V. SULLIVAN

The bill (H. R. 4264) for the relief of Philip V. Sullivan, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to have an explanation of that bill. Does it provide for the retiring of this lieutenant at a higher grade than the one he now holds?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It does not. It simply provides that he should have an opportunity to have another physical examination.

Mr. Sullivan is a young man who was four years in the military service, and passed a physical examination at the academy successfully four successive years. Shortly after entering the service he was attacked by disease, and a question has arisen as to whether the disease was contracted in line of duty or not. The medical board originally decided that the disease was not contracted in line of duty, but the testimony raises some doubt about that decision. So this bill gives Mr. Sullivan an opportunity to appear again before a medical board, and to show whether his disease was contracted in line of duty or not.

Mr. BLACK. Has he already been retired?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; but not with pay.

Mr. BLACK. This provides that he can now be retired——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. With pay, if he satisfies the medical board that he actually contracted in the service the disease from which he is suffering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. CHARLES H. DELANCEY

The bill (S. 801) to place Dr. Charles H. DeLancey on the retired list of the Navy as a lieutenant commander was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I note that the report of the Secretary of the Navy on this bill is adverse, and I would like to have some one explain it and justify it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is objection raised?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas would like to have an explanation.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. This man, Doctor DeLancey, retired in March, 1909. He had been disabled in the line of duty, and because of that he was not physically fit to be promoted to the next rank. If he had been physically fit, he would have been promoted and retired at once.

Two years later we made provision for such cases, and this is simply to rectify the manifest injustice in his case. The Committee on Naval Affairs took pains to find if any precedent existed, and found that there were only two or three such cases, and I hope no objection will be interposed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States hereby is authorized to appoint Dr. Charles H. DeLancey, who, while serving as a lieutenant in the United States Navy, was found by a naval retiring board to be permanently unfit for active service by reason of physical disability incurred in the line of duty as a result of an incident of the service, a lieutenant commander on the retired list of the Navy, with such retired pay as is now or may hereafter be allowed a commissioned officer of that rank and grade: Provided, That said Dr. Charles H. DeLancey shall not be entitled to such retired pay prior to the date of the enactment of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET VAUGHN

The bill (H. R. 12548) for the relief of Margaret Vaughn was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. FLOOD

The bill (S. 5485) to authorize a cash award to William P. Flood for beneficial suggestions resulting in improvement in naval material, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask that there be substituted for this bill House bill 13288, which is identical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this bill is to authorize an award to the beneficiary for beneficial suggestions resulting in improvement in naval material. I think there should be an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, this man was the inventor of some patents which the Navy Department wants to pay him for, and the regular practice, as I understand it, is to refer the case back to the Secretary of the Navy for such settlement. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, and there is no objection to it anywhere along the line.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he justifies legislation that gives the Navy Department the authority, without limit, to pay whatever it pleases? One officer might find that the suggestions were worth $5,000, another might find that they were worth $50,000, and some other that they were worth nothing. What limitation is there?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is already a general act taking care of situations of this kind. The bill simply confers jurisdiction on the Secretary of the Navy in a particular set of circumstances not within the act. This man, working partly in Government time and partly in his own, invented a number of things which saved the Government many thousands of dollars, I understand. It authorizes the expenditure of no money, but authorizes this man to file an application. It has the approval of the Budget, and the Secretary of the Navy, it has passed the House and Senate committees unanimously, and carries no money, simply authorizing the beneficiary to make application, as other acts now on the statute books have done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, was a report made upon this bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; the letter of the Secretary of the Navy is in the report, and it is in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no report in my file.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is a report, and it is favorable. At least, the Secretary of the Navy says that there is no objection to the consideration of the application of Mr. Flood and the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland permit a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Constitution provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. How is it an appropriation made by law to provide that an executive officer shall have authority to pay an unlimited amount, perhaps $5, or perhaps $5,000,000, in his discretion?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will read the report, he will find that there is a general act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make payment in these cases.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then I wonder whether that is constitutional.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have just said that there were certain facts in connection with this case that made jurisdiction in this man's case questionable. The bill simply authorizes him to file his application, as others are now authorized to do under an existing general law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is there anything very secret about this case, that it should not be stated what it was he is to be paid for?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is said in the report that there were many materials which he invented and other inventions which he turned over to the Government, partly on Government time and partly on his own time, for which he received no compensation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not find anything in the report that describes what he did or what kind of naval material may be involved.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the first part of the report I think the Senator will find a definition of what he accomplished.

Mr. SMOOT. But this is a Senate bill, and can not possibly pass the House.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is proposed to substitute the House bill. The bill says:

> Services resulting in the improvement of naval material and in economy in manufacturing processes.

On that statement we are asked to allow an executive official to pay any amount he might see fit.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I do not remember what the report shows, but the correspondence shows definitely what the man did accomplish. I am not altogether clear in my mind what it was, but I think it was certain materials that went into a battleship which resulted in a great deal of saving to the Navy. Experiments were carried on partly under Government time and partly on the man's own time, for which he received no compensation whatsoever.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We had a similar case in the Army. The inventor of the breech mechanism of a gun was involved, and the whole thing was spread out in detail and was sent to the Court of Claims to be investigated, and the man waited many years while his claim was being adjudicated.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I have just one minute further? The bill further provides that the patent which this man has a right to take out shall become the property of the United States Government. He has already let the Government use the result of his own patent when he might not have done so. If the bill is passed, the Government will have these patents for its exclusive use. The last paragraph of the bill provides for the turning over of the result of his inventions to the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Secretary of the Navy can pay a cash reward and pay over the money.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the law there is a board which makes an investigation and collects the evidence and then recommends what shall be paid. Then Congress must act and appropriate the money to carry out the recommendations.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is right in his statement. There will be no payments of money under the bill. The bill itself says that it authorizes him to file his application.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; the bill says that the Secretary is authorized, in his discretion, to pay a cash reward. There is nothing in the bill or the report to show whether the man was a Government employee or not.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to take any further time of the Senate. I will talk to the Senator from Pennsylvania in private, and perhaps I can explain the matter to him satisfactorily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection the bill will be passed over.

GOLD STAR MOTHERS' PILGRIMAGE

The bill (S. 5332) to enable the mothers and unmarried widows of the deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines of the American forces interred in the cemeteries of Europe to make a pilgrimage to these cemeteries was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to arrange for pilgrimage to cemeteries in Europe by mothers and widows of members of the military or naval forces of the United States who died in the military or naval service at any time between April 5, 1917, and July 1, 1921, and whose remains are now interred in such cemeteries. Such pilgrimages shall be made at the expense of the United States under the conditions set forth in section 2.

SEC. 2. The conditions under which such pilgrimages may be made are as follows:

(a) Invitations to make the pilgrimages shall be extended in the name of the United States to the mothers and widows for whom the pilgrimages are authorized to be arranged under section 1.

(b) Upon acceptance of the invitation the mother or widow shall be entitled to make one such pilgrimage; but no mother or widow who has previous to the pilgrimage visited cemeteries described in section 1 shall be entitled to make any such pilgrimage, and no mother or widow shall be entitled to make more than one such pilgrimage.

(c) The pilgrimages shall be made at such times during the period from May 1, 1930, to October 31, 1933, as may be designated by the Secretary of War.

(d) For the purpose of the pilgrimages the Secretary of State shall (1) issue special passports, limited to the duration of the pilgrimage, to mothers and widows making the pilgrimages and to such personnel as may be selected to accompany and/or arrange for the pilgrimages, if such mothers, widows, and personnel are citizens of the United States, and (2) issue suitable travel documents, if aliens. No fee for either of such documents or for any application therefor shall be charged. Such alien mothers, widows, and personnel shall be permitted to return and be granted admission to the United States without regard to any law, convention, or treaty relating to the immigration or exclusion of aliens, if the return is made within the period covered by the pilgrimage of the particular group or, in the case of personnel, within such times as the Secretary of War shall by regulation prescribe; except that in any case of unavoidable detention the Secretary of War may extend in such case the time during which return may be made without regard to such laws, conventions, or treaties.

(e) The pilgrimages shall be by the shortest practicable route and for the shortest practicable time, to be designated by the Secretary of War. No mother or widow shall be provided for at Government expense in Europe for a longer period than two weeks from the time of disembarkation in Europe to the time of reembarkation in Europe. In the case of any mother or widow willfully failing to continue the pilgrimage of her particular group, the United States shall not incur or be subject to any expense with regard to her pilgrimage after such failure.

(f) Vessels owned or operated by the United States Government or any agency thereof shall be used for transportation at sea wherever practicable.

(g) Suitable transportation, accommodations, meals, and other necessities pertaining thereto, as prescribed by the Secretary of War, shall be furnished each mother or widow included in any pilgrimage for the entire distance at sea and on land and while sojourning in Europe and while en route in the United States from home to port and from port to home. Cabin-class accommodations shall be furnished for all transportation at sea. No mother or widow shall be entitled, by reason of any payment made by or for her, to be furnished by the Government with transportation, accommodations, meals, and other necessities pertaining thereto different in kind from those prescribed by the Secretary of War for the pilgrimage of the particular group.

(h) All pilgrimages shall be made in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe as to the time, route, itineraries, composition of groups, accommodations, transportation, program, arrangements, management, and other matters pertaining to such pilgrimages.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act. The Secretary of War is directed to make an investigation for the purpose of determining (1) the total numbers of mothers and widows entitled to make the pilgrimages, (2) the number of such mothers and widows who desire to make the pilgrimages and the number who desire to make the pilgrimages during the calendar year 1930, and (3) the probable cost of the pilgrimages to be made. The Secretary of War shall report to the Congress not later than December 15, 1929, the results of such investigation.

SEC. 4. As used in this act—

(a) The term "mother" means mother, stepmother, mother through adoption, or any woman who stood in loco parentis to the deceased member of the military or naval forces for the year prior to the commencement of his service in such forces.

(b) The term "widow" means a widow who has not remarried since the death of the member of the military or naval forces.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. After the word "Europe," in line 20, page 6, I move to insert the words "and the United States." I understand that the amendment is satisfactory to the author of the bill or at least to the Senator who reported it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 20, after the word "Europe," insert the words "and the United States," so the first sentence of the bill will read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to arrange for pilgrimages to cemeteries in Europe and the United States by mothers and widows of members of the military or naval forces of the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Why should the pilgrimage be confined to Europe and the United States?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am going to state why I think the amendment should be adopted. I think pilgrimages should be made available to the mothers and widows of soldiers who are buried in the United States, if it is necessary for Congress to take action, as well as to enable them to make pilgrimages to Europe. I am going to cite a particular instance that I know of my own personal knowledge with reference to the situation.

In the city of Yakima, Wash., there lives a good woman whom I have known ever since I went to the State of Washington. I have known her children from the time of their birth. She had a splendid boy. He located after his marriage in New Mexico, at Gallup. He enlisted for the war, and either on the way across or after he got over in England and while in a training camp he contracted a deadly disease and died.

His body was brought back to this country and buried in a cemetery at Gallup, N. Mex., the home of his wife. His mother is a poor woman. She is unable to make the trip to his burial place. She has been anxious for years to do it. She is not able to do it. I think she has never been able to do it.

Now I do not know but there may be many other cases like it in the United States. If widows and mothers are to be provided with a trip to Europe to see the last resting place of their husbands and sons, why should not the widows and mothers in this country who by reason of their poverty and their condition are unable to visit the last resting place of a son or husband be given the same privilege? The one is just as deserving as the other.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can suggest to the Senator one reason. If the body of this veteran was brought home at the mother's request it would have been buried at the point she designated. If his body is buried in Gallup, N. Mex., it must be her fault and not the fault of the Government.

Mr. JONES. No. That is where his widow lives. His widow looked after the return of his body. At any rate, whether she looked after it or not, I think she met the body at New York and took it to Gallup, N. Mex. As I said, the mother has been unable by reason of her poverty to visit the last resting place of her boy of whom she was very justly proud and whom she loved as much as any mother loves a son. It does seem to me that cases like that are just as deserving of the consideration of the United States Government as are the cases of widows whose boys are buried abroad.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, would not the Senator's amendment permit, at Government expense, a widow removed from one community in one State to another community in the same State to make the pilgrimage?

Mr. JONES. I have not modified or attempted to modify any of the other conditions in the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It seems to me the demands upon the Public Treasury would be unlimited under the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington. The widows and mothers could go from neighboring towns at Government expense.

Mr. JONES. But there are regulations provided for on the part of the Secretary of War. I take it that the matter of expense has not been considered really in the framing of this bill. It is to give the mothers and widows the opportunity to make one pilgrimage to where their loved boys rest. Why does not one mother who gave her son to her country deserve the same consideration as another?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; but we know the number of interred veterans in Europe and we do not know the number of interred veterans in this country whose graves might be visited.

Mr. JONES. That may be true, but it seems to me the same consideration should be given to the widows and the mothers in this country as anywhere else, because they are entitled to the same consideration. Furthermore, it is not difficult to determine approximately how many are in this land. I venture the expense at home will not be so great as this expense going abroad.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I fear the Senator's amendment would destroy the purpose of the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Washington has expired.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to the proposed amendment. The Senator may have cited a very deserving case. There may be many other similar cases in the country. However, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill provides for a foreign pilgrimage. There are special records in connection therewith. It would require special work and a special organization. Therefore I would suggest to the Senator from Washington, if he believes there are deserving cases along this line, that special legislation should be introduced for the purpose of covering the other cases in the United States. The bill, which provides exclusively for a foreign pilgrimage, may be passed; but I doubt its passage if we add these amendments to it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator that the bill provides for transportation across the country as well as across the sea. If this woman's son was buried in Europe, she would be entitled under the bill to have transportation clear across the country and then across the ocean. The same arrangement to be made with reference to that pilgrimage may be made to apply to a mother going across the country to see her son's grave in this country as when she goes across this country on her way to Europe.

Mr. McMASTER. I agree with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Washington. Still I feel that he is dealing with a different type of cases. These cases ought to be covered by themselves because it would require an immense amount of detail work to take care of them. The bill before the Senate is designed expressly for mothers whose sons are buried abroad. I feel that if the Senator from Washington would introduce a special bill covering that subject it no doubt would receive favorable consideration at the hands of Congress. But it ought not to be attached to the pending bill as an amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, to the average mother in America the ocean is very wide. It seems so to them. The gold-star mothers have tried so hard to pass this bill that I fear the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, who has the most worthy motive in his mind, might embarrass the passage of the bill. I shall be glad and I know many other Senators will be glad to join with him in an effort to pass a special bill to take care of such cases as he has in mind. But I hope he will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. JONES. I do not feel that I should withdraw an amendment of that kind. It seems to me it is most deserving of favorable consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate nor embarrass Senators by asking for a roll call, but I shall try to follow the suggestions that have been made by Senators and offer a special bill in the next Congress, and I hope it will have the support of all Senators. If the Government brings joy to a mother by taking her across the country and over the sea to her son's last resting place, how can it refuse to take a mother to her son's last resting place in this country?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to enable the mothers and widows of the deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines of the American forces now interred in the cemeteries of Europe to make a pilgrimage to these cemeteries."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5482) to authorize the disposition of unplatted portions of Government town sites on irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over without prejudice.

CROW TRIBAL FUNDS

The bill (H. R. 15723) authorizing an appropriation of Crow tribal funds for payment of council and delegate expenses, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from funds to the credit of the Crow Tribe of Indians, the sum of $5,000, to be available for the payment of the expenses of the tribal council in holding meetings on the Crow Reservation, and for the expenses of delegates which such council may send to the city of Washington on tribal business when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL CHAPEL AT LAKEHURST NAVAL AIR STATION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16533) to authorize the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, to erect a memorial chapel at the naval air station, Lakehurst, N. J., which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, to erect at the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J., a memorial chapel in commemoration of those whose lives are lost in aviation and particularly in lighter-than-air-craft activities. The erection of this memorial chapel shall be subject to the following conditions:

First. The site of the memorial chapel shall be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, and its design and construction, with its individual memorials and memorial windows, shall be subject to his approval and supervision.

Second. The design and construction of the memorial chapel shall be without cost to the United States.

SEC. 2. Upon the completion and dedication of the memorial chapel, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept it as an unconditional gift to the United States from the American Legion, Department of New Jersey.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AIR CORPS OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY

The Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5555) to provide more effectively for the national defense by increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13a of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by section 2, act of July 2, 1926 (44 U. S. Stat. L. 780–781), be, and the same is hereby, further amended by striking out the words, in lines 18 and 19, page 781, "together with those flying officers who shall have become disqualified for flying."

SEC. 2. That section 5 of the said act of June 3, 1916, as amended by said act of July 2, 1916 (44 U. S. Stat. L. 782), be further amended, in the first line of the paragraph added by said act of July 2, 1926, by striking out the word "three" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven."

SEC. 3. That the first two paragraphs of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide more effectively for the national defense by increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1926 (44 U. S. Stat. L. 783–784), be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. Five-year Air Corps program: For the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army and for its further development the following 5-year program is authorized:

"Personnel: The number of promotion-list officers now authorized by law in the grade of second lieutenant of the Regular Army is hereby increased by 403, and the number of enlisted men now authorized by law for the Regular Army is hereby authorized to be increased by 6,240: Provided, That the increase in the number of officers and enlisted men herein authorized shall be allotted as hereinafter provided. The present allotment of officers to the Air Corps is hereby authorized to be increased by 403 officers distributed in grades from colonel to second lieutenant, inclusive, and the present allotment of enlisted men to the Air Corps is hereby authorized to be increased by 6,240 enlisted men. The President is authorized to call to active service, with their consent, for periods of six months or longer, such number of Air Corps reserve officers as he may deem necessary, not to exceed 550: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall affect the number of reserve officers that may be called to active duty for periods of less than six months under existing law."

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect July 1, 1929.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if that bill is reported unanimously by the committee and if it is needed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; and it is very simple. The present law provides that 90 per cent of the officers of the Air Corps must be flying officers. It is found, as time goes on, that many officers reaching middle age cease to be able to participate in military flying. This bill merely provides that those officers who are getting old and are becoming unable to fly shall not be counted in calculating the 10 per cent of nonflying officers. It allows the retention in the Air Corps of officers who have had flying experience but do not now fly. It will not add one penny of cost to the pay roll of the Army.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is the age limit when such officers cease to be counted?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is no age limit. It is a question of periodical examination. They are examined every six months, I believe, and the examination is very severe.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, when these officers cease to fly if they still receive the compensation which flyers receive?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. ARTHUR A. PADMORE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4626) for the relief of Maj. Arthur A. Padmore, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Maj. Arthur A. Padmore, United States Army, retired, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $645.33, being the difference in pay and allowance from March 4, 1921, to November 21, 1921, which would have been due and payable to him had it been possible to promote him to the grade to which his seniority entitled him before his retirement by operation of law on November 21, 1921.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES L. DEWEY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7230) for the relief of Charles L. Dewey, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles L. Dewey, who was a member of Company F, Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 5th day of September, 1898, for gastric catarrh and rheumatism: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES P. CORNES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5264) for the relief of James P. Cornes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, James P. Cornes, who was a member of Company K, Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a second lieutenant of that organization on the 30th day of September, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York, who reported this bill, whether that is a case of a desire to correct a military record for desertion?

Mr. TYSON. What case is that, I will ask the Senator.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, perhaps I can explain the bill for the Senator from New York. This young man at the age of 18, in January, 1864, was mustered into the New York Cavalry; was honorably discharged in May, 1865, in order to enable him to receive promotion for bravery. The facts are all set out in the report on the bill. He was mustered in as a second lieutenant into the Twenty-second New York Cavalry on May 19, 1865; he fought with his regiment in the Battle of the Wilderness, and served in many skirmishes. The facts of his case are set forth in the report. At the time of the Jubal Early raid he was captured by Early. He escaped from Early, was recaptured, and escaped another time.

Finally, after the war was over, there was a jubilation when he was off duty, and he and some other officers of the regiment took too much to drink. While he was under the influence of liquor he disgraced himself by using improper language, and he disgraced the uniform he wore by drunkenness and misbehavior.

However, his military record was very fine, and it seemed only just in the view of the committee that after this long delay his record should be cleared up and that he should have recognition for the good military service which he performed up until the time of this escapade.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSIAH HARDEN

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13260) for the relief of Josiah Harden, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Josiah Harden, 2233371, private in the Infantry, unassigned, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from military service of the United States as an unassigned private in the Infantry of the United States Army on November 21, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Tennessee with regard to that case. I find in the report that the major general, speaking for the War Department, states that his sentence was reduced to confinement for one year by the reviewing authority, and the execution of the dishonorable discharge was suspended until his release from confinement. The report states:

He was transferred to the United States, arriving at Fort Jay, N. Y., July 5, 1919, and was forwarded July 8, 1919, to the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The separation of this soldier—

Reads the report—

from the service was not under honorable conditions.

Does the Senator from Tennessee think, in view of the statements in the report, that the bill should be passed?

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, this is the case of a soldier who served during the World War. He was one of the very best soldiers in the Army. After the armistice, while he was off duty on a pass, he visited a café, took too much to drink, was a little disorderly, and refused to obey some order which was given him by an officer who happened to be present.

He was given a very hard sentence and was confined for quite a long time in a prison. His companion, a soldier who was with him at the time, was tried at the same time, and, although guilty of practically the same offense, was allowed to come back to the United States, while, on the other hand, this man was kept there, as I have said, for a long time. When the trial took place he had no witnesses. It is a peculiarly deserving case, Mr. President, because of the fact that this man rose from a private to a corporal and then a sergeant and was said to have been an exemplary soldier in every way. The Military Affairs Committee felt that he had already been punished sufficiently and that it was as little as we could do to remove the dishonorable discharge against his name.

Mr. HEFLIN. He had a good record?

Mr. TYSON. He had an excellent record; he was one of the best sergeants in the whole service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PIERCE DALE JACKSON

The bill (H. R. 12867) granting an honorable discharge to Pierce Dale Jackson was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Pierce Dale Jackson, who was a member of the One hundred and forty-first Ambulance Company, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 21st day of March, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. FLEMING

The bill (H. R. 12650) for the relief of John F. Fleming was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment on page 1, line 10, after the word "discharged," to strike out "from the date of the approval of this act" and to insert "from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on January 16, 1919," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant an honorable discharge to John F. Fleming, Army serial No. 1310102, a member of Company A, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry, Thirtieth Division, United States Army, and that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers the said John F. Fleming shall be deemed to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on January 16, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WIDOW OF EDWIN D. MORGAN

The bill (H. R. 12359) for the relief of the widow of Edwin D. Morgan was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Edwin D. Morgan, deceased, who was a member of Company B, Eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 15th day of December, 1863: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT TOWN SITES ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask to recur to Order of Business 1886, being the bill S. 5482. House bill 16082—I have not the calendar number—deals with the same subject and is in exactly the same terms, except with reference to one section. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill at this time.

Mr. KING. To what does the bill relate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It authorizes the disposition of unplatted portions of Government town sites on irrigation projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the House bill on the calendar?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It has been messaged over to the Senate. I think it passed the House on February 18. I am unable to say whether it is on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the bill be temporarily passed over until the House bill can be found.

Mr. WALSH of Montana subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask now to recur to Order of Business No. 1886, Senate bill 5482. I have in my hand House bill 16082, dealing with the same subject, and I ask that it be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 16082) to authorize the disposition of unplatted portions of Government town sites on irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, these two bills are identical except with reference to section 2 thereof. I move to strike out section 2 of the House bill, and substitute therefor section 2 of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of of section 2 of the House bill, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 2. The net proceeds of such sales after deducting all expenditures on account of such lands, and the project construction charge, for the irrigable area of the lands so sold where irrigation or drainage works have been constructed or are proposed to be constructed, shall be disposed of as provided in Subsection I of section 4 of the act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 672). Where the project construction charge shall not have been fixed at the date of any such sale, same shall be estimated by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 5482 will be indefinitely postponed.

LAND ADJACENT TO INDIANA HARBOR SHIP CANAL

The bill (H. R. 16169) to authorize the Secretary of War to accept title to a certain tract of land adjacent to the Indiana Harbor Ship Canal at East Chicago, Ind., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, on behalf of the United States, is authorized and directed to accept from the East Chicago Co. title, free and clear of all encumbrances and without cost to the United States, to a tract of land adjacent to the Indiana Harbor Ship Canal at East Chicago, Ind., and described as follows:

Part of the southeast quarter section 20, township 37 north, range 9 west of the second principal meridian, in the city of East Chicago, Lake County, Ind., described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point of intersection of a line parallel to and 100 feet west of the east line with a line parallel to and 100 feet south of the north line of said southeast quarter section 20; thence west on last-described line 450 feet; thence southeasterly on a straight line 644 feet to a point in a line parallel to and 100 feet west of the east line of the southeast quarter section 20 aforesaid; and thence north on last-described line 450 feet to the point of beginning, containing 2.3237 acres.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS X. CALLAHAN

The bill (S. 4824) for the relief of Francis X. Callahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a House bill, being Calendar No. 2048, House bill 15220, which is identical with the Senate bill. I ask that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill and may be considered at this time. It passed the House unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice from the report that the Secretary of War says:

I can find no justification for the passage of S. 4824 and accordingly recommend that it be not favorably considered by your committee and be not enacted into law.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WAGNER. I give way to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah——

Mr. KING. I merely read a statement from the report.

Mr. McMASTER. Let me say that the bill was rewritten in the House to conform with the views of the War Department, and the War Department offers no objection to the House bill as it appears upon the calendar at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to substituting the House bill for the Senate bill and to considering the House bill at this time?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15220) for the relief of Francis X. Callahan, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any disability incurred in line of duty by Francis X. Callahan while serving as an officer of the Army of the United States during the World War from August 15, 1917, to September 18, 1919, inclusive, shall be deemed and considered to have been so incurred while serving as an officer of the Army of the United States other than as an officer of the Regular Army, so as to entitle said Callahan to the benefits and privileges of the emergency officers' retirement act (Public, No. 506, 70th Cong.): Provided, That such disability rating is sufficient and said Callahan is otherwise eligible for retirement under the terms and conditions of said act: And provided further, That said Callahan shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4824 will be indefinitely postponed.

ANTHONY MULLEN

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9014) for the relief of Anthony Mullen which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 9, after the word "organization" to insert "on June 16, 1899," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Anthony Mullen, who was a member of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on June 16, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOSEPH LEE

The bill (H. R. 4244) for the relief of Joseph Lee was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on line 6, after the word "of" to strike out "Company," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Joseph Lee, serial No. 1425235, who was a member of Headquarters Troop Seventh Army Corps, transferred to Casual Company No. 5246, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 11th day of October, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EVERETT A. DOUGHERTY

The bill (H. R. 14242) for the relief of Everett A. Dougherty was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Everett A. Dougherty, who was a member of the United States Army Hospital Corps, Fort Wayne, Mich., shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 7th day of June, 1902: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS PERDIDO BAY, ALA. AND FLA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5677) to amend section 2 of the act, chapter 254, approved March 2, 1927, entitled "An act authorizing the county of Escambia, Fla., and/or the county of Baldwin, Ala., and/or the State of Florida, and/or the State of Alabama to acquire all the rights and privileges granted to the Perdido Bay Bridge & Ferry Co. by chapter 168, approved June 22, 1916, for the construction of a bridge across Perdido Bay from Lillian, Ala., to Cummings Point, Fla.," which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act, chapter 254, approved March 2, 1927, entitled "An act authorizing the county of Escambia, Fla., and/or the county of Baldwin, Ala., and/or the State of Florida, and/or the State of Alabama to acquire all the rights and privileges granted to the Perdido Bay Bridge & Ferry Co. by chapter 168, approved June 22, 1916, for the construction of a bridge across Perdido Bay from Lillian, Ala., to Cummings Point, Fla.," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. If the rights and privileges granted by said act approved June 22, 1916, shall be acquired by any one or more of the counties or States designated in section 1 of this act, it or they are authorized to transfer and assign all such rights and privileges to either or both of the counties or either or both of the States mentioned in said section 1, or to the highway commissioners or departments or other public agency of either or both of said States, but any bridge constructed or reconstructed under authority of said act of June 22, 1916, shall be maintained and operated in accordance with all the terms, provisions, and conditions of said act.

"SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. JOHNS RIVER BRIDGE, FLORIDA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5740) to legalize a bridge across St. Johns River 2½ miles southeast of Green Cove Springs, Fla., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments in section 1, on page 1, line 3, after the word "bridge," to strike out "now"; in line 4, after the word "miles," to strike out "southeast" and insert "southerly"; in line 5, after the word "Florida," to strike out "by the St. Augustine-Green Cove Springs Bridge Co., if completed in accordance with plans hereafter accepted and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War as providing suitable facilities for navigation, shall be a lawful structure, and shall be subject to the conditions and limitations" and insert "is hereby declared to be a lawful structure, and the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the St. Augustine-Green Cove Springs Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate said bridge in accordance with the provisions"; and on page 2, line 6, after the date "1906," to strike out "other than those requiring the approval of plans by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers before the bridge is commenced," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the bridge constructed across St. Johns River, 2½ miles southerly of Green Cove Springs, Fla., is hereby declared to be a lawful structure, and the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the St. Augustine-Green Cove Springs Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate said bridge in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize a bridge across St. Johns River, 2½ miles southerly of Green Cove Springs, Fla."

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE AT EAST ALBURG, VT.

The bill (S. 5802) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near East Alburg, Vt., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill 17023, Order of Business 2029, is identical with Senate bill 5802 as proposed to be amended. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and will be considered at this time.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17023) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near East Alburg, Vt., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near East Alburg, Vt., authorized to be built by the Gulf Coast Properties (Inc.), by the act of Congress approved May 14, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 14, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 5802 will be indefinitely postponed.

PATUXENT RIVER BRIDGE, MARYLAND

The bill (S. 5336) authorizing Walter J. Mitchell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Patuxent River, between Charles County, Md., and Calvert County, Md., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Calendar No. 2026, being House bill 16170, is identical with the Senate bill. At the request of the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], I ask that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the House bill may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and will be considered at this time.

The Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16170) authorizing Walter J. Mitchell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Patuxent River south of Burch, Calvert County, Md.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection Senate bill 5336 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5785) to establish a board of civil-service appeals and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field service," approved March 4, 1923 (ch. 265, 42 Stat. 1488), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN J. HELMS

The bill (S. 5386) extending benefits of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, to John J. Helms was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in administration of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, John J. Helms, formerly private, Supply Company, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, World War, shall be held to be entitled to the benefits thereof in the same manner and with the same effect as if a separation from the military forces of the United States on October 24, 1918, had been honorable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE J. BRITTON

The bill (S. 4796) for the relief of Jesse J. Britton was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives Jesse J. Britton, who served in Troop H, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on September 22, 1900: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 11422) for the relief of Samuel J. D. Marshall was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An explanation is requested.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ATLANTIC REFINING CO.

The bill (S. 4354) for the relief of Atlantic Refining Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, owner of the American steamship H. C. Folger, against U. S. S. Connecticut was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. One moment, please.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That bill simply allows a claim to be sued for in court.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Atlantic Refining Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, having its principal office and place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, owner of the American steamship H. C. Folger, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision in the Delaware River below the mouth of the Schuylkill River, on April 6, 1921, between said steamship H. C. Folger and the U. S. S. Connecticut, a second-line battleship owned by the United States and operated by the Department of the Navy of the Government of the United States, may be sued for by the said Atlantic Refining Co. in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damage and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said Atlantic Refining Co., or against the said Atlantic Refining Co. in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases between private parties with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months from the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. B. HEINER

The bill (S. 4931) for the relief of D. B. Heiner was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, there is a similar House bill which has been passed and messaged to us, House bill 15421. I move that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he approves of these constant appropriations by the Government to meet the defalcations, irregularities, and perhaps negligence of employees who ought to be bonded, and who perhaps are bonded?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I was somewhat familiar with the facts of that case before I introduced the bill. The collector was not in any way negligent. He had a bond of $10,000 on the employee who made the embezzlement. There never was the slightest indication of the theft until $19,500 had been taken. The volume of payments through that office is perfectly tremendous. It is given in the report, which shows that in the last seven years they have taken in $632,000,000. It is perfectly impossible for the collector himself to see to the handling of every cent of that vast amount, and he had no reason at all to suspect this man. All the investigation that has been made of the case shows that he was entirely blameless.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think provision ought to be made that bonds be given to the Government to protect it, because we are called upon repeatedly to make appropriations aggregating hundreds of thousands of dollars, or, at least, very large sums.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. President; and the bond was given. The man who did the embezzling was under $10,000 bond, and that bond was paid. This was the excess over the bond that the collector himself was forced to pay; and I may say that the only way they ever caught the man who was guilty of this theft was because a suspicion arose on account of the brand of automobile he was driving. That aroused some suspicion, and an investigation led to the discovery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WATERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WATERMAN. Was the subdisbursing officer designated by the Civil Service Commission, or was he appointed by the disbursing officer?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am sorry to say he owes his position to civil service.

Mr. WATERMAN. And yet they hold their positions without any bond over them, and they get away with money, and private bills are put in here to pay and pay, simply because these disbursing officers do not know what kind of men the Government furnishes them?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. This disbursing officer did have a bond, but he had no way of controlling the appointment.

Mr. WATERMAN. I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 15421) for the relief of D. B. Heiner was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to D. B. Heiner, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,500 as reimbursement for loss incurred by him as the collector of internal revenue for the twenty-third district, Pennsylvania, in paying into the Treasury of the United States the amount of the shortage of stamps in his office, caused by the embezzlement of the stamp clerk.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4931 will be indefinitely postponed.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to give notice of a motion to reconsider House bill 17223.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be received and entered.

WILLIAM B. THOMPSON

The bill (S. 5056) for the relief of William B. Thompson was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William B. Thompson, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $562.80 by reason of damages to his property caused by the dumping of spoil dredged from the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal in the lowering of the water level of the said canal at the town of Summit Bridge, New Castle County, in the State of Delaware.

RELOCATION OF MICHIGAN AVENUE

The bill (S. 5843) to provide for the relocation of Michigan Avenue adjacent to the southerly boundary of the United States Soldiers' Home grounds, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to relocate the line of Michigan Avenue from Franklin Street as laid down on the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia to Lincoln Road, bordering the southeast corner of the grounds of the United States Soldiers' Home, and to straighten and shorten the route of said avenue, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to close, vacate, and abandon the portion of Michigan Avenue known and designated as Parcel E on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1429, containing 54,380 square feet, said part so closed, vacated, and abandoned to be transferred by said Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the United States as part of the grounds of the United States Military Asylum, known as the United States Soldiers' Home.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to use for street purposes all that part of the United States Soldiers' Home grounds designated as Parcel A, containing 57,613 square feet, and Parcel B, containing 11,870 square feet, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1429; and the proper authorities having title, control, or jurisdiction are authorized to make the necessary transfer of said parcels of land to the District of Columbia for street purposes.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to close, vacate, and abandon the portion of Michigan Avenue known and designated as Parcel D, containing 69,336 square feet, and Parcel H, containing 7,279 square feet, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1429, title to said parcels so closed, vacated, and abandoned to revert in fee simple to the owner or owners of the parcel numbered on the assessment records of the District of Columbia as parcel 120/1, said closing of said street and the transfer of title thereto to be upon the condition and with the express stipulation that the owner or owners of said parcel 120/1 shall dedicate to the District of Columbia for street purposes all of the parcel known and designated as Parcel F, containing 43,161 square feet, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1429, and shall further, in consideration of the increase in area of the property of said owner or owners of said parcel 120/1 by reason of the transfers as provided herein, dedicate to the District of Columbia about 36,000 square feet of land, the location of which shall be mutually agreed upon by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the owner or owners of parcel 120/1, and that said owner or owners of said parcel 120/1 shall transfer to the United States as part of the grounds of the United States Military Asylum, known as the United States Soldiers' Home, all of the parcel known and designated as Parcel G, containing 1,543 square feet, as shown on said map numbered 1429 in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That the board of commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home, or the proper authorities having title, control, or jurisdiction, shall transfer to the owner or owners of the parcel designated on the assessment and taxation records of the District of Columbia as parcel 120/1 all the land comprised within the parcel known and designated as Parcel C containing 4,517 square feet, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1429.

SEC. 4. That the surveyor of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to prepare the necessary plat or plats showing all parcels of land to be transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act, with a certificate affixed thereon to be signed by the parties in interest making the necessary transfers; which plat and certificate, after being signed by the various interested parties and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall be recorded upon order of said commissioners in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia; and said plat or plats, when duly recorded in said office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, shall constitute a legal transfer of title of the various parcels to the parties in interest according to the provisions contained in this act.

SEC. 5. That the Washington Railway & Electric Co. shall be authorized and required, upon the straightening and shortening of the line of Michigan Avenue as provided herein, to remove the tracks of said company from their present location along Michigan Avenue, from Franklin Street as laid down on the plan of the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia to Lincoln Road, and to relocate said tracks along the center of Michigan Avenue according to the new location of said avenue between said points, as straightened and shortened in accordance with the provisions of this act, and to bring said relocated tracks to approved grade of said avenue as determined by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and to do all necessary work in connection therewith, the costs and expenses of the removal and relaying of tracks and replacing the trolley poles, and all necessary work incident thereto, to be borne by said Washington Railway & Electric Co.; all such work to be performed under the supervision and to the satisfaction and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. That the appropriation contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, for the paving of Michigan Avenue between North Capitol and Monroe Streets NE. is hereby also made available to pay any and all expenses for grading of roadways and for removing and replacing water mains and for any and all work incident thereto, including the reconstruction of the boundary fence in good condition of the United States Soldiers' Home on the boundary line of its grounds as relocated on said plat, the removal of the street pavements and sidewalks from the area transferred to said home and for bringing the surface of said area to grade with loose earth suitable for growing vegetation; any trees required to be cut in making the proposed change to remain the property of the United States Soldiers' Home and to be cut into cord lengths, split, and stacked by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, upon the straightening and shortening of Michigan Avenue as provided by this act, to do any and all acts which may be necessary to give the Washington Railway & Electric Co. such easement or right of way over said Michigan Avenue as is necessary for the proper operation of the railway lines and cars of said company over said avenue as straightened and shortened by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That the charter or act of incorporation of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. is hereby amended so as to provide for the lawful relocation of the tracks of said company as provided herein, said charter or act of incorporation to conform in all respects to the provisions of this act, and any and all provisions in said charter or act of incorporation in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOWARD P. CORNICK

The bill (S. 4356) for the relief of Howard P. Cornick was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is reported adversely.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee about the adverse report, and the reason for the report.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, that was a very peculiar case. The committee gave it careful consideration.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will not the Senator withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The committee has been really negligent in not printing in full the report at all. I find no printed report.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I feel that we ought to apologize to the Senator from California, and that I owe him an explanation of our reasons for reporting adversely on his bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There can not be a calm and dispassionate consideration of this bill without a printed report.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, can we not permit the Senator from California to explain his bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order having been demanded, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I should be very glad if the Senator from California would take the matter over from me and make the explanation himself.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The bill will be passed over.

AUGUST MOHR

The bill (S. 4907) for the relief of August Mohr was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of August Mohr, of Portage, Wis., two United States 4¾ per cent Treasury notes, No. 118443 for $1,000 and No. 16641 for $5,000, Series B–1927, issued May 15, 1923, and matured March 15, 1927, with interest at the rate of 4¾ per cent per annum from September 15, 1926, to March 15, 1927, without presentation of the said notes or the coupons representing interest thereon from September 15, 1926, to March 15, 1927, the said notes having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said notes shall not have been previously presented for payment and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: Provided further, That the said August Mohr shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the notes and the interest payable thereon, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed notes herein described or the coupons belonging thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. C. MOORE & CO.

The bill (S. 119) for the relief of C. C. Moore & Co., engineers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. C. Moore & Co., engineers, San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $567.90, representing the difference between freight and express charges on two evaporators and two coil sets shipped by said company, by express at the request of the commandant, to the Mare Island Navy Yard, under Government contract No. 537, dated May 21, 1917, such sum having been refunded to the United States by said company after payment thereof by the Navy Department was held by the General Accounting Office to have been unauthorized.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE HEITKAMP

The bill (H. R. 5399) for the relief of George Heitkamp was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE BIOLOGICAL STATION, KEY WEST, FLA.

The bill (S. 5860) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of the marine biological station at Key West, Fla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 2, line 15, after the word "degrees," to insert "west," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to dispose of the marine biological station at Key West, Fla., and to reconvey by quitclaim deed to the Key West Realty Co., Florida, the land conveyed to the United States by said company in deed dated June 10, 1915, and particularly described as follows:

In the city of Key West, county of Monroe and State of Florida, beginning at the southwest corner of a sea wall of concrete bearing north 58° 30′ east from a post 101.2 feet distant, said post being on the north side of the county road and at the eastern end of same, East Martello Tower bearing south 11° 30′ west, distant 5,350 feet; thence running north 23° west 465 feet to an iron bolt bearing south 63° 30′ east from a post and pile of stones 156 feet distant; thence running north 67° east 527.5 feet to an iron blot at mean high-water line; thence running southerly along said mean high-water line 640 feet to an iron bolt driven into rock; thence running south 67° west 121 feet in line with said sea wall to the place of beginning, containing 4 acres, more or less, together with riparian rights, all courses and bearings herein being magnetic.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES N. NEAL

The bill (S. 5679) for the relief of Charles N. Neal was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see no reason for a special bill in this case. We have an omnibus retirement bill. I can not understand the necessity for a special bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I beg the Senator to let me make an explanation of that bill.

This officer was hurt and became tubercular while he was in the Army as a temporary second lieutenant, which was a regular appointment. He resigned from the Army. That lost him any possible retirement privileges as a regular. He does not get any privileges under the Tyson-Fitzgerald Act because he was a regular and not an emergency officer; and so he stands to-day admittedly tubercular and incapable of self-support, without the retirement privileges of the regular and without the retirement privileges of the emergency officer.

In two or three other cases which were exactly the same, we have given him the same privilege that we have given other emergency officers. He must prove his case just the same, and he is treated like all other civilian officers.

Mr. KING. I assumed he would come under the Tyson bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He can not, because he had a commission in the Regular Army.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask that we return to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5679) for the relief of Charles N. Neal.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert the following:

That any disability incurred in line of duty by Charles N. Neal while serving as an officer of the Army of the United States during the World War from March 26, 1917, to December 11, 1918, inclusive, shall be deemed and considered to have been so incurred while serving as an officer of the Army of the United States other than as an officer of the Regular Army, so as to entitle said Neal to the benefits and privileges of the emergency officers' retirement act (Public, No. 506, 70th Cong.): Provided, That such disability rating is sufficient and said Neal is otherwise eligible for retirement under the terms and conditions of said act: And provided further, That said Neal shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CODE OF LAWS

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 368) providing more economical and improved methods for the publication and distribution of the Code of Laws of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and supplements, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, since this joint resolution was recommended for amendment by the Committee on the Judiciary another measure has come to us from the House, House Joint Resolution 399, dealing with the same subject. I have a letter from Mr. FITZGERALD, of the House, whose diligence and attention to this particular subject is in every respect to be commended, asking for the substitution of the House joint resolution for the one on the calendar which has just been reached.

This provides for the compilation of supplements to the United States Code, for the printing and publication of the same, and also for a compilation of the same character of the laws applicable to the District of Columbia.

It likewise is an economy measure. These are great, large volumes and should not be printed in the numbers provided by the rules of both Houses for bills ordinarily. This restricts the number of copies that ought to be printed, and otherwise is a measure of economy. It has had the consideration of the Judiciary Committee, and I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 399 and that it be substituted for House Joint Resolution 368 and considered, and that House Joint Resolution 368 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from its further consideration and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 399) providing more economical and improved methods for the publication and distribution of the Code of Laws of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and supplements.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate Joint Resolution 368 will be indefinitely postponed.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 5870) to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FRANK L. MERRIFIELD

The bill (H. R. 4215) for the relief of Frank L. Merrifield was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES J. DOWER

The bill (H. R. 8598) for the relief of James J. Dower was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAYNES SLOUGH DRAINAGE DISTRICT, OREGON

The bill (S. 5365) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon and the Haynes Slough drainage district to construct, maintain, and operate a dam and dike to prevent the flow of tidal waters into Haynes Slough, Coos Bay, Coos County, Oreg., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 2, line 3, to strike out "Secretary of War" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Chief of Engineers"; on line 4, to strike out the words "Chief of Engineers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is granted to the State of Oregon, acting through its highway department, and to the Haynes Slough drainage district, organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a dam and dike for preventing the flow of tidal waters into Haynes Slough, Coos Bay, Coos County, Oreg. Work shall not be commenced on such dam and dike until the plans therefor, including plans for all accessory works, are submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, who may impose such conditions and stipulations as they deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2. The authority granted by this act shall terminate if the actual construction of the dam and dike hereby authorized is not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. E. JONES

The bill (H. R. 16867) for the relief of H. E. Jones, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $38.43 to H. E. Jones, to cover the cost of power used to operate a canceling machine in the Bristol post office from February 15, 1921, to April 30, 1923.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 5887, for the relief of H. E. Jones, will be indefinitely postponed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2901. An act to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented;

S. 5706. An act authorizing Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Morristown, N. Y.;

S. 5746. An act to legalize the sewer outlet in the Allegheny River at Thirty-second Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.;

S. 5880. An act to provide for the preservation and consolidation of certain timber stands along the western boundary of the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes; and

S. 5847. An act authorizing Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H. R. 7244. An act for the relief of Mary Martin Harrison;

H. R. 13593. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village of East Dundee and West Dundee, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a foot bridge across the Fox River between East Dundee and West Dundee, Ill.; and

H. R. 16701. An act to provide for the payment of rental to the board of commissioners of the port of New Orleans of the property known as the New Orleans Army Supply Base, New Orleans, La.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H. R. 6496. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of New Mexico and

Oklahoma with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Cimarron River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested;

H. R. 6497. H. R. 7025. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado, Oklahoma, and Kansas with respect to the division and apportionment of the waters of the Arkansas River and all other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

The message also announced that the House had adopted the following concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 60, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint three Senators and the Speaker of the House to appoint three Members of the House of Representatives to cooperate with the New Bern Historical Society and a committee of the North Carolina Legislature in the observance of certain historical events which occurred during the colonial and Revolutionary period at New Bern, N. C.

NEW BERN (N. C.) CELEBRATION

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there has just been passed by the House of Representatives a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 60), for the appointment of three Senators and three Members of the House to cooperate with the committee appointed by the Legislature of North Carolina to celebrate certain historical events occurring in the town in which I live. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution, which was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint three Senators and the Speaker of the House to appoint three Members of the House of Representatives to cooperate with the New Bern Historical Society and a committee of the North Carolina Legislature in the observance of certain historical events which occurred during the colonial and Revolutionary period at New Bern, N. C.

NORMAN O. ROSS

The bill (S. 4661) to place Norman O. Ross on the retired list of the Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the initial "O," and to insert the initial "A," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Norman A. Ross, formerly a lieutenant (junior grade), Medical Corps, United States Navy, a lieutenant (junior grade), Medical Corps, United States Navy, and to retire him and place him on the retired list of the Navy as a lieutenant (junior grade), with the retired pay and allowances of that grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to place Norman A. Ross on the retired list of the Navy."

HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS IN FLORIDA

The bill (S. 5202) to provide for the establishment of a branch home of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in the State of Florida, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is authorized and directed to select a tract of land approximating 300 acres now owned by the Federal Government located in the State of Florida or to acquire land by donation and without expense as a site for a branch home of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to be located in Florida. The land selected or acquired shall be transferred to the jurisdiction of the board of managers of said home, together with all books, maps, records, and other documents necessary for use, administration, and control of such land.

SEC. 2. The Board of Managers of the national home is authorized and directed to provide for the improvement of the land so selected or acquired and for the construction, equipment, operation, and maintenance thereon of suitable buildings for the use of a branch home.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $3,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF FEDERAL PENAL SYSTEM

The bill (S. 3572) authorizing an appropriation for the purpose of defraying expenses incident to the making of a comprehensive survey covering the requirements of a Federal penal system was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the word "next"; on page 1, line 4, after the word "session," to insert the words "beginning on December 2, 1929," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States shall submit to Congress at the commencement of the session beginning on December 2, 1929, a report with recommendations covering the establishment of an adequate Federal penal system.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General is authorized to employ by contract or otherwise, and without reference to the classification act of 1923 or to civil-service rules, such expert assistance as he may deem necessary in the preparation of this report, at rates of compensation to be fixed by the Attorney General.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated an amount of not exceeding $30,000, to be available for the payment of personnel, travel, and other expenses incident to the formulation of the report herein mentioned.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA

The bill (H. R. 10431) to amend the act establishing the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 101 of the Judicial Code, as amended, be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 101. The State of Oklahoma is divided into three judicial districts, to be known as the northern, the eastern, and the western districts of Oklahoma. The territory embraced on January 1, 1925, in the counties of Craig, Creek, Delaware, Mayes, Nowata, Osage, Ottawa, Pawnee, Rogers, Tulsa, and Washington, as they existed on said date, shall constitute the northern district of Oklahoma. Terms of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Oklahoma shall be held at Tulsa on the first Monday in January, at Vinita on the first Monday in March, at Pawhuska on the first Monday in May, at Miami on the first Monday in November, and at Bartlesville on the first Monday in June of each year: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Pawhuska, Miami, and Bartlesville are furnished free of expense to the United States.

"The eastern district of Oklahoma shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of January, 1925, in the counties of Adair, Atoka, Bryan, Cherokee, Choctaw, Coal, Carter, Garvin, Grady, Haskell, Hughes, Johnston, Jefferson, Latimer, Le Flore, Love, McClain, Muskogee, McIntosh, McCurtain, Murray, Marshall, Okfuskee, Okmulgee, Pittsburg, Pushmataha, Pontotoc, Seminole, Stephens, Sequoyah, and Wagoner. Terms of the district court for the eastern district shall be held at Muskogee on the first Monday in January, at Ada on the first Monday in March, at Okmulgee on the first Monday in April, at Hugo on the first Monday in May, at South McAlester on the first Monday in June, at Ardmore on the first Monday in October, at Chickasha on the first Monday in November, at Poteau on the first Monday in December in each year, and annually at Pauls Valley and Durant at such times as may be fixed by the judge of the eastern district: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding said court at Hugo, Poteau, Ada, Okmulgee, Pauls Valley, and Durant are furnished free of expense to the United States.

"The western district of Oklahoma shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of January, 1925, in the counties of Alfalfa, Beaver, Beckham, Blaine, Caddo, Canadian, Cimarron, Cleveland, Comanche, Cotton, Custer, Dewey, Ellis, Garfield, Grant, Greer, Harmon, Harper, Jackson, Kay, Kingfisher, Kiowa, Lincoln, Logan, Major, Noble, Oklahoma, Payne, Pottawatomie, Roger Mills, Texas, Tillman, Washita, Woods, and Woodward. The terms of the district court for the western district shall be held at Oklahoma City on the first Monday in January, at Enid on the first Monday of March, at Guthrie on the first Monday of May, at Mangum on the first Monday of September, at Lawton on the first Monday of October, and at Woodward on the first Monday of November: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Mangum are furnished free of expense to the United States: And provided further, That the district judge of said district, or in his absence a district judge or a circuit judge assigned to hold court in said district, may postpone or adjourn to a day certain any of said terms by order made in chambers at any other place designated as aforesaid for holding court in said district.

"The clerk of the district court for the northern district shall keep his office at Tulsa; the clerk of the district court for the eastern district shall keep his office at Muskogee and shall maintain an office in charge of a deputy at Ardmore; the clerk for the western district shall keep his office at Oklahoma City and shall maintain an office in charge of a deputy at Guthrie."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 101 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

J. H. B. WILDER

The bill (S. 5715) for the relief of J. H. B. Wilder was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. GEORGE subsequently said: Mr. President, was Order of Business 1494 objected to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] the bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. I submitted an objection to it. I will withhold it, if the Senator desires to speak upon the bill. It indicates upon its face that it is a matter of interest, and the Government is not in the habit of paying interest. If it is not interest, but represents a difference in the cost of materials from those anticipated when the contract was let, then, under acts heretofore passed, relief should have been obtained.

Mr. GEORGE. It is not for interest, I will say to the Senator, and I understand the facts.

Mr. KING. We will reach the bill on the calendar again, and we can talk it over in the meantime.

Mr. GEORGE. It covers increased cost due to the coming on of the war. This contractor, like so many others, did not make his contract within the prescribed time, that is, within the definitely fixed time, but other relief bills of a similar character have been passed. The bill was introduced by my colleague. I have an impression that the House has passed a similar measure.

Mr. KING. I suggest that it be passed over now.

Mr. GEORGE. I would like to have it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that.

CHARLES W. TOWNSEND

The bill (S. 3691) to correct the military record of Charles W. Townsend, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles W. Townsend, late of Company F, First Battalion, Fifteenth Regiment of Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 1st day of February, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Charles W. Townsend."

MATTHIAS R. MUNSON

The bill (H. R. 14897) for the relief of Matthias R. Munson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LIBRARY, LOS ANGELES

The bill (S. 3815) directing the copies of certain patent specifications and drawings be supplied to the public library of the city of Los Angeles at the regular annual rate was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, House bill 14663, identical with the Senate bill, has been messaged to the Senate. I move that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the House bill is not at present at the desk. The Chair will ask the Senator from California to allow this matter to be passed over until the bill is received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER subsequently said: The Chair will state to the Senator from California that the Chair now has House bill 14663, and, without objection, the Committee on Patents will be discharged from further consideration of the bill, the House bill substituted for the Senate bill, and it will be placed on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14663) directing that copies of certain patent specifications and drawings be supplied to the public library of the city of Los Angeles at the regular annual rate, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Commissioner of Patents is authorized and directed to supply to the public library of the city of Los Angeles, at the regular rate of $50 per annum prescribed by law for public libraries of the United States, uncertified printed copies of patent specifications and drawings published during the years 1915 to 1925, inclusive: Provided, That the public library of the city of Los Angeles shall pay to the Commissioner of Patents the sum of $2,500, which sum shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 6, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 512; U. S. C. title 35, sec. 79).

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for clerical services, stationery, and supplies for carrying into effect this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, $2,500, to be expended by the Commissioner of Patents.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. 3815) directing that certain copies of certain patent specifications and drawings be supplied to the public library of the city of Los Angeles at the regular annual rate, will be indefinitely postponed.

MRS. MOORE L. HENRY

The bill (H. R. 7976) for the relief of Mrs. Moore L. Henry was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT C. OSBORNE

The bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Robert C. Osborne was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. H. E. MINER AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 4308) for the relief of Maj. H. E. Miner, Capt. A. J. Touart, Capt. J. L. Hayden, Capt. H. H. Pohl, First Lieut. C. C. Jadwin, and First Lieut. F. B. Kane, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Maj. H. E. Miner, $2,322.40; Capt. A. J. Touart, $672; Capt. J. L. Hayden, $6,819.90; Capt. H. H. Pohl, $7,524.62; First Lieut. C. C. Jadwin, $3,566.72; and First Lieut. F. B. Kane, $3,601.90, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as reimbursement for loss by fire of personal property stored at West Point, N. Y., on August 11, 1927.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to make an inquiry concerning this bill. I remember the subject has been under consideration heretofore as to the liability of the Government for property owned by officers which was lost, either upon ships or in warehouses or storage warehouses under the control of the Government. There has been a view that there ought to be a limitation of the amount for which the Government should be liable, if there was any liability at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, these officers were detailed to West Point, and there was not sufficient housing for them. As I now remember, it was about 44 days from the time they reported before they could get their quarters assigned. While they were waiting for their quarters to be assigned, their household effects were stored in a Government-owned building, which burned up, and all their effects burned up with it. Some of them had insurance, which they were privileged to take out under an Army order of some kind. That has all been subtracted from the amount allowed, together with a sum for depreciation. It was the committee's impression that the officers presented a meritorious case. They put their goods where they had to put them. They were detailed to that place, and there was nothing else for them to do.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator, and I ask for information, if he regards a measure as sound policy that would hold the Government liable for all the property which officers may carry with them to various places where they are assigned.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I do not think so, as a general rule; but officers are compelled to go where they are sent. They furnish their own homes. Their assignments usually cover four years, so they are compelled to take what they have with them. These officers were compelled to report, there was no other place for them to put their effects until they were assigned quarters; they put them where they were directed to put them, and they were destroyed.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that the Government, furnishing them with those housing facilities, should be relieved from any liability for burglaries, or fire risks, and that the owners of the property should, if they desire insurance, protect themselves?

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the officers protected themselves as far as they could. That is my impression. In a case like this, where the officer has no choice, where he is sent on an assignment, is directed to put his effects in a certain place, and does it, and without fault of his they are destroyed, I think he should be paid for them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I do not object, but this is a very dangerous precedent. It simply means that the Government of the United States shall become an insurer for all the property of all its employees, officers, and what not, no matter what the value of the property may be. Suppose these officers had property worth twenty or thirty or forty thousand dollars each, bric a brac, and other valuable personal property. Is the Government to be responsible? It seems to me it is a very dangerous precedent. I will not object, but I shall feel constrained to vote against it. I think the precedent is wrong. I believe it will involve the Government in the payment of hundreds of thousands of dollars damages, and the result will be that the owners of personal property will not take out insurance or protect themselves as they otherwise would, feeling that if their property is in a Government house, the Government assumes the risk. It is a very dangerous precedent. I hope the bill will be rejected, but I shall not object to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. B. TRAXLER

The bill (S. 4336) for the relief of D. B. Traxler, president of the Realty Corporation of Greenville, S. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$982.70," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $982.70 to D. B. Traxler, president of the Realty Corporation of Greenville, Greenville, S. C., for damages sustained by reason of the failure of the War Department to remove certain obstructions on land leased the War Department near Greenville, S. C., for war purposes, by the said D. B. Traxler, president of the Realty Corporation of Greenville.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not think any more worthy bill than this has ever been before the Senate. This man, D. B. Traxler, a boyhood companion of mine, owned land within certain areas leased to the Government for Camp Sevier. The contract provided that when the Government vacated it was to restore the property to the condition in which it was when received. I hope the bill may be passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK O. GOLDSMITH

The bill (H. R. 4440) for the relief of Frederick O. Goldsmith, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $1,150.95 to Lieut. Frederick O. Goldsmith, of Belmont, Mass., on account of expenses incurred by him for civilian medical treatment while sick with typhoid fever in 1923, at which time he was attached to the U. S. S. Ramapo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. M. GILLETT AND J. J. SWENARTON

The bill (H. R. 7330) for the relief of E. M. Gillett and J. H. Swenarton was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of E. M. Gillett in the sum of $631.82, and the claim of J. H. Swenarton in the sum of $631.82, in connection with the inspection of tea for the Navy during the fiscal year 1926, and to pay the amounts allowed from the appropriation "Provisions, Navy, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, 1926."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

T. P. BYRAM

The bill (H. R. 10508) for the relief of T. B. Byram was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office be authorized and directed to pay to T. P. Byram, lieutenant (retired), Supply Corps, United States Navy, the sum of $199.57, pay and allowances due him for active duty performed by him during the period from August 6 to August 26, 1921, inclusive, prior to the approval of his bond by the Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. L. INABNIT

The bill (S. 3340) for the relief of W. L. Inabnit was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the same as Calendar 2010, the bill (H. R. 9530) for the relief of W. L. Inabnit.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9530) for the relief of W. L. Inabnit, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon its compensation roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the compensation laws of employees of the United States, the name of W. L. Inabnit, former employee of the United States, and pay him compensation at the rate of $66.67 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. 3340) for the relief of W. L. Inabnit will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there are a great number of bridge bills on the calendar next following, and I do not see why we may not pass them en bloc.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall have to object to one of the bills. With that one exception, I have no objection to the suggestion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the leader on this side of the aisle, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], has objected to that policy and I think it is wise. Therefore I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bills will be called in their order.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, NEW MARTINSVILLE, W. VA.

The bill (H. R. 15570) authorizing S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near New Martinsville, W. Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near New Martinsville, Wetzel County, W. Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of West Virginia, the State of Ohio, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of five years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been so provided such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Departments of the States of West Virginia and Ohio a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of either of such highway departments shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of the records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive, for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000 shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the States in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway departments of the States in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 15715) authorizing Eugene Rheinfrank, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Maumee River at or near its mouth was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

MAUDE A. SANGER

The bill (H. R. 4029) for the relief of Maude A. Sanger, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized and directed to pay to Maude A. Sanger, the mother of Paul E. Sanger, all such installments of money which she would be entitled to receive if the said Paul E. Sanger, who died on April 4, 1917, from injuries suffered in the military service of the United States, had made a valid application for war-risk insurance in the sum of $5,000 under the war risk insurance act, as amended, had named the said Maude A. Sanger as his beneficiary, and had died while such insurance was in effect. The first of such installments shall be paid within 90 days from the date of the enactment of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED L. DIEBOLT, SR., AND ALFRED L. DIEBOLT, JR.

The bill (H. R. 12475) for the relief of Alfred L. Diebolt, sr., and Alfred L. Diebolt, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the word "child" and the semicolon and insert the word "child," and in the same line to strike out the words "the additional sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated"; and on page 1, line 10, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred L. Diebolt, sr., the sum of $10,000 in full settlement for the death of his wife and child and for personal injuries and hospital expenses of Alfred L. Diebolt, sr., and his family; and a further sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated to be paid to the legal guardian of Alfred L. Diebolt, jr., for the loss of an eye by said Alfred L. Diebolt, jr., and for pain, suffering, and disfigurement as a result of a collision between the automobile operated by Alfred L. Diebolt, sr., and an Army truck on the Plattsburg Highway near Chazy, N. Y., September 17, 1927: Provided, That no part of the amount of any item appropriated in this act in excess of $200 thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which exceeds $200 of the amount of any item appropriated in this act on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I must object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, of all the bills on the calendar I think if the Senator had time to examine the report he would feel most inclined to let it pass.

Mr. KING. Let me state to the Senator my objection. In most of the bills which we have passed we have provided for $3,000 to $5,000 for the death of persons. I find here $10,000 provided. I wonder what is the reason for that?

Mr. CARAWAY. A professor, his wife and two boys were driving along the highway, and soldiers, under conditions which I shall not discuss, stopped a truck on the road and he was injured.

Mr. KING. We may abbreviate the matter. Does the bill provide $10,000 for each person injured?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no. It gives $10,000 to a little boy 4 or 5 years old who had the side of his face caved in and other injuries.

Mr. KING. I understood the bill called for a payment of $10,000 for a death. My objection was that it would be doing something contrary to our previous practice, which was to provide $5,000. I have no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

UTE INDIANS IN UTAH, COLORADO, AND NEW MEXICO

The bill (H. R. 16985) authorizing the Uintah, Uncompahgre, and the White River Bands of Ute Indians in Utah and Colorado and the Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico to sue in the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senate passed a bill sometime ago that went to the House, and the House insisted upon certain amendments. Thereupon a bill was offered in the Senate incorporating the amendments as a new bill. The House passed the bill, which is the same as the one now before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House bill is now on the calendar.

Mr. KING. I ask that the House bill be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party as in other cases, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of the acts of Congress of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. 263), and March 3, 1905 (33 Stat. 1069), or arising under or growing out of any subsequent act of Congress or Executive order or arising under any treaty or agreement which said Uintah, Uncompahgre, and White River Bands of Ute Indians in Utah and Colorado may have against the United States, and arising under or growing out of the act of February 20, 1895 (28 Stat. 677), and subsequent acts of Congress and proclamations of the President relating thereto, setting apart as a separate reservation for the Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico a tract of approximately 1,056,000 acres of land, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States. Said court shall determine the value of all lands which have been set apart and reserved from the ceded Ute Indian lands as forest reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President as if disposed of under the public land laws of the United States: Provided, That the value of coal-bearing lands shall not be fixed at a sum in excess of $15 per acre. The court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the several as well as the joint rights of the parties plaintiff and render judgment accordingly.

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within two years from the approval of this act; and such suit or suits shall make the Uintah, Uncompahgre, and White River Bands of the Ute Indians parties plaintiff and the United States party defendant. A separate petition shall be filed on behalf of the Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico, which petition shall make said Indians parties plaintiff and the United States party defendant: Provided, That the Uintah, Uncompahgre, and White River Bands of the Ute Indians may be joined should this be necessary to adjudicate any rights which they may have in the matter sought to be litigated. The petition or petitions shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with said Indians approved in accordance with existing law and shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based. A copy of the petition or petitions in such suit or suits shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be desginated by him as heretofore directed, shall appear and defend the interests of the United States.

SEC. 3. In said suit or suits the court shall hear, examine, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Uintah, Uncompahgre, and White River Bands of the Ute Indians and the Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians, but any payment, including gratuities, which the United States may have made to said Indians, shall not operate as an estoppel but may be pleaded as an offset in such suit.

SEC. 4. If it be determined by the court that the United States, in violation of the terms and provisions of any law, treaty, Executive order, or agreement as provided in section 1 hereof, has unlawfully appropriated or disposed of any property belonging to said Indians, the damage therefor shall be confined to the value of such property at the time of such appropriation or the disposal thereof except as otherwise provided in section 1 of this act; and with reference to all claims which may be the subject matter of the suit or suits herein authorized, the decree of the court shall be in full settlement of all damages, if any, committed by the Government of the United States and shall annul and cancel all claim, right, and title of said Indians in and to such property.

SEC. 5. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper order and process to bring in and make party to such suit or suits any other tribe or band of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy. Said court shall determine and render separate judgment for any amount found due to the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians under the terms of the jurisdictional act approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. 788).

SEC. 6. Upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, based upon actual services rendered, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in preparation and prosecution of the suit or suits, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said tribes or bands of Indians, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sums or sums found to be due said tribes or bands: Provided, That said court shall enter a separate judgment under the provisions and limitations above set out for the attorney or attorneys representing the Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico, based upon the amount of recovery for said Indians, which recovery shall also be entered as a separate judgment: Provided further, That if the Court of Claims shall find that any attorney or attorneys rendered any services to the Uintah, Uncompahgre, and White River Bands of Ute Indians under a contract executed September 24, 1921, by said Indians, which contract was not approved as provided by section 2103 of the Revised Statutes prior to December 20, 1927, the court shall fix such compensation on the quantum meruit basis as to it shall seem reasonable, to be paid out of any sum found to be due such tribes. The total sum of attorneys' fees in no event shall exceed the limitation herein provided.

SEC. 7. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, recovered for said Indians, less attorneys' fees and expenses, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians decreed by said court to be entitled thereto and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date of the judgment or decree.

Such proceeds shall be thereafter subject to appropriations by Congress for educational, health, and industrial and other purposes for the benefit of the said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per capita payments to said Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Calendar No. 1770, Senate bill 5752 of the same title, will be indefinitely postponed.

SEWER OUTLET IN THE ALLEGHENY RIVER, PITTSBURGH, PA.

The bill (H. R. 16988) to legalize the sewer outlet in the Allegheny River at Thirty-second Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sewer outlet constructed in the Allegheny River at Thirty-second Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., by the city of Pittsburgh, be, and the same is hereby, legalized to the same extent and with like effect as to all existing or future laws and regulations of the United States as if the permit required by the existing laws of the United States in such cases made and provided had been regularly obtained prior to the construction of said sewer outlet.

SEC. 2. That any changes in said sewer outlet which the Secretary of War may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation shall be promptly made by the owner thereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGISTRATION OF NURSES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 15387) to amend the act of February 9, 1907, entitled "An act to define the term 'registered nurse' and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia" was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after June 30, 1929, the act of February 9, 1907, entitled "An act to define the term 'registered nurse' and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia," be amended to read as follows:

"That from and after the 30th day of June, 1929, no person shall in the District of Columbia in any manner whatsoever represent herself to be a registered, certified, graduate, or trained nurse, or allow herself to be so represented, unless she has been and is registered or is registered by the nurses' examining board in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. The nurses' examining board shall be composed of five members appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Those persons who are members of the nurses' examining board on June 30, 1929, shall continue to be members of the said board for the remainder of the terms for which they were appointed. The term of each member of said board shall be five years. All appointments shall be made so that the term of one member expires on the 30th day of June of each year. Each vacancy or unexpired term shall be filled by appointment from a list of five nominees submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by the Graduate Nurses' Association of the District of Columbia. Each nominee shall have had not less than five years' experience in the profession of nursing, be a registered nurse registered in the District of Columbia, and a member of the Graduate Nurses' Association of the District of Columbia. The Graduate Nurses' Association of the District of Columbia shall make such nominations to the said commissioners. No member of said board shall enter upon the discharge of her duties until she has taken oath faithfully and impartially to perform the same; and the said commissioners may remove any member of said board for neglect of duty or for any just cause.

"SEC. 3. The nurses' examining board shall meet in the District of Columbia between June 30, 1929, and July 15, 1929, and organize the board in accordance with the provisions of this act, and annually thereafter shall meet in the month of April for the annual organization of the board. At each such organization meeting the board shall elect from its members a president and a vice president, and it shall also appoint an executive secretary of the board, who shall not be a member of the board, but who shall possess the requirements necessary for membership in the board. The secretary-treasurer of the said board who is acting in that capacity on July 1, 1929, for the unexpired term commencing in April, 1929, shall cease to hold office as secretary-treasurer of the board on and after July 1, 1929. The executive secretary shall ex officio act as treasurer of the board and as such shall furnish a bond in the penal sum which shall be fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said board shall adopt such by-laws as it shall deem necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act and may amend such by-laws from time to time at the discretion of said board. The executive secretary shall be required to keep a record of all meetings of the board and also a register of all nurses duly registered or reregistered under this act, and to furnish a certificate of registration or of reregistration to all such nurses; also to maintain a registry of nurses' training schools in the District of Columbia approved by said board. The board shall hold examinations not less frequently than once a year, and notice of each examination shall be given in one daily newspaper published in Washington and in one nursing journal at least 30 days prior to the examination. The executive secretary shall inspect all recognized schools of nursing in the District of Columbia, and report to said board as to the sufficiency and quality of training afforded by such schools. The executive secretary may be removed by a majority vote of the said board for neglected duty or any just cause.

"SEC. 4. That every nurse desiring to register in the District of Columbia shall make application to the nurses' examining board for examination and registration, and at the time of making such application shall pay to the treasurer of said board $15. Said applicant must furnish satisfactory evidence that she is over 21 years of age, or that she will attain the age of 21 years within six months after the date fixed for the necessary examination to be held by said board after the date of such application. Except as otherwise provided in this act, an applicant shall not be registered unless she has passed an examination by the nurses' examining board. No nurse shall be registered in the District of Columbia who has not attained the age of 21 years. Said applicant must also furnish satisfactory evidence of good moral character, and further that she holds a diploma from a training school for nurses which has been registered by the nurses' examining board of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That no training school shall be registered which does not maintain proper educational standards and give not less than two years' training in a general hospital or in a special hospital with adequate affiliations, all of which shall be determined by the nurses' examining board.

"SEC. 5. That any nurse who is at least 21 years of age and of good moral character and who presents satisfactory evidence that she has, prior to July 1, 1924, graduated from a school of nursing connected with a hospital, and that she has been engaged in nursing in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1929, shall be entitled to registration without examination upon payment of the registration fee of $15: Provided, however, That application for such registration must be made on or before June 30, 1932.

"SEC. 6. That the nurses' examining board shall have power to register in like manner without examination any graduate or trained nurse registered as a nurse by examination in another State or Territory who holds a diploma from a nurses' training school outside of the District of Columbia which, in the opinion of said board, maintains a standard substantially equivalent to that provided for by this act.

"SEC. 7. Each nurse who has been registered in the District of Columbia shall be reregistered each year on the 1st day of July upon application to the executive secretary of said board and the payment of a fee of $1: Provided, That such fee of $1 shall not be payable in case the applicant has been originally registered within the 12 months next preceding the day for reregistration. Application for reregistration may be made within 60 days preceding the day of reregistration. Registration of any nurse who does not thus apply for reregistration for any year shall be automatically canceled as of the beginning of such year. The by-laws adopted by the nurses' examining board shall define the conditions upon which the registration of a nurse may be restored. Schools of nursing in the District of Columbia may apply to said board for registration and, with the exception of schools of nursing maintained at Government expense, shall pay a fee of $25 at the time application is made. Each such school registered shall apply each year for reregistration, and, with the exception of schools of nursing maintained at Government expense, at the same time pay a fee of $1: Provided further, That on the petition of any applicant to whom registration or reregistration has been denied by the nurses' examining board, the action of the board may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on a writ of certiorari, subject to appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, in the same manner as appeals are taken in similar cases.

"SEC. 8. No person shall file or attempt to file with the nurses' examining board of the District of Columbia any statement, diploma, certificate, credential, or other evidence when she knows, or when she might by reasonable diligence ascertain, that it is false and misleading. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a court of equity, may suspend or revoke any certificate issued and any registration effected under this act upon evidence showing to the satisfaction of the court that the registrant has been guilty of misconduct or is professionally incapacitated. Proceedings looking toward the suspension or revocation of a certificate or registration shall be begun by petition filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in the name of the nurses' examining board, or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or of the major and superintendent of police of said District, and shall be verified by oath. Proceedings shall be conducted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia according to the ordinary rules of equity practice and such supplementary rules as said court may deem expedient to carry into effect the purpose and intent of this act. An appeal may be taken from the decision of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to the Court of Appeals of said District. Any such appeal on behalf of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or of the major and superintendent of police of said District may be filed without bond. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may determine whether a certificate or registration shall be suspended or be revoked, and if such certificate or registration is to be suspended said court may determine the duration of such suspension and the conditions under which said suspension shall terminate.

"SEC. 9. That all expenses incident to the execution of the provisions of this act shall be paid from fees collected from schools of nursing and from registration or reregistration of nurses. The executive secretary of said board may receive a salary to be fixed by said board at its annual organization meeting not to exceed the rate of $250 per month. Each member of the board shall receive a per diem allowance at the rate of $10 per day for each full day such member is actually engaged in the performance of duties as a member of the board. The payment of such per diem allowance shall be made from any unexpended balance in the treasury of said board remaining on June 30 of the year during which the services have been rendered, and if the unexpended balance is insufficient to meet the total amount of such per diem allowance, the rate of compensation shall be reduced to a rate which will permit payment from such unexpended balance. That such expenses shall in no event exceed the total of receipts. All registration or reregistration fees shall be paid to the treasurer of the board, and shall be paid out under the orders of the board. That it shall be the duty of the auditor of the District of Columbia to audit the accounts of the nurses' examining board at the end of each fiscal year and to make report thereof in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said auditor shall have free access to all books, papers, and records of the board. The nurses' examining board shall make annual reports to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia containing a statement of moneys received and disbursed and a summary of its official acts during the preceding year.

"SEC. 10. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment in the workhouse for a period not exceeding 60 days.

"SEC. 11. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any person from nursing any other person in the District of Columbia, either gratuitously or for hire: Provided, That such person so nursing shall not represent herself as being a registered, certified, graduate, or trained nurse.

"SEC. 12. That the word 'she' and the derivatives thereof, wherever they occur in this act, shall be construed so as to include the word 'he' and derivatives."

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, on page 4, line 19, in section 4, to strike out "$15" and insert "$10"; on page 5, line 20, in section 5, to strike out "$15" and insert "$10"; and on page 5, line 22, in section 6, to strike out the words "have power to."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT]? The Senator will recall that at the hearings some representatives of nurses' organizations appeared and asked that a certain word be eliminated.

Mr. SACKETT. We have taken out the words "have power to" and required them to have reciprocity absolutely.

Mr. KING. That is not the point to which I refer. I refer to the use of the word "trained."

Mr. SACKETT. That is a necessary part of the bill. We can not get away from it. The bill would not amount to anything if that were not included. A woman who represented an agency asked that it be taken out, but that was the whole point to the bill and that was what the doctors of the District through their representatives brought to the attention of the committee at the second hearing. They are very dependent upon knowing the type of nurses that they use.

Mr. KING. I was not able to attend the second hearing. Let me ask the Senator if this bill as it is now agreed upon would make it an offense for any graduate nurse to pursue her calling here in the District without being registered?

Mr. SACKETT. No, it would not; but it would prevent her from going out and advertising herself as a trained nurse or graduate nurse without being registered. It would not prevent the practice of her profession.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, let the bill go over.

Mr. SACKETT. Oh, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object. It is a very necessary bill.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest that the Senators confer about it while we are passing other bills.

Mr. SACKETT. It will take us only a moment longer, I assure the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. Very well; I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator one more question. Some of the nurses, I think, have been discriminated against. The Senator will recall that one of the nurses who had rendered valuable service, who was a graduate nurse, was refused registration because she had married.

Mr. SACKETT. We could not find any such thing at all.

Mr. KING. There seemed to be some sort of discrimination, and I felt constrained at the hearings to say it looked like a de luxe organization seeking to control the nurses of the District.

Mr. SACKETT. We did not find that to be the case at all.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. This requires the board to accept the registration of nurses who desire to be registered. Those nurses who do not care to go in under registration and to have the advantages of the official employment bureau are not required to do so and nothing interferes with their practice as nurses in the ordinary sense.

Mr. KING. Then other nurses may practice their profession without being subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have some misgivings, but I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 17, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$250" and insert "$200," so as to read:

SEC. 9. That all expenses incident to the execution of the provisions of this act shall be paid from fees collected from schools of nursing and from registration or reregistration of nurses. The executive secretary of said board may receive a salary to be fixed by said board at its annual organization meeting not to exceed the rate of $200 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, WASHINGTON, MO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16641) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Washington, Mo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGES IN NEBRASKA

The bill (S. 5832) authorizing Charles B. Morearty, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Omaha, Nebr., was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5833) authorizing Charles B. Morearty, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr., was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that as to Order of Business 2006, being the bill (S. 5832) authorizing Charles B. Morearty, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Omaha, Nebr., and Order of Business 2007, being the bill (S. 5833) authorizing Charles B. Morearty, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr., which have been passed over, the amendments, which have been reported by the Committee on Commerce, may be agreed to so that if those bills ever shall again come up for consideration the amendments will be taken care of.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New York that I know nothing about these bills.

Mr. COPELAND. Neither do I.

Mr. NORRIS. But, as the Senator knows, my colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] is ill and unable to be present. I, therefore, have been asked on his behalf to object to the consideration of these bills.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say that I am not asking for the passage of the bills. The Committee on Commerce has reported certain amendments to them, and I ask that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills be left on the calendar.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that, but I desire that they shall then go over without any further action by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? Without objection, the amendments reported by the committee to the bills mentioned by him will be considered as having been agreed to, and the bills, as amended, will be returned to their places on the calendar.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16824) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 15218) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS CITY, ARK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5825) extending the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near Arkansas City, Ark., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "from" to strike out "the date of approval hereof" and to insert "March 29, 1929," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Arkansas City, Ark., authorized to be built by Henry Thane, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, by the act of Congress approved March 29, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from March 29, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, ALMA, WIS.

Mr. DALE. I ask that the next bill on the calendar, being the bill (S. 5829) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Alma, Wis., be taken from its place on the calendar under Rule VIII and put under Rule IX.

Mr. KING. Was that bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. DALE. The Senator from Wisconsin understands all about it.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, BETTENDORF, IOWA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5844) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, State of Iowa, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 2, after line 2, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, State of Iowa, authorized to be built by B. F. Peek, G. A. Shallberg, and C. I. Josephson, of Moline, Ill.; J. W.

Bettendorf, A. J. Russell, and J. L. Hecht, of Bettendorf and Davenport, Iowa, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, by the act of Congress approved May 26, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 26, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE CALUMET RIVER BRIDGE, COOK COUNTY, ILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5824) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River at or near Ashland Avenue, in Cook County, State of Illinois, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, at the top of page 2, strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the construction of the bridge authorized by this act shall be commenced within three years and completed within five years from the date of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Little Calumet River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Ashland Avenue in said county and State, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, ARROW ROCK, MO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5834) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Arrow Rock, Mo., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, after line 2, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of the approval hereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the St. Louis-Kansas City Short Line Railroad Co., a corporation of the State of Missouri, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the town of Arrow Rock, in the State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, ST. CHARLES, MO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5835) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near St. Charles, Mo., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 5, after line 2, strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of the approval hereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the St. Louis-Kansas City Short Line Railroad Co., a corporation of the State of Missouri, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point about 4 miles south of west of the city of St. Charles, in the county of St. Charles, Mo., to a point in St. Louis County in said State, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR MIAMI, MO.

The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Kentucky & Ohio Terminal Co., its successors and assigns; and any party to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage or foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such party.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHESLEY P. KEY

The bill (S. 1112) for the relief of Chesley P. Key was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bills now being reached on the calendar have not been placed upon our desks, and therefore we are strangers to them; at least I am. I should like to have the bill read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. KING. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. According to the calendar the report is No. 1989.

Mr. KING. This bill and others are not in my file of bills. It seems to me we might pass these over.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest that they go over temporarily and that we get through with the bridge bills, and then take the other bills up later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 14873) for the relief of Chesley P. Key was read twice by its title.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I move to substitute the House bill just read by title for Senate bill 1112 and that the House bill be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14873) for the relief of Chesley P. Key, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, to Chesley P. Key, of Collinsville, Ill., the sum of $3,500 for injuries of a permanent nature to his spine received when the skylight in the Collinsville post office fell upon him while a patron of said post office on October 27, 1918.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Utah desires an explanation of the bill. I will make a very brief one. This man was injured permanently by a skylight which fell on him while he was in the post-office building where he went to get his mail. The injury resulted in almost total disability.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, but, Mr. President, we are under great disadvantage because these bills are not on our file and we have no knowledge of their provisions. I have, however, no objection to this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1112 will be indefinitely postponed.

LEON FREIDMAN

The bill (H. R. 3044) for the relief of Leon Freidman was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as to these bills we have no reports in our files.

Mr. WATSON. Why do we go on with these bills when there are no reports with them?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is one bill that does have a report which I should like to have considered.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I say a word in reference to the bill the title of which has just been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the interest of good order the Chair will ask Senators desiring to take the floor to address the Chair.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Nebraska to suggest that there was no report with the bill the title of which has just been read. The individual named in the bill entered a plea and was fined under the Lever Act after the Supreme Court held that the law was unconstitutional and void. The Department of Justice asked that the fine be returned to him. There is no contention about the merits of the case.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3044) which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Leon Freidman, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,750, the amount of a fine paid by Leon Freidman in pursuance of a judgment entered upon a plea nolo contendere under certain provisions of the so-called Lever Act previous to the time that the Supreme Court of the United States held such provisions void, the said plea and said payment being made under a stipulation as follows: "In consideration that the Attorney General and this court shall accept the plea nolo contendere which I hereby tender to the above-entitled indictment, I do hereby waive any and all fines which the court may see fit to impose upon me upon such plea, except in the event that the so-called Lever Act under which said indictment is found shall be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States and that no prosecution could be sustained upon the facts stated in said indictment."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. EDWARD BURKE

The bill (H. R. 3047) for the relief of J. Edward Burke was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am going to ask that the bills that have not been placed on our desks and which are not accompanied by reports may go over. We have absolutely no information concerning them. I ask that we discontinue considering such bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not object to bridge bills being passed, does he?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. The next bills on the calendar are bridge bills. Let them be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will address the Chair.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Order of Business No. 2041, being House bill 12189.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, are we not to proceed with the calendar until the call is completed? I object if we are not going to consider the remaining bills on the calendar.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BORAH. I have no desire to interfere with the orderly procedure on the calendar, but I understood that there was going to be an objection raised to the bills now being called by reason of the fact that the reports on the bills are not here. I have a bill accompanying which there is a report. I should like to secure action on the bill, as its prompt passage is urgent.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was going to say to the Senator there is only one bill on the calendar to be considered before we reach the bridge bills, of which there are several.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to Order of Business 2024, being House bill 3047, and the bill wil be passed over.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE AT NEW HARMONY, IND.

The bill (S. 5858) authorizing the New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns (or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns), to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Wabash River at or near New Harmony, Ind., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 1, line 6, after the word "assigns," to strike out "or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns," so as to make the section read:

That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Wabash River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near New Harmony, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, page 2, line 7, after the word "assigns" to strike out "(or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns)"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, page 2, line 21, after the word "assigns," to strike out "(or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns)," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The said New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 12, after the words "expiration of," to strike out "20" and insert "5," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Indiana, the State of Illinois, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of five years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interest in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 4, line 25, after the word "assigns," to strike out "(or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns)," and on page 5, line 17, after the word "assigns," to strike out "(or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns)," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. The New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Departments of the States of Indiana and Illinois, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 6, section 7, line 4, after the word "assigns," to strike out "(or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns)"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns; and any corporation to which, or any person to whom, such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 6, after line 11, to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 8. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000 shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the States in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway departments of the States in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 7, line 4, to change the number of the section from "8" to "9."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the New Harmony Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Wabash River at or near New Harmony, Ind."

COOSA RIVER BRIDGE AT GILBERTS FERRY, ALA.

The bill (H. R. 16432) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the County of Etowah, State of Alabama, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Coosa River at or near Gilberts Ferry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

The bill (H. R. 16719) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chattanooga and the county of Hamilton, Tenn., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at a point suitable to the interest of navigation opposite or near Chattanooga, Hamilton County Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAGINAW & MANISTEE LUMBER CO.

The bill (S. 5716) to authorize the exchange of timber with the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is on the calendar a House bill which is identical with the Senate bill. It is House bill 12198. I ask that it may be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12198) to authorize the exchange of timber with the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co. timber from national forest lands in Arizona, to be cut and removed under such conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, in exchange for timber or seed trees of at least equal value, as determined by the said Secretary, on lands of the United States on which the said company has timber rights under the act of April 1, 1918 (40 Stat. p. 1358).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STOREKEEPER-GAUGERS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16393) to include henceforth, under the designation "storekeeper-gaugers," all positions which have heretofore been designated as those of storekeepers, gaugers, and storekeeper-gaugers; to make storekeeper-gaugers full-time employees, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think perhaps the Senator is familiar with the bill, but I may say that this bill is recommended by the Treasury Department.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I am familiar with the purpose of the bill. There are a large number of persons engaged as gaugers, but their time is not completely occupied.

Mr. GEORGE. They now work on a per diem basis, and they work, perhaps, for only a little while a day.

Mr. KING. And this bill is to increase the compensation for men whose work is diminishing.

Mr. GEORGE. This bill does not increase the money which the Government will have to pay, but it will enable the Government to require their entire time.

Mr. KING. It will mean, of course, that they will get more pay, but they will be used, perhaps, by other departments.

Mr. SACKETT. They will be used in other departments. There are only 260 of them left. We used to have 2,500 or 3,000. It is rather difficult work and requires an expert, and we can not get the right kind of men, on the basis of part-time employment, for the plants where alcohol is denatured and for the concentration warehouses. As I have said, only a comparatively few of these employees are still left there.

Mr. KING. But they are still there.

Mr. SACKETT. They are all under civil service. It is the only corps in the whole Treasury, as I understand, that is still left on a per diem. In all fairness, they ought to be put in the same class as the other people in the department.

Of course, this is important in my State, where formerly we had a great many of these people, and where a few of them are left. So far as I can see, there is no effort here to do anything that is not in the interest of the Government. The bill passed the House unanimously.

Mr. KING. If they would concentrate the deposits of alcohol and liquor, and restrict the number of employees and gaugers, it would be far better for the Government; but there are a number of these employees, and of course it is desired to keep them on the roll, and they have not enough to do, and the theory is that they will be assigned to other labor.

Mr. SACKETT. I think the bill is a good bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Oh, the Government has plenty of money, and I suppose we had better let the bill go through.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I want to suggest, in fairness to the bills themselves, that from here on the Senate should not proceed any further with the calendar. The bills are not in the files. There are no reports. We can not act intelligently on them. Many bills would be put over that otherwise would be passed; and if we start on the calendar again we will start after those bills instead of before them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The reports probably will be available to-morrow.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I should think so.

Mr. NORBECK. There is a good deal to what the Senator says, but there are some exceptions. In some cases we have House bills here that are exactly the same as Senate bills that have been previously passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senate that under the unanimous-consent agreement it was agreed not only that we should go through the calendar but that bills reported to-day, on which there could not possibly be printed reports, should also be considered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in accordance with that suggestion, unless we are taking up some more of these bills on the calendar, I want to ask the Chair to lay before the Senate——

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let us finish the calendar first. When we reach a bill here that can not be satisfactorily explained, of course, any Senator is privileged to have it go over.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

PATUXENT RIVER BRIDGE, CALVERT COUNTY, MD.

The bill (H. R. 16170) authorizing Walter J. Mitchell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Patuxent River south of Burch, Calvert County, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill inadvertently was passed over while the clerk was reading the bills, and, without objection, it will be considered at this time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMANDER FRANCIS JAMES CLEARY, UNITED STATES NAVY

The bill (H. R. 10274) for the relief of Commander Francis James Cleary, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "Navy," to strike out "on the 13th day of January, 1926, as an additional number in grade to perform engineering duty only, with rank as such immediately after Capt. Earl Peck Finney, United States Navy: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to entitle Commander Francis James Cleary, United States Navy, to any back pay, allowance, or other emoluments in this permanent rank," and to insert "on the date of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter Commander Francis James Cleary, United States Navy, an additional number in grade and designated to perform engineering duty only, shall be regarded as having been promoted to the rank of captain in the United States Navy on the date of this act.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the printed bill is not in the calendar, but it has been printed and furnished to the Senate. I have the bill before me, and also the committee's report.

The person here named, Francis James Cleary, was a commander in the United States Navy, and has been in the regular service of the Navy for 29 years. Long ago in his service he lost a leg on account of a disability incurred in line of duty. He was made an extra number in grade and promoted from time to time, first by act of Congress and subsequently by recommendation of the selection board. At the recent consideration of his case, however, he was passed over by the board; and we find, upon consideration of this House bill, a rather unusual circumstance.

Undoubtedly he is entitled to the benefit of section 1494, which provided that he need not be physically fit for sea service in order to be eligible for promotion. The evidence before the subcommittee indicated that inadvertently the benefits of that act had not been extended to him. The report of the House committee states that he had been denied promotion because of his physical defect, and that had such defect been entirely disregarded he would have been assured, by his professional career in the Navy, of selection and promotion. Testimony before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs corroborates this conclusion.

It is merely for the purpose of seeing to it that the benefits of this act are extended to this officer that this bill is thought worth our while at this time.

Unfortunately, a real emergency exists. This man will go out of the service in September next by age unless relief is extended to him at this time.

May I read just another sentence from the committee report to show the attitude of the subcommittee upon this matter? The committee state that they consider that the system of promotion by selection now in effect in the Navy is based upon firm grounds, and believe in supporting the decisions of the selection boards and discouraging private legislation seeking to override such decisions.

The promotion of Commander Cleary by this bill is not considered by the committee as negating the action of the selection boards in any sense, and is recommended only because of the special circumstances of Commander Cleary's physical disqualification by wounds received in line of duty as stated above, and to insure that this disabled officer receive the benefits of section 1494, Revised Statutes.

We felt that this case was especially deserving, and should receive favorable consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that owing to the late hour to which the Senate sat last night, it has been impossible for the pages to distribute the printed copies of the rest of the bills on the calendar; but the printed reports are available here, and any Senator may secure a copy by calling for one at the desk.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5865) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLACK. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN WESLEY CLARK

The bill (H. R. 13869) for the relief of John Wesley Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. JOHN J. POWERS, QUARTERMASTER CORPS

The bill (H. R. 15293) for the relief of Lieut. John J. Powers, Quartermaster Corps, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

The bill (H. R. 13936) to amend the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from South Dakota, what is the amendment?

Mr. NORBECK. The bill as amended will be exactly the same as the Senate bill that passed the Senate some time ago.

The purpose of the bill is to give Porto Rico the advantage of the farm loan act, in order to meet their very distressing conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 12, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act (U. S. Code of Laws, title 12, sec. 672), as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish in each Federal land-bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land-bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico and the Territory of Alaska; and the Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in Porto Rico and a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in the Territory of Alaska. Loans made by each such branch bank shall not exceed the sum of $25,000 to any one borrower and shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act (chap. 7 of title 12, U. S. C.), except that each such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and, subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe, the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal land bank with which such branch bank is connected: Provided, That no loan shall be made in Porto Rico or Alaska by such branch bank for a longer term than 20 years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

J. H. B. WILDER

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, in my absence just now a bill introduced by me was reached; my colleague made a statement about it and it went over without prejudice. It is Senate bill 5715, Order of Business 1949.

This man made a contract with the Government for the erection of a public building at Forsyth, Ga.; the war came on, and he has presented affidavits here, which the committee has read, showing his losses. I will say to the Senator from Utah that no interest is included in the bill. Not only that, but the man lost every dollar he had in the world and he is now an object of charity. He lost it because the Government bid up the prices so against him that the building cost him that much more; and that is all he is asking for.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that we passed a bill, or several bills, immediately after the war under which contractors who had suffered as the Senator has indicated this contractor suffered would have an opportunity to present their claims to the War Department or the Navy Department, as the case might be, and an adjustment would be made. Why did not this contractor present his claim to the Government through the channels that have been provided by the Government?

Mr. HARRIS. His books were burned, his home was burned, and he had no insurance. He lost everything on this contract, and then his home was burned, and that left him without anything; and he lost this amount because the Government bid against him after making this contract. He shows that, and the committee recommended the passage of the bill, and I sincerely hope there will be no objection to it. It is not possible to get the bill through the House at this session, but I should like to have it pass the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to returning to the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I wish to ask the Senator a question.

When Congress provided in a very generous mood—and I thought it was an unwise provision—for every contractor to submit his case to the instrumentalities set up and provided funds to meet the losses that resulted by reason of the change in industrial and other conditions, and persons failed to avail themselves of it and years afterwards come and ask Congress to take up their case in a special way when we had set up, as I say, machinery to determine whether there were losses and ascertain the losses and pay them, does not the Senator think it will be a bad precedent? Others will come who failed to present their claims for one reason or another; and now, years afterwards, when the evidence to ascertain the facts is out of the hands of the Government, we will be called upon to pay millions, or large sums of money, at any rate.

Mr. HARRIS. Ordinarily, I should agree with the Senator; but the man's books were burned when his home was burned, and he could not comply with some provisions of the law. He has statements here, however, from the men from whom he actually bought this material, showing his losses, and showing the difference between the prices at the time the contract was made and those that he had to pay afterwards, because the Government commandeered all this material. The case is an unusual one, and a very deserving one.

Mr. KING. I can only say in reply to the Senator that the man should have presented his claim to the Government, and alleged that his books were burned, and offered secondary evidence; and under the agency set up he could have been compensated.

I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall feel constrained to vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the Senate return to Order of Business 1949, Senate bill 5715, which was passed over without prejudice in the Senator's absence. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5715) for the relief of J. H. B. Wilder, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to J. H. B. Wilder, of Macon, Ga., or his legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not in excess of $7,106.96, would represent the approximate interest cost to said J. H. B. Wilder, based upon changed conditions due to the World War, of completing his contract for the construction of the Federal building at Forsyth, Ga.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF FOR DESERT-LAND ENTRYMEN

The bill (S. 5730) amending the act of March 4, 1915, providing relief for desert-land entrymen was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to any lawful pending desert-land entry made prior to July 1, 1922, under which the entryman or his duly qualified assignee under an assignment made prior to the date of this act has in good faith expended the sum of $3 per acre in the attempt to effect reclamation of the land, that there is no reasonable prospect that he would be able to secure water sufficient to effect reclamation of the irrigable land in his entry or any legal subdivision thereof, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, allow such entryman or assignee 90 days from notice within which to pay to the register of the United States Land Office 50 cents an acre for the land embraced in the entry and to file an election to perfect title to the entry under the provisions of this act, and thereafter within one year from the date of the filing of such election to pay to the register the additional amount of $1.50 an acre, which shall entitle him to a patent for the land: Provided, That in case the final payment be not made within the time prescribed the entry shall be canceled and all money theretofore paid shall be forfeited.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)."

H. L. REDLINGSHAFER

The bill (H. R. 13258) for the relief of H. L. Redlingshafer for payments made in official capacity disallowed by the General Accounting Office was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIE ROSE JEAN BAPTISTE AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 12189) for the relief of Marie Rose Jean Baptiste, Marius Francois, and Regina Lexima, all natives of Haiti, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNUAL PER CAPITA COST IN INDIAN SCHOOLS

The bill (S. 5799) to repeal the provision in the act of April 30, 1908, and other legislation limiting the annual per capita cost in Indian schools, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, Orders of Business 2042 and 2043, Senate bill 5799 and House bill 17079, are identical. I move that the House bill be passed, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KING. Before that is done, I should like to ask the Senator if he regards it as wise legislation to remove the limitation placed upon the per capita charge?

Mr. FRAZIER. By all means. Under the present law the provision is, as I recall, not to exceed $270 per pupil for 200 or less pupils in a school. It is impossible to feed and clothe and care for those children under those circumstances. The present Budget for this year provides for $285. They have raised it about $15 or $20, if the pupils do not exceed 200 in number. The provision for the meals, under the old schedule, is not to exceed 25 cents a day for meals, and in some instances it runs much less than that. The Budget for the coming year will provide about 30 cents a day if this bill goes through.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the limit ought to be raised, no doubt it should be, but I was wondering the Senator thought it wise——

Mr. FRAZIER. I would not object if for a year or two they had a little more than they really needed in some of these schools, because the children have been starved almost to death altogether too long.

Mr. KING. If these bills are passed, then there will be no limit whatever?

Mr. FRAZIER. The limit will be taken off; yes.

Mr. KING. And it will be left entirely to the superintendents or others in charge?

Mr. FRAZIER. It will be in the discretion of the Bureau of the Budget. Now, that we have the Budget system, there is no danger of too much money being spent on the Indian children.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of House bill 17079, to repeal the provision in the act of April 30, 1908, and other legislation limiting the annual per capita cost in Indian schools?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 5799 will be indefinitely postponed.

LEO BYRNE

The bill (H. R. 14850) authorizing and directing the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to pay Leo Byrne at the rate of $100 a month, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri, in view of the fact that we have a compensation act, why this bill does not provide that this man shall have the benefit of the compensation act, without fixing the amount? It seems to me that is discrimination.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, this boy went to a training camp—Camp Knox—was ordered on a tower, and the tower fell and crushed him. He has been in Walter Reed Hospital ever since. He is completely paralyzed. I understand the legislation must take this form in order that he may receive $100 a month. The man can not live very long. His family have done everything they can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHERRY CREEK BRIDGE, SOUTH DAKOTA

The bill (H. R. 16659), to authorize an appropriation to pay half the cost of a bridge across Cherry Creek on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, S. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEYENNE RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION BRIDGE, SOUTH DAKOTA

The bill (H. R. 16660) to authorize an appropriation to pay one-half the cost of a bridge on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation in South Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AIR TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL

The bill (H. R. 16131) to enable the Postmaster General to make contracts for the transportation of mails by air from possessions or Territories of the United States to foreign countries and to the United States and between such possessions or Territories, and to authorize him to make contracts with private individuals and corporations for the conveyance of mails by air in foreign countries, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that appears to be an important bill.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, this bill is before us as a result of one of the reports made by the committees to-day, and so is included in the unanimous-consent agreement. This particular bill, I will say, is the same bill that passed the Senate about two weeks ago, but when it reached the House it was discovered that the words "or Territories" should have been included in several places in the text in order that we might have air-mail connections with the Territory of Alaska and the Territory of Porto Rico. The House in its wisdom, however, instead of making those simple amendments and sending them to the Senate for concurrence, proceeded to pass a bill of their own.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, is Porto Rico a Territory?

Mr. MOSES. It is within the jurisdiction of the present distinguished occupant of the chair [Mr. BINGHAM], the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think it will be found on investigation that it is not a Territory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 16662) to authorize appropriations for buildings, sites, and other facilities for the free Public Library of the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. What is that bill? Is that the one calling for an appropriation of $2,000,000?

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have no desire to impede the passage of proper bills, but I submit in all earnestness that it is not befitting the dignity of the Senate of the United States to pass bills that are not on the calendar, of which copies are not available to Senators, without any reports from the committees, without knowing in many cases from what committee they came, or what Senator reported them. I object to this bill, and I am going to object to all others.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there has been messaged to the Senate a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 377) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a monument or memorial to Oscar S. Straus, which was referred to the Committee on the Library. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution now.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We had better finish the unanimous-consent arrangement. I do not believe many Senators knew that there was unanimous consent to consider these bills in the dark.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I would like to say that it was a part of the unanimous-consent agreement that bills that should be reported to-day might be considered. That was a part of the agreement.

Mr. KING. If we are to consider them, let us have each one read; and if there is a report let us have that read.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have a bill which I think comes under the unanimous-consent agreement. It was a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River in Louisiana. A similar bill, House bill 16928, has passed the House of Representatives, and I want to have the House bill substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, what became of my request for unanimous consent?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I want the House bill substituted for the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Ohio ask unanimous consent?

Mr. FESS. I have made a request for unanimous consent, and I ask the clerk to read the report of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, ample opportunity will be afforded to-morrow to proceed with the consideration of the bills which have not been disposed of to-day. I am not going to object to the request of the Senator from Louisiana, but we have been in session now eight hours, we were in session nearly all night; and this arrangement is a very bad one, as pointed out by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I am going to object to requests hereafter for consideration of bills that had not been made before I rose. I have stated that I would not object to the request of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will not object to my request, will he?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I would like to have the unanimous-consent agreement read, to see if it is being carried out in good faith. I consented to the unanimous-consent request——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SWANSON. These bills have to be considered. I want to know whether this unanimous-consent agreement is being carried out in good faith or not.

Mr. KING. When the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into we supposed we would have the bills and reports before us. No one supposed we would proceed in the dark. I shall move to adjourn in a few moments if this is insisted on.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I inquire how many reports there are to be passed upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed there are 30 or 40.

Mr. SWANSON. Let us have the unanimous-consent agreement read, and see what we agreed to. We will all carry out what we agreed to. I have never known a unanimous-consent agreement to be broken in the Senate in the years I have been here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. When any bill is called, any Senator may demand that it be passed over.

Mr. SWANSON. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is no violation of the agreement. I give notice that I will object to the consideration of all bills, the reports on which are not available, with the understanding that they can easily be considered to-morrow. If the Senate wants to go ahead and have a number of bills called, it is at liberty to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be read.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no occasion for reading it.

Mr. SWANSON. Let us see whether Senators are carrying it out in good faith when they say "I will object."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The agreement was to consider unobjected bills.

Mr. SWANSON. I insist on it being read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, no. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I make a point of order——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to continue the power and authority of the Federal Radio Commission. I do that with the understanding that immediately after the adoption of the motion, if it shall be adopted, we shall proceed to the consideration of executive business, to consider unobjected nominations.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have a conference report here that I want to have taken up. It has been understood all afternoon that it would be taken up.

Mr. WATSON. Of course, I did not know about that.

Mr. JONES. I have been in touch with the leader on this side all afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the conference report?

Mr. WATSON. The Senator has no objection to the adoption of my motion, has he?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. WATSON. After the radio bill is made the unfinished business I will temporarily lay it aside.

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4937, continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business, the radio bill, temporarily be laid aside.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I present a report from the Committee on Immigration and ask that with it be printed the House report, and a letter from the Department of Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS

Mr. JONES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 46, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the word "foreign," and at the end of line 8, page 1, change the period to a comma and insert the words "the Great Lakes excepted," and on page 2, at the end of line 3, change the period to a comma and insert the words "the Great Lakes excepted"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a comprehensive study of load line legislation in the coastwise and intercoastal trade and the Great Lakes, and all types of vessels, and shall submit his report to the Houses of Congress in the month of December, 1929, accompanying such report with tentative draft of a bill to effectuate the recommendations embodied in said report."

And the House agree to the same.

W. L. JONES,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WALLACE H. WHITE, JR.,
FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
A. M. FREE,
EWIN L. DAVIS,
S. O. BLAND,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the report unanimous?

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall ask that the report go over under the rule if the Senator moves to proceed to the consideration of it now. Is the report unanimous?

Mr. JONES. I want to explain it. We first had a unanimous report, signed by all the conferees on the part of the House and all the conferees on the part of the Senate. The report went to the House, and a point of order was made against it on the ground that there was a provision in it for further investigation by the Secretary of Commerce. The bill went back to conference, and we agreed on the same thing we had agreed on before, except that we left out that provision.

Then all the conferees signed the report, both Democrats and Republicans. The Democratic members of the House conference committee said, "We do not care about signing the report," but said they would make no opposition to it. It went back and was adopted by the House with very little trouble.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The conference report has been adopted by the House?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report. That motion is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me make just a brief explanation. This is the load-line legislation. We passed the bill through the Senate at the last session and it has been over in the House ever since. The bill as it passed the Senate applied the load-line principle only to vessels in foreign trade. It was understood that under the language of the bill the Great Lakes were excepted. The bill went to the House as I have stated.

The bill as agreed to by the conferees is substantially the bill that passed the Senate with the express provision that the Great Lakes are excepted. That in brief is what the conference report is. The Senate bill has been practically agreed to in every respect. The House receded from their amendment applying the legislation to coastwise trade, so that the legislation does not apply in any way to coastwise trade. It simply applies to vessels engaged in foreign trade. The trade on the Great Lakes is expressly excepted, as the Senate committee believes it was excepted by the language of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I would like to ask, before we proceed with any discussion of the conference report, if there was some change made in the conference report to-day. Is the situation the same as it was when I discussed the matter yesterday with the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. There has been no change to-day. On yesterday we had the new conference and we struck out all of section 9, which dealt with coastwise trade, and also the amendment cutting out the word "foreign" from the bill. The word "foreign" was restored in section 1 so as to make it clear that it applies only to foreign trade. Section 9 was all stricken out so that there was no application whatever to the coastwise trade.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator is right, but I have just looked over the report——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment.

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Of course, I know we have been here all day and we were here nearly all night last night. If it is satisfactory to the Senator and if the Senate would prefer, I am perfectly willing to let the conference report go over until morning, with my motion pending.

Mr. COPELAND. There are certain serious objections to the bill which perhaps will be explained away by the Senator from Washington, but I would not be willing to let the conference report be adopted now without giving consideration to it.

Mr. JONES. The Senator possibly can examine it to-night. I ask that the conference report may go over, retaining its position, until the opening of the session to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, MONTGOMERY, LA.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a bill from the House (H. R. 16725) authorizing L. L. Thompsen, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Red River at or near Montgomery, La., may be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the bill was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, L. L. Thompsen, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, across the Red River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Montgomery, La., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Louisiana, any political subdivision thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation of expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of five years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 3. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Louisiana, or by any municipality or other political subdivision or public agency thereof, under the provisions of section 2 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. L. L. Thompsen, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the State of Louisiana, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of the State of Louisiana shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said L. L. Thompsen, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, shall make available all of his records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 5. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to L. L. Thompsen, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 6. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000 shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the State in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required, and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway department of the State in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof; and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill No. 5720, of the same title, will be indefinitely postponed.

MEMORIAL TO OSCAR S. STRAUS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 377) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a monument or memorial to Oscar S. Straus, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to select a suitable site and to grant permission to any association or associations organized within two years from the date of the approval of this resolution for that purpose, to erect as a gift to the people of the United States, on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., a monument or memorial in memory of Oscar S. Straus: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the monument or memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts; that it shall be erected under the supervision of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital; and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of said monument or memorial.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, when the calendar was called this afternoon the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to a bill——

Mr. NORRIS. Just a moment, Mr. President. I want to appeal to Senators not to try to bring up any other bills to-night. We are going to have an executive session, I understand; the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has agreed to lay aside his conference report, and I must object to any other business being called up in this way to-night.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it is my desire to ask for an executive session and then to move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning and then, after the radio bill is before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to complete the call of unobjected bills on the calendar beginning where we left off to-night.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, that is what I was just about to ask.

Mr. CURTIS. At the request of many Senators, I will change the hour of meeting until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me make an inquiry, because I did this yesterday and we seem to have gotten into a jam about it to-day. Will we be privileged to consider matters on which committees are ready to make reports?

Mr. CURTIS. Reports can be made, but if there are no reports several Senators say they will object to taking up bills. They do not care to consent to the consideration of bills where there is no report accompanying the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TRANSFER OF FEDERAL LAND TO SAVANNAH, GA.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. KEYES] be now permitted to submit a report to the Senate. I think I can explain in one minute what it is, and then I shall have no objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KEYES. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 17026) granting a part of the Federal building site at Savannah, Ga., to the city of Savannah for street purposes, and I submit a report (No. 2037) thereon.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. It simply authorizes the Treasury, in its discretion, to exchange not to exceed 22 feet of land for 65 feet of land in the city of Savannah. It is a necessary exchange for the public building authorized at Savannah.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I feel inclined to object. We can take all these matters up to-morrow. Every Senator in the Chamber is now on his feet evidently wanting something done, and I object to any further business of this kind to-night.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, June 30, 1930, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WOOD, Mr. CRAMTON, and Mr. BYRNS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. DALE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5875) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Niobrara, Nebr., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 2027) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 16982) authorizing J. E. Robinson, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Coffeeville, Ala. (Rept. No. 2028);

A bill (H. R. 17140) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mahoning River at or near Warren, Trumbull County, Ohio (Rept. No. 2032);

A bill (H. R. 17141) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of an overhead viaduct across the Mahoning River at or near Niles, Trumbull County, Ohio (Rept. No. 2033); and

A bill (H. R. 17185) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill. (Rept. No. 2034).

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17060) to readjust the commissioned personnel of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2036) thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16440) relating to declarations of intention in naturalization proceedings, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 2035) thereon.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 14089) for the relief of Dale S. Rice (Rept. No. 2038); and

A bill (H. R. 17101) to accept the cession by the State of Colorado of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Rocky Mountain National Park, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2039).

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6705) for the relief of Clotilda Freund (Rept. No. 2040);

A bill (H. R. 10321) for the relief of B. P. Stricklin (Rept. No. 2041); and

A bill (H. R. 14583) for the relief of A. Brizard (Inc.) (Rept. No. 2042).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2268) for the relief of William Zeiss, administrator of William B. Reaney, survivor of Thomas Reaney and Samuel Archbold (Rept. No. 2043);

A bill (H. R. 6698) for the relief of William C. Schmitt (Rept. No. 2044);

A bill (H. R. 8691) for the relief of Helen Gray (Rept. No. 2045);

A bill (H. R. 9396) to compensate Eugenia Edwards, of Saluda, S. C., for allowances due and unpaid during the World War (Rept. No. 2046);

A bill (H. R. 11339) for the relief of the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased (Rept. No. 2047);

A bill (H. R. 12255) for the relief of Martha C. Booker, administratrix of the estate of Hunter R. Booker, deceased; H. H. Holt; and Annie V. Groome, administratrix of the estate of Nelson S. Groome, deceased (Rept. No. 2048);

A bill (H. R. 13734) for the relief of James McGourty (Rept. No. 2049);

A bill (H. R. 13801) for the relief of John Bowie (Rept. No. 2050);

A bill (H. R. 14022) for the relief of Felix Cole for losses incurred by him arising out of the performance of his duties in the American Consular Service (Rept. No. 2051); and

A bill (H. R. 16535) authorizing the Secretary of War to execute a satisfaction of a certain mortgage given by the Twin City Forge & Foundry Co. to the United States of America (Rept. No. 2052).

Mr. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 16089) for the relief of Elizabeth Quinerly Cummings (Rept. No. 2053);

A bill (H. R. 16090) for the relief of Hugh Dortch (Rept. No. 2054); and

A bill (H. R. 16122) for the relief of E. Schaaf-Regelman (Rept. No. 2055).

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10912) to reimburse or compensate Capt. John W. Elkins, jr., for part of salary retained by War Department and money turned over to same by him (Rept. No. 2056); and

A bill (H. R. 16342) for the relief of Clyde H. Tavenner (Rept. No. 2057).

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7174) granting compensation to William T. Ring (Rept. No. 2058); and

A bill (H. R. 8401) for the relief of Jack Mattson (Rept. No. 2059).

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5995) for the relief of John F. O'Neil, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2060) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 5631) to amend the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2061) thereon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION TREATY, ADDING INFRACTIONS OF LAWS CONCERNING POISONOUS SUBSTANCES TO OFFENSES COVERED IN EXTRADITION TREATY OF JANUARY 6, 1909

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I submit herewith a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and the Republic of France, signed at Paris on January 15, 1929, adding "Infractions of the laws concerning poisonous substances" to the list of crimes and offenses on account of which extradition may be granted under the convention concluded between the United States and France on January 6, 1909.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 11, 1929.

To the PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and the Republic of France, signed at Paris on January 15, 1929, adding "Infractions of the laws concerning poisonous substances," to the list of crimes and offenses on account of which extradition may be granted under the convention concluded between the United States and France on January 6, 1909.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 9, 1929.

The United States of America and the Republic of France being desirous of enlarging the list of crimes and offences on account of which extradition may be granted under the Convention concluded between the United States and France January 6, 1909, have resolved to conclude a supplementary Convention for this purpose and have appointed for that purpose the following plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Mr. Norman Armour, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the United States of America at Paris, and

The President of the French Republic:

His Excellency M. Aristide Briand, Minister for Foreign Affairs; who have agreed to and concluded the following articles:—

ARTICLE I

To the list of crimes and offences numbered 1 to 15 in the second article of the said Convention of January 6, 1909, the following, contained in a paragraph 16, is added:

16. Infractions of the laws concerning poisonous substances.

ARTICLE II

The present Convention shall be considered as an integral part of the said extradition Convention of January 6, 1909, and the second article thereof shall be read as if the list of crimes and offences therein contained had originally comprised the additional infractions of the laws specified and numbered 16 in the first article of the present Convention.

The present Convention shall be ratified and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Paris as soon as possible.

It shall come into force ten days after its publication in conformity with the laws of the High Contracting Parties and it shall continue and terminate in the same manner as the said Convention of January 6, 1909.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention in duplicate and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Paris, this 15 day of January 1929.

ARBITRATION WITH NORWAY

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Norway, signed at Washington on February 20, 1929.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1929.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Norway, signed at Washington on February 20, 1929.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 21, 1929.

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Norway

Determined to prevent so far as in their power lies any interruption in the peaceful relations that have always existed between the two nations;

Desirous of reaffirming their adherence to the policy of submitting to impartial decision all justiciable controversies that may arise between them; and

Eager by their example not only to demonstrate their condemnation of war as an instrument of national policy in their mutual relations, but also to hasten the time when the perfection of international arrangements for the pacific settlement of international disputes shall have eliminated forever the possibility of war among any of the Powers of the world;

Have decided to conclude a new treaty of arbitration enlarging the scope and obligations of the arbitration convention signed at Washington on April 4, 1908, which expired by limitation on June 24, 1928, and for that purpose they have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

His Majesty the King of Norway:

Mr. H. H. Bachke, His Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

Who, having communicated to one another their full powers found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

All differences relating to international matters in which the High Contracting Parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, which if they have been referred to the Permanent International Commission constituted pursuant to the treaty signed at Washington June 24, 1914, have not been adjusted as a result of this procedure, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the Convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other competent tribunal, as shall be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, define its powers, state the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference.

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States of America by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and on the part of the Kingdom of Norway in accordance with the constitutional laws of that Kingdom.

ARTICLE II

The provisions of this treaty shall not be invoked in respect of any dispute the subject matter of which

(a) is within the domestic jurisdiction of either of the High Contracting Parties,

(b) involves the interests of third Parties,

(c) depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, commonly described as the Monroe Doctrine,

(d) depends upon or involves the observance of the obligations of Norway in accordance with the Covenant of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE III

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof and by the Kingdom of Norway in accordance with its constitutional laws.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible, and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of the ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by one year's written notice given by either High Contracting Party to the other.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate in the English and Norwegian languages, both texts having equal force, and hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Washington the twentieth day of February in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN AFRICA

In executive session this day the following convention was ratified, and on motion of Mr. BORAH the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom and from the resolution agreed to in connection therewith:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the convention relating to the liquor traffic in Africa, signed at St. Germain-en-Laye on September 10, 1919.

I further transmit for the information of the Senate a report from the Secretary of State recommending that this convention be ratified with a reservation in regard to arbitral procedure.

Article 8 provides for the submission of disputes arising with respect to the application of the convention to an arbitral tribunal in conformity with the provisions of the covenant of the League of Nations. The Secretary of State feels that this Government should not be bound by the procedure provided for in that article and suggests the adoption of a reservation to the effect that any disputes in which the United States may be concerned, relating to the application of the convention, shall be submitted by agreement with the other parties and in accordance with their constitutional procedure to a court of arbitration constituted in accordance with The Hague convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other court of arbitration.

I concur in the recommendation made by the Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 22, 1928.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a certified copy of the convention relating to the liquor traffic in Africa which was signed at St. Germain-en-Laye on September 10, 1919, on behalf of the United States, Belgium, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and Portugal. This convention has been ratified by all the signatory powers with the exception of the United States and Italy.

The purpose of the convention is to continue the struggle against the dangers of alcoholism to African natives through the prohibition of the importation of trade spirits and of beverages injurious to health into the territories in Africa under the control of the contracting parties, excepting Algiers, Tunis, Morocco, Libya, Egypt, and the Union of South Africa and into islands lying within 100 nautical miles of the coast; by the imposition of heavy duties on the importation of other distilled beverages into those territories; and by the prohibition of the manufacture of distilled beverages in the same regions and of the importation and possession of distilling apparatus. Certain exceptions are made in regard to pharmaceutical alcohols required for medical, surgical, or pharmaceutical establishments and for distilling apparatus for similar uses.

Article 7 of the convention provides for the establishment of a central international office placed under the control of the League of Nations, for the purpose of collecting and preserving documents exchanged by the contracting parties, pertaining to the application of certain provisions of the convention. This article also requires that each of the contracting parties shall publish an annual report showing the quantities of spirituous beverages imported or manufactured in the territories concerned and the duties levied and that a copy of this report shall be sent to the central international office and to the secretary general of the League of Nations. The provisions of article 7 obviously would have no application to the United States.

Article 8 provides that in the event of any dispute arising between parties to the convention relating to the application of the convention which can not be settled by negotiation, the dispute shall be submitted to an arbitral tribunal in conformity with the covenant of the League of Nations. As this country is not a member of the League of Nations, it is suggested that in giving its advice and consent to ratification the Senate may desire to make a reservation providing for arbitral reference to some other tribunal.

The United States is a party to the convention for the regulation of the importation of spirituous liquors into certain regions of Africa, signed at Brussels on June 8, 1899, and to the convention signed at Brussels on November 3, 1906, revising the duties imposed by the Brussels convention of June 8, 1899. Chapter VI of the act of Brussels of July 2, 1890, for the repression of the African slave trade, to which the United States is also a party, provides for the restriction of traffic in spirituous liquors.

The first paragraph of article 11 of the convention relating to the liquor traffic in Africa, signed at St. Germain-en-Laye on September 10, 1919, which is the subject of the present report, abrogates the provisions of former general international conventions relating to the matters dealt with in the present convention in so far as they are binding between the powers which are parties to the present convention. Such provisions of those international acts are therefore no longer in force between Belgium, the British Empire, France, Japan, and Portugal, although they are still in force as respects the United States.

While the present convention would in its application impose definite obligations only upon States having colonial possessions in Africa, it is in harmony with the attitude of the United States with respect to the liquor traffic in Africa as expressed in the earlier conventions. It is believed that this Government should continue to give its moral support to efforts to safeguard the natives of Africa from the dangers of uncontrolled liquor traffic. By ratification of the present convention it would place its relationship to those matters on the basis now subsisting between Belgium, the British Empire, France, Japan, and Portugal in place of the provisions of the older acts which have been so largely abandoned. It is recommended, therefore, that the Senate be requested to give its advice and consent to ratification of the convention, subject to a reservation in respect of the arbitration of disputes.

Accordingly, it is recommended that, if this course meets with your approval, the Senate be requested to take suitable action advising and consenting to ratification of the convention of 1919 relating to the liquor traffic in Africa subject to a reservation that the United States reserves the right to submit any dispute in which it may be concerned, relating to the application of the convention, by agreement with the other parties and in accordance with the constitutional procedure of each State to a court of arbitration constituted in accordance with The Hague Convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other court of arbitration.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

CONVENTION RELATING TO THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN AFRICA.

[Translation]

The United States of America, Belgium, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan and Portugal;

Whereas it is necessary to continue in the African territories placed under their administration the struggle against the dangers of alcoholism which they have maintained by subjecting spirits to constantly increasing duties;

Whereas, further, it is necessary to prohibit the importation of distilled beverages rendered more especially dangerous to the native populations by the nature of the products entering into their composition or by the opportunities which a low price gives for their extended use;

Whereas, finally, the restrictions placed on the importation of spirits would be of no effect unless the local manufacture of distilled beverages was at the same time strictly controlled;

Have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

The Honorable Frank Lyon Polk, Under-Secretary of State;
The Honorable Henry White, formerly Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States at Rome and Paris;

Mr. Louis-Lucien Klotz, Minister of Finance;
Mr. André Tardieu, Commissary-General for Franco-American Military Affairs;
Mr. Jules Cambon, Ambassador of France;

HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF ITALY:

The Honorable Tommaso Tittoni, Senator of the Kingdom, Minister for Foreign Affairs;
The Honorable Vittorio Scialoja, Senator of the Kingdom;
The Honorable Maggiorino Ferraris, Senator of the Kingdom;
The Honorable Guglielmo Marconi, Senator of the Kingdom;
The Honorable Silvio Crespi, Deputy;

HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR OF JAPAN:

Viscount Chinda, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of H. M. the Emperor of Japan at London;
Mr. K. Matsui, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of H. M. The Emperor of Japan at Paris;

THE PRESIDENT OF THE PORTUGUESE REPUBLIC:

Dr. Affonso da Costa, formerly President of the Council of Ministers;
Dr. Augusto Luiz Vieira Soares, formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs;

Who, having communicated their full powers found in good and due form,

Have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1

The High Contracting Parties undertake to apply the following measures for the restriction of the liquor traffic in the territories which are or may be subjected to their control throughout the whole of the continent of Africa, with the exception of Algiers, Tunis, Morocco, Libya, Egypt, and the Union of South Africa.

The provisions applicable to the continent of Africa shall also apply to the islands lying within 100 nautical miles of the coast.

ARTICLE 2

The importation, distribution, sale and possession of trade spirits of every kind, and of beverages mixed with these spirits, are prohibited in the area referred to in Article 1. The local Governments concerned will decide respectively which distilled beverages will be regarded in their territories as falling within the category of trade spirits. They will endeavor to establish a nomenclature and measures against fraud as uniform as possible.

ARTICLE 3

The importation, distribution, sale and possession are also forbidden of distilled beverages containing essential oils or chemical products which are recognised as injurious to health, such as thuyone, star anise, benzoic aldehyde, salicylic ethers, hyssop and absinthe.

The local Governments concerned will likewise endeavor to establish by common agreement the nomenclature of those beverages whose importation, distribution, sale and possession according to the terms of this provision should be prohibited.

ARTICLE 4

An import duty of not less than 800 francs per hectolitre of pure alcohol shall be levied upon all distilled beverages, other than those indicated in Articles 2 and 3, which are imported into the area referred to in Article 1, except in so far as the Italian colonies are concerned, where the duty may not be less than 600 francs.

The High Contracting Parties will prohibit the importation, distribution, sale and possession of spirituous liquors in those regions of the area referred to in Article 1 where their use has not been developed.

The above prohibition can be suspended only in the case of limited quantities destined for the consumption of non-native persons, and imported under the system and conditions determined by each Government.

ARTICLE 5

The manufacture of distilled beverages of every kind is forbidden in the area referred to in Article 1.

The importation, distribution, sale and possession of stills and of all apparatus or portions of apparatus suitable for distillation of alcohol and the redistillation of brandies and spirits are forbidden in the same area, subject to the provisions of Article 6.

The provisions of the two preceding paragraphs do not apply to the Italian colonies; the manufacture of distilled beverages, other than those specified in Articles 2 and 3, will continue to be permitted therein, on condition that they are subject to an excise duty equal to the import duty established in Article 4.

ARTICLE 6

The restrictions on the importation, distribution, sale, possession and manufacture of spirituous beverages do not apply to pharmaceutical alcohols intended for medical, surgical or pharmaceutical establishments. The importation, distribution, sale and possession are also permitted of:

(1) Testing stills, that is to say, the small apparatus in general use for laboratory experiments, which are employed intermittently, are not fitted with rectifying heads, and the capacity of whose retort does not exceed one litre;

(2) Apparatus or parts of apparatus intended for experiments in scientific institutions;

(3) Apparatus or parts of apparatus employed for definite purposes, other than the production of alcohol, by pharmacists holding a diploma, and by persons who can show good cause for the possession of such apparatus;

(4) Apparatus necessary for the manufacture of alcohol for industrial purposes, and employed by duly authorized persons, such manufacture being subject to the supervision established by the local administration.

The necessary permission in the foregoing cases will be granted by the local administration of the territory in which the stills, apparatus, or portions of apparatus are to be utilized.

ARTICLE 7

A Central International Office; placed under the control of the League of Nations, shall be established for the purpose of collecting and preserving documents of all kinds exchanged by the High Contracting Parties with regard to the importation and manufacture of spirituous liquors under the conditions referred to in the present Convention.

Each of the High Contracting Parties shall publish an annual report showing the quantities of spirituous beverages imported or manufactured and the duties levied under Articles 4 and 5. A copy of this report shall be sent to the Central International Office and to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 8

The High Contracting Parties agree that if any dispute whatever should arise between them relating to the application of the present Convention which cannot be settled by negotiation, this dispute shall be submitted to an arbitral tribunal in conformity with the Covenant of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 9

The High Contracting Parties reserve the right of introducing into the present Convention by common agreement after a period of five years such modifications as may prove to be necessary.

ARTICLE 10

The High Contracting Parties will use every effort to obtain the adhesion to the present Convention of the other States exercising authority over territories of the African Continent.

This adhesion shall be notified through the diplomatic channel to the Government of the French Republic, and by it to all the signatory or adhering States. The adhesion will come into effect from the date of the notification to the French Government.

ARTICLE 11

All the provisions of former general international Conventions relating to the matters dealt with in the present Convention shall be considered as abrogated in so far as they are binding between the Powers which are parties to the present Convention.

The present Convention shall be ratified as soon as possible.

Each Power will address its ratification to the French Government, which will inform all the other signatory Powers.

The ratifications will remain deposited in the archives of the French Government.

The present Convention will come into force for each signatory Power from the date of the deposit of its ratification, and from that moment that Power will be bound in respect of other Powers which have already deposited their ratifications.

On the coming into force of the present Convention, the French Government will transmit a certified copy to the Powers which under the Treaties of Peace have undertaken to accept and observe it, and are in consequence placed in the same position as the Contracting Parties. The names of these Powers will be notified to the States which adhere.

In faith whereof, the above-named Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

Done at Saint-Germain-en-Laye, the tenth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, in a single copy which will remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the French Republic, and of which authenticated copies will be sent to each of the signatory Powers.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, February 28, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, O Lord God, that in Thee we have that wisdom and love in which we find our peace and opportunity. Cleanse us from all evil; bless our motives and make them chaste and pure. In diligence and devotion may we study the needs of our country, so that our public service shall flame with high quality. Bestow upon us the blessing of consecrated courage, and let our minds have the freedom of unfettered expression of the truth. Always and ever at the altar of the Republic may we offer the sacrament of allegiance, and may all its institutions serve man and glorify our Heavenly Father. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 8298. An act authorizing acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15850. An act authorizing the Bainbridge Island Chamber of Commerce, a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Agate Pass connecting Bainbridge Island with the mainland in Kitsap County, State of Washington;

H. R. 16954. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Chowan River, in Gates and Hertford Counties, N. C.;

H. R. 16955. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Camp Manufacturing Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Meherrin River, in Hertford County, N. C.; and

H. R. 16958. An act to provide an appropriation for the payment of claims of persons who suffered damages from deaths, personal injuries, or property loss due to an airplane accident at Langin Field, Moundsville, W. Va., July 10, 1921.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 349. An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13981. An act to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases; and

H. R. 16714. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16878) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. STECK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Joint resolution for the amendment of the acts of February 2, 1903, and March 3, 1905, as amended, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment thereto, therein, or through of livestock, including poultry, from a State or Territory or portion thereof where a livestock or poultry disease is found to exist which is not covered by regulatory action of the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

RETIREMENT FUND—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, when we were considering the Government employees' retirement fund bill, I made certain statements relative to the amount that the Federal Government is appropriating toward that fund at the present time. I received a letter from a resident of the District this morning challenging that part of my statement in which I said that the Federal Government is contributing $19,950,000 annually to the Government employees' retirement fund. In a gentlemanly manner he bases his criticism on an editorial published in the Washington Post, which I did not happen to see, which states that the Federal retirement fund is made up entirely of contributions by the employees themselves. This information is about as accurate as the Post generally gives when it does not agree with Congress or its individual Members.

I take this time to state that I think my original statement was absolutely accurate, and for the information of the Post, providing they can understand it, I shall extend my remarks, and in that extension give the actual dates of the laws and the amounts carried in each one, which information has been furnished to me by the Committee on Appropriations this morning. When I make statements of that kind on the floor of the House I am very careful to know that they are accurate, else I would not make them. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including the letter from Mr. Sheild, the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, and the memorandum of the laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The letter and memorandum referred to are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1929.

Hon. BERTRAND H. SNELL,
Chairman Committee on Rules, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SNELL: In accordance with your inquiry this morning I attach hereto a memorandum showing the appropriations made or pending for financing the liability of the United States under the retirement act of 1920 and acts amendatory thereof.

The memorandum shows the action of Congress to date for this purpose, and is exclusive, of course, of any sums appropriated annually for clerical and other expenses of the administration of the acts.

You will note that the appropriation in the Interior appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929 reads, "For beginning the financing, etc."

My own recollection of the matter has been strengthened by inquiry of the bookkeeping division of the Treasury Department, which verifies this information.

Respectfully yours,

M. C. SHEILD, Clerk.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS MADE AND PENDING FOR FINANCING THE LIABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES CREATED BY THE CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

In the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, approved March 7, 1928 (Public Act No. 100, 70th Cong.):

"For beginning the financing of the liability of the United States created by the act entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes,' approved May 22, 1920, and acts amendatory thereof, $19,950,000, which amount shall be placed to the credit of the 'civil-service retirement and disability fund.'"

Provision in the Interior Department appropriation bill (H. R. 15089), now pending in conference, for the fiscal year 1930:

"For financing of the liability of the United States created by the act entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes,' approved May 22, 1920, and acts amendatory thereof (U. S. C. 1887, sec. 707a), $20,500,000, which amount shall be placed to the credit of the 'civil-service retirement and disability fund.'"

LOAD-LINE LEGISLATION

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report is not yet printed?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. No.

Mr. CRAMTON. And, of course, if we give consent now no point of order would lie against the report. We have had no opportunity to learn what is in the report. Will the gentleman state to us wherein the present report differs from the former report?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. In the present report section 9 of the House bill is entirely eliminated, and if the conference report be adopted the law will apply exclusively to ships in the foreign trade.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw any objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. While it is disappointing to some of us, it is a very good step forward.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, the report is short, and I request the gentleman to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 45.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 46, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the word "foreign," and at the end of line 8, page 1, change the period to a comma and insert the words "the Great Lakes excepted," and on page 2, at the end of line 2, change the period to a comma and insert the words "the Great Lakes excepted," and the House agree to the same.

WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr.,
FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
A. M. FREE,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. L. JONES,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 1781, "An act to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes," submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee:

Of the 46 amendments adopted by the House, the Senate has receded from its disagreement to 44 of these amendments and has agreed to the same.

On amendment No. 3 the Senate has receded from its disagreement and agreed to the same with an amendment. In the form in which the amendment now appears, section 1 of the bill applies only to vessels engaged in the foreign trade, those on the Great Lakes excepted.

On amendment No. 45 the House recedes therefrom.

The effect of these changes is to limit the application of this legislation to merchant vessels of over 250 gross tons engaged in the foreign trade, foreign trade on the Great Lakes excepted.

WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr.,
FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
ARTHUR M. FREE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order for the purpose of eliciting information from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. What is the point of order?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am reserving the point of order for the purpose of eliciting information. If the gentleman does not care to give the information, very well. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I will yield after I have taken the floor to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. No.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, no point of order can be made against this conference report at this time.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to make the point of order. I ask the gentleman to yield for information.

A MEMBER. Regular order!

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has a point of order, let him make it.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is that the gentleman from Maine is entitled to an hour.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am very sorry that the gentleman from Maine is in the frame of mind in which he seems to be.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I think it is wholly within the rights of the House to require of me a brief statement as to what has been done by the conferees with respect to this matter. Without going into detail, let me state the general effect. If the conference report is adopted, the legislation will apply exclusively to vessels engaged in the foreign trade. Section 9, the controverted amendment put on in the House, has been eliminated in its entirety. Speaking for myself and speaking for many of the other conferees, I regret exceedingly the necessity which forced us to this compromise. I agreed to it only because of my conviction that I could get nothing more at this time. However, I give notice, if this is the proper place for doing it, to those interests which oppose the extension of the load line law to our domestic trade, that they want to clear their decks for action because——

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield at this point—because in the next Congress, if I know the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, there will be reported out to this House for the consideration of this House legislation——

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman declines to yield to me, and at the same time I rise to make a point of order in all seriousness. I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Maine, but he is now stating that he gives notice of what the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee is going to do later on account of the position that has been taken. That is not discussing this conference report. What the Merchant Marine Committee is going to do to certain people or to certain Members of the House at the next session of Congress has nothing at all to do with the consideration of the matter at hand. I think the gentleman from Maine should confine himself to a discussion of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, having been unable to hear anything that has gone on, on account of the disorder on the floor, is unable to rule; but he will ask the gentleman from Maine to proceed in order.

Mr. SABATH. In view of what the gentleman has said, is it a threat or a promise?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina five minutes to discuss the conference report itself.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I favor this conference report and intend to support it, and in justification of my support I desire to say that as it now comes in it carries out the will of the House, who at this time did not think it was wise to put all classes of shipping under the load-line legislation.

Now, there seems to have grown up some feeling among some of our committee in reference to the action taken here yesterday, when a point of order was made by me.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman is not confining himself to the conference report.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I will confine myself to it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I received a telegram this morning from one of the steamship associations opposing this bill, saying that they not only had a seagoing business but a coastwise business, and it would eliminate them from the coastwise trade.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I want to take this opportunity to say that I have a great deal of respect and admiration for the gentleman from Maine.

I rose primarily for the purpose of justifying, if I could, my support of the conference report as it now is. I think if this report is adopted this is as far as we should go at this time, as this question of regulation by governmental departments is a very serious thing. It enters into practically every activity of business in the United States. There are certain members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries who did not think this load-line legislation should apply to anything except the foreign trade, others thought differently, and that has been the controversy. I was one of the members who took the position that the legislation at this time should apply only to foreign shipping, and that accounts for my actions yesterday and to-day, and I am glad to know that the conferees have seen the wisdom of taking the view pursued by the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. CHALMERS rose.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I yield first to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, every important nation on earth except the United States has long since enacted load-line legislation to protect all its citizens and their property against the overloading of ships by those who have more regard for a little more profit than for the lives of the seamen and of passengers and the property of the citizens. We have been trying for many years to enact a law of this kind, not only in the interest of safety of life and property but also in the interest of that large class of shipowners who do not want to overload their ships; in the interest of that class of shipowners who naturally do not want to have to compete with the unscrupulous operators who have no regard for life. Efforts along this line have up to this time been defeated by that small element who have no regard for the safety of life and property, and who wish to continue loading their vessels beyond the line of safety.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries during the present session first reported out a bill applying a load line to all vessels going to sea of over 250 tons, whether they were operating in the foreign trade, in the coastwise trade, or on the Great Lakes. Then, as it was near the end of the session and opposition arose on the part of certain interests, and it appeared unlikely that we would be able to pass a load line bill which could be filibustered to death by a few Members of Congress, the committee, not because they had yielded their opinion, not because they thought it was legislatively or morally right, but in the interest of expediency, reconsidered the bill and made certain specific exceptions, and we passed the bill through the House in that form. When it went to the Senate it developed that there was strenuous objection in the Senate because of the exceptions we had made with respect to certain classes, and the bill went to conference. Every one of the House and of the Senate conferees favored the resolution which was adopted and which was in the first report of the House managers. We declared ourselves in favor of applying the load line to all ships, and that in the next Congress we would undertake to do that. But realizing that the friends of some of these interests could filibuster the bill to death, we agreed upon and reported out the bill excepting the coastwise trade and the Great Lakes from the operations of the bill, and substituting in lieu a section in which we directed the Secretary of Commerce to make an investigation and study of the advisability of applying this law to all classes of vessels and to make his report and recommendations to the next Congress.

It came to the House in that form, signed by all of the conferees. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY], who has been making a fight for the exclusion of barges, the most dangerous type of vessels of them all, made a point of order against the provision directing an investigation. Naturally he was afraid for an investigation to be made of the dangers with regard to barges and the necessity from the standpoint of human life of having the load line law apply to barges. So he made a point of order which the Chair saw proper to sustain. Now the conferees have reported the bill back without that provision. I declined to sign the last conference report, so did my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] because, speaking for myself and I assume it is his view also, I was not willing to make any further concessions to that class of people who are not only opposed to a law that would prevent them from overloading, loading beyond the line of safety, but also opposed to an investigation, inquiry, and report by the Department of Commerce.

The American Steamship Owners' Association, composed of fifty-odd of the leading American steamship lines, operating in both the foreign and the coastwise trade, advocated load-line legislation. They advocated it as applicable to all ships and said, "We are willing and anxious for it to be put on us, if you put it on our competitors." But now they are properly and logically objecting to the bill in its present form. They said, "We were not going to make any fight against a bill which contained a provision for a future investigation and report, with a promise of the consideration of the other classes of vessels in the next Congress, but," they said, "when those excepted classes put themselves in the attitude of even opposing a further investigation of the subject, we think the Congress is proposing to go too far and we are protesting against the passage of this bill." I have a telegram, received from them this morning, in which they are bitterly protesting against the bill in its present form.

Now, that is the situation with which we are confronted. I do not suppose I could, if I would, defeat this conference report, but I think it is wrong; I think it is discriminatory; I think it is unfair; and I think it is a yielding to some of the very interests who ought to have the load-line legislation apply to them, certainly as much, if not more, than the class to which we are proposing to apply it.

In response to a statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina I want to say that the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee is in favor of a fair and comprehensive load line, and I think that fact will be demonstrated in the next Congress, and in my opinion it will be demonstrated also that the Congress is in favor of it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. No; I decline to yield. My time is most too valuable. That investigation provision was a notice and an evidence of good faith, and it was an excuse for receding from our position and reporting a bill which does not include all classes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity of stating as a member of the committee that we regarded this bill as a great humanitarian piece of legislation and that the exemptions in the original bill were made with a view of the parliamentary situation. In view of the parliamentary situation, the conference report, it seems to me, ought to be accepted. The innovation, so called, of putting into the bill a declaration of policy for next session, may be criticized, but it does set forth the attitude of the committee.

My purpose in asking for these two minutes was to remind the House of the many confused situations during the last week of a short session and ask the Members to take notice of the fate of important bills, and read the ringing words of the gentleman from Virginia on the Dale-Lehlbach bill on yesterday. I ask the Members to read the RECORD of the other legislative branch on yesterday and last evening, and when we come back here next year let us vote to abolish the short session. It should be done. Let us think it over and realize the necessity while we are suffering from the effects of it. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS].

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, we of the Great Lakes do not oppose an investigation. We welcome it.

I want to say to the chairman of the committee and to others that, since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States 140 years ago, the Congress of the United States has appropriated $1,363,000,000 to develop the waterways of the country. Something has been said about the Great Lakes and transportation on the Great Lakes. Let me say this to the membership of the House: During the whole history of this country the Great Lakes have paid 10 per cent annually on all of the expenditures for rivers and harbors. I have that on the authority of the former Chief of Engineers, one of the best transportation experts in the country, Gen. Harry Taylor, and I have it on the authority of the present Chief of Engineers, General Jadwin. So we of the Great Lakes will favor an investigation, and we of the Great Lakes will welcome an investigation. We will be present at the hearings of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to present our case.

After the committee and the House understand the situation, as would necessarily follow in the orderly procedure of the House in presenting and passing a bill, then if the House wants to wring the neck of the goose that is laying the golden egg for water transportation in this country, well and good, but we of the Great Lakes will be here a year from now to present our case to the committee and to the House.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

BOISE NATIONAL FOREST, IDAHO

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1577) to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest, Idaho, with House amendments, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. COLTON, SMITH, and EVANS of Montana.

TETON NATIONAL PARK

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4385) to establish the Teton National Park, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes, with House amendments, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. COLTON, SMITH, and EVANS of Montana.

T. L. YOUNG AND C. T. COLE

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4848) with House amendments, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. IRWIN, GUYER, and BOX.

HON. EUGENE BLACK

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, after 14 years of able, faithful, and distinguished service, my colleague the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BLACK, will retire at the end of this session. I am sure I voice the sentiment of the entire membership of this House on both sides of the aisle when I say that no man holds deeper the affection, the esteem, and the admiration of the entire membership of this House than does the Hon. EUGENE BLACK, from the first congressional district of Texas. [Applause.]

The State Senate of Texas recently passed a resolution commending him, and I ask that it be read in my time to the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Simple Resolution 75

Whereas by concurrent resolution, the Texas Legislature recently directed the National Congress to questions in which the Southern States are vitally interested; and

Whereas the Hon. EUGENE BLACK, Congressman from the first Texas congressional district, was instrumental in reading into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD copies of resolutions urging the return of Confederate records captured by the Federals during the Civil War, and urging equalization of tariff upon raw and manufactured products; and

Whereas in discussing the contents of the two resolutions Hon. Mr. BLACK said, in part:

[Excerpt from CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 1, 1929, page 2629]

"Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, these two resolutions that have been read, deal with meritorious subjects. I shall not speak at length upon them at this time. The first resolution deals with Confederate military records which were seized during the Civil War and which some of the States desire now returned to them for their historical archives. I think that is a reasonable and proper request, and I hope it will receive the favorable consideration of the proper committee of the House.

"The second resolution deals with the subject just discussed by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE], the question of fixing tariff rates. Our legislature has asked that when the next Congress come to write a tariff law it shall give equal protection to the products of the ranch and the farm and the orchard as is given to the products of the factory and the mine.

"In the making of tariff laws under Republican administration heretofore industry has been the favorite child of protection, and the products of the farm, the ranch and the orchards have frequently been dealt with as the stepchild of protection by those who wrote the tariff laws. I hope that the Members of Congress from the agricultural States will see to it that in the writing of the next tariff law, equal treatment and equal justice shall be given to the products of the farm, the ranch, and the orchard as is given to the products of the factory and the mine. In doing that it will be necessary to follow some sort of a consistent rule, and I think the Democratic platform which was adopted at the Houston convention is as clear and fair a declaration upon the kind of a rule that should be followed as I have seen anywhere";

And whereas Hon. Mr. Black in his brief but able defense of the two resolutions stated correctly the position of Texas legislators and the citizens of Texas: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of Texas is deeply appreciative of the interest of Hon. Mr. BLACK in directing attention of our National Legislators to the contents of the two resolutions, and that we are further mindful of his deep and abiding interest in all questions that arise which touch historical, political, social, economic, and other interests of Texas and the South, and that in him the South has an able and fearless defender; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be enrolled and mailed to Hon. Mr. BLACK.

BARRY MILLER,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that Senate Simple Resolution No. 75 was adopted by the Senate on February 18, 1929.

BOB BARKER,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I subscribe to all contained in the resolution just read, and in addition I want to say just one personal word about GENE BLACK and his work in the House.

It takes a superlative degree of courage to be unpopular, and Mr. BLACK never dodged a single issue because of its unpopularity. To some few of the reports which I have made as chairman of the Committee on Claims to this House, Mr. BLACK has from time to time interposed objections. I have never questioned his judgment, and have thought that if our report could not pass the scrutiny of GENE BLACK, the report was wrong, or the committee had failed to present the case clearly and convincingly.

I regret the severance of his relations with the House and believe I voice the confidence and affection, the respect, and honor which every Member of the House accords him, together with the hope that the country again may soon enjoy the advantage of his experience, judgment, and valuable service in the House. [Applause.]

REPRINT OF H. R. 8305

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, some errors were made in the printing of the bill (H. R. 8305) on which I recently submitted a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent that the corrections may be made in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 8305) with certain corrections indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHILDREN'S TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIUM

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 13752) to provide for the construction of a children's tuberculosis sanatorium, with a Senate amendment, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

SOLDIERS DISCHARGED FROM ARMY FOR MISREPRESENTATION OF AGE

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3736) for the relief of soldiers who were discharged from the Army during the World War because of misrepresentation of age and consider the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, presents for consideration a Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read:

S. 3736. An act for the relief of soldiers who were discharged from the Army during the World War because of misrepresentation of age.

Mr. EDWARDS. Reserving the right to object, is this a Senate bill?

Mr. MORIN. It is. It was reported out by the House committee by unanimous report. It corrects the record of the soldier who misrepresented his age, but who served from April 6 until the end of the war.

Mr. EDWARDS. I shall not object, but we have many bills over in the Senate committee which we can not get out—bills along this line.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. These are boys who served all through the war.

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 3736) for the relief of soldiers who were discharged from the Army during the World War because of misrepresentation of age

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers of the United States Army, their widows and dependent children, a soldier who served as an enlisted man between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, and who was discharged for fraudulent enlistment on account of misrepresentation of his age, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service on the date of his actual separation therefrom if his service otherwise was such as would have entitled him to an honorable discharge: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion by Mr. MORIN to reconsider the bill was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 1440 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2410), to amend section 1440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That section 1440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Provided, however, That the foregoing provision shall not apply to any officer of the Navy on the retired list."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, that does not mean anything; I think we ought to have a statement from the gentleman as to what the bill does.

Mr. DARROW. The bill means exactly what it says. It permits a retired naval officer to be utilized in the Diplomatic and Consular Service. The act prohibiting that was passed in 1868, shortly after the Civil War, in order to protect the Consular and Diplomatic Service at that time. It is a matter that is urgently requested by the State Department and by the Navy Department. It does not entail any expense whatever on the Government, but it does permit, where it seems necessary, the utilizing of retired officers in the Consular and Diplomatic Service, particularly in some cases where there are outstanding officers who could render valuable service to the Government, or some disabled officer who could obtain a minor position without being compelled to sever all connection with the naval service. It has the unanimous indorsement of the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman's explanation is quite satisfactory, but it is a very poor way to draw a bill by adding a sentence without setting forth the provision amended.

Mr. DARROW. The bill was reported by the Naval Affairs Committee in the same form that it passed the Senate.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion by Mr. DARROW to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930. The statement is short, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho calls up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8 and 20. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 14, 16, 18, and 19 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$170,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$12,240,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$230,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$31,430,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1, of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 13, 15, and 17.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On Nos. 2 and 3, relating to the Naval Reserves: Establishes the limit on expenditures for maintenance and rental of armories at $170,000, instead of $160,000, as proposed by the House, and $170,000, as proposed by the Senate, the increase being intended to meet the expense of furnishing literature for the instruction of officers of the Merchant Marine Naval Reserve, and establishes the limit on expenditures incident to aviation at $882,931, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $859,875, as proposed by the House.

On No. 4: Makes available immediately $578,500 of the total sum available for "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy," as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 5, 6, and 7, relating to the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks": Modifies, as proposed by the Senate, the maximum price which may be paid for a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle and the present replacement cost figures of passenger automobiles to be exchanged.

On No. 8: Strikes out the appropriation of $400,000, proposed by the Senate, toward extending Dry Dock No. 2 at the Puget Sound Navy Yard.

On Nos. 9, 10, and 11, relating to the appropriation "Aviation, Navy": Makes available $230,000 for the procurement of helium, instead of $160,000, as proposed by the House, and $300,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 12 and 14, relating to increase of the Navy: Appropriates $28,550,000 for construction and machinery, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $22,750,000, as proposed by the House, making $200,000 of such increased sum, instead of $500,000, as proposed by the Senate, available toward the construction of the second increment of five light cruisers, authorized by the act of February 13, 1929, and appropriates $18,000,000 for armor and armament, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $12,000,000, as proposed by the House, making $200,000 of such increased sum immediately available toward the construction of the first increment of five light cruisers, authorized by such act of February 13, 1929, and a further sum of $200,000 available for additional machinery and equipment at ordnance establishments, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 16: Extends the provision denying the use of appropriations for the pay of persons engaged in making studies of the time consumed by employees in the performance of work to include studies of the movements of employees in the performance of work, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 18 and 19, relating to salaries, Naval Observatory: Appropriates $178,560, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $174,380, as proposed by the House.

On No. 20: Strikes out the appropriation of $154,000 proposed by the Senate for adjusting the rates of pay of the drafting group in the field services of the Naval Establishment.

The committee of conference has not agreed to the following Senate amendments:

No. 1, relating to the Naval Reserves.

No. 13, relating to the appropriation for "Increase of the Navy."

No. 15, relating to the improvement and equipment of navy yards for the construction of ships.

No. 17, relating to the performance of work in Government and private establishments.

	12,486,249
Amount of Senate recessions	634,000

[1] Covered by supplemental estimate—Senate Document No. 222.

Mr. Speaker, after the bill providing for appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1930 had passed the House of Representatives, the President signed the cruiser-aircraft carrier measure, which authorizes the construction of 15 cruisers and one aircraft carrier, the cruisers to be begun during the years 1929, 1930, and 1931, and the aircraft carrier to be begun in 1929. The whole program calls for a total expenditure of $274,000,000, exclusive, of course, of expenditures that will need to be met in placing yards in condition in which they may do efficient construction work and other expenditures in connection with equipment that will need to be cared for later on. Following the approval of the measure by the President, the President transmitted estimates to the Congress for commencement of construction work in the amount of $12,370,000; of which amount, $570,000 was recommended for improvement and equipping of navy yards; $5,800,000 was recommended for construction and machinery; and $6,000,000 for the procurement or manufacture of armor, armament, and ammunition, all to be expended upon the first group of five cruisers and one aircraft carrier.

The Senate modified the Budget recommendations to the extent of making $500,000 available for commencement of the second increment of cruisers, five in number, during the fiscal year 1930.

In addition to the foregoing the Budget recommendations included contract authorizations for navy yard improvement work to the extent of $1,725,000.

Your conferees insisted upon reducing the item of $500,000 that had been included in the appropriation bill for commencement of the second block of five cruisers to $200,000. We did this because we believed that the cruiser building program should be worked out along the most economical lines and that such economic program suggests an orderly placement of contracts and commencement of work within navy yards so that the cost of construction in any one year will not be unduly large.

There had been much demand, even among Members of Congress and upon the part of those who were pressing for the earliest construction possible, that 10 cruisers be laid down within a comparatively short time, some proposing five in June, 1929, to be followed by five in September.

The item carried in the Senate amendment made available $500,000 for the second group but nothing was stated in the language accompanying the item or in the discussions on the Senate floor, so far as I am aware, as to the time within which it would be expected the second group of cruisers would be begun other than that they would be begun during the fiscal year 1930. The small amount of money made available would suggest that they could not be commenced economically in September. On the other hand, it was freely talked that the plan was that they should be laid down in March next.

Your conferees believed that even such a program as this latter was unwise and accordingly insisted on a reduction in the amount to be made available, to $200,000, with the distinct understanding that it is an expression of the Congress that the laying down of the second block of cruisers will be one year from the laying down of the first block, and that June, 1929, may be considered as the date for the commencement of the first block and June, 1930, the date for the commencement of the second.

The papers to-day have carried the statement that the $200,000 for the second increment of five cruisers will be available for expenditure after July 1, 1929.

According to our conference report that statement calls for comment that ought to be placed in the permanent RECORD and made to the Members of this House at this time that there may be no misunderstanding. It is true the $200,000 that will be available for the second group of five cruisers is included in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1930, beginning July 1, 1929, and ending June 30, 1930.

In the Senate, when the chairman of the committee reported the conference report upon yesterday, the Chairman said, as he referred to the reduction of the amount available for the second group of cruisers from $500,000 to $200,000:

> This will enable us to start these cruisers under the terms of the cruiser law in 1930. They will be started, of course, at the extreme end of that fiscal year.

May I further advise the House that at the time that we were coming to an agreement on the item for the reduction of the amount for the second group of cruisers from $500,000 to $200,000, I stated distinctly in the conference committee that I wanted to be at liberty to state upon the floor of the House that we were "proposing making the money available for expenditure in June of 1930."

During my general discussion of the naval appropriation bill, I pointed out the reasons why in the building program we should so arrange our work that an even flow of construction would be carried forward in either the public or private navy yards in shipbuilding. An even load in naval construction work is economically sound:

First. It avoids a hump in construction cost which means a hump in number of technical and mechanical men employed in the several navy yards. By refusing to lay down 10 cruisers so that their construction would be commenced at approximately the same time, we are avoiding a hump that would appear in about 18 months from now that would aggregate approximately $25,000,000 in excess of what the construction cost would be just prior to that period and immediately subsequent thereto.

Second. An even flow of construction work will reduce to the minimum investment cost in navy yards.

Third. It will reduce to the minimum uneconomic competition between Government yards and private yards for technical employees and machinists and skilled laborers of all kinds.

Fourth. It will avoid as much as possible the employment in both public and private yards of large numbers of partially trained workmen.

Fifth. It will permit the Government to take advantage of lessons that may be learned through the construction of the first group of cruisers and apply improvements to ships that will be begun at a later date.

Sixth. It will avoid as much as possible the discharge of large groups of technical employees and skilled laborers upon the completion of an excessive amount of work that through an immediate large construction program would inevitably be required to be performed during the second year.

Seventh. It would remove in large part the demand of employees and centers of population where these employees would be engaged, for new construction work without regard to actual needs, merely for the purpose of keeping men from losing employment.

Eighth. It will avoid a course of construction that would be calculated to arouse suspicion upon the part of other nations toward the United States.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman carrying the inference to the House that the 3-year time limit originally desired by Congress is being lengthened to a 4-year time limit for the laying down of those 15 cruisers?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no. The gentleman evidently did not catch what I said. We are carrying in the bill money for the commencement of the first five cruisers within the present fiscal year, with the thought that they will be begun as of June, 1929. We are carrying $200,000 in the bill for the commencement of the second group of cruisers, with the thought that they will be begun in June, 1930.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman quite satisfied in his mind that $12,375,000 is sufficient to justify an assurance in the 3-year program; in other words, that all of these ships will be laid down within three years, and that they can be laid down under this sort of a start?

Mr. FRENCH. With $12,000,000 the first year?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me make a statement on that point. Before reaching the particular question that the gentleman raises, let me refer again to the estimated cost of the whole program.

Under the act the cruisers will cost, as it is estimated, $17,000,000 each, or a total of $255,000,000; the estimated cost of the aircraft carrier is $19,000,000; or a grand total of $274,000,000.

The carrier will be begun during the fiscal year 1930, and the cruisers should be begun, if regard be had for economies in construction, at intervals of about one year between groups of five.

The orderly construction of ships of this type covers a period of approximately three years each. The expenditure of money can not be made evenly on a given ship throughout the three years; that is, upon a cruiser that will cost $17,000,000, approximately $3,700,000 would be expended in orderly way the first year by the Bureaus of Construction, Engineering, and Ordnance. About $9,000,000 would be expended the second year, and about $4,300,000 would be expended the third.

On a carrier that will cost $19,000,000, the allocation of amounts to be expended per year will follow along approximately the same ratio as for the individual cruiser. From this it must appear that on a group of five cruisers and one aircraft carrier there would be expended normally during the first year approximately $20,000,000, during the second year approximately $53,000,000, and during the third year approximately $30,000,000. Should construction be arranged so that 10 cruisers would be undertaken at approximately the same time, the cost for the first year of 10 cruisers and 1 aircraft carrier would be between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000, the second year approximately $106,000,000, and the third year approximately $50,000,000 to $55,000,000.

Your committee, in studying this question, are most desirous of avoiding any such hump the second year, and for this reason we have insisted from the beginning that with the first group of five cruisers scheduled to begin in June, 1929, the second group should not follow along until approximately one year thereafter.

The gentleman from Illinois has asked me whether I think the amount recommended by the Budget is economically adequate for the commencement of the program.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not say for the commencement of the program. I am thinking about the finish of the program.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the gentleman has in mind the same thought that I have; in other words, the commencement of the program in such a way as to carry it to completion as to each group of ships within a period of three years for the group.

Mr. BACON. In other words, the first five will be finished within three years, and this is enough money to start the program so that they will be finished in three years.

Mr. FRENCH. I question very much whether the amount recommended by the Budget is an amount adequate for the most economical construction of the cruisers, and I would not be surprised that further consideration of that question by the department and by the Bureau of the Budget and by your Committee on Appropriations would result in our coming to the Congress next winter and asking for supplemental appropriations that would increase the amount for the coming fiscal year by some $7,000,000. What I have in mind is economical construction, the even flow of work that ought to be carried forward for the orderly building of ships and the orderly and economical expenditure of money.

Mr. BACON. As a matter of fact, is it not true that the so-called Dallinger amendment is going to retard the program a great deal?

Mr. FRENCH. I think it will retard the program and increase the cost, but the point is this: The amendment has been adopted, and your conferees in agreeing to the report have recognized that the Dallinger amendment is the expression of the present Congress, and we have shaped the bill in order to conform to the mandate of the Congress in the legislation that it has enacted.

Mr. BACON. In other words, as far as the Appropriation Committee is concerned, the money will be provided this year and next and the third year to finish the first five within the three years. And the only delay that will be caused will be due to the fact that the three out of the five ships will have to be built at navy yards, which will require quite a lot of time to enable them to do that. The delay is not going to be because of appropriations, but on account of the fact of the additional equipment needed.

Mr. FRENCH. I could not anticipate all the possible causes of delay in the next year. I had hoped the program would go through in the regular way.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman from Idaho stated that on account of the so-called Dallinger amendment there would be a delay, and also an increase in the cost of construction. Will the gentleman give to the House information as to what part of the delay will be caused by the Dallinger amendment and what part would be caused by the increased cost of construction?

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman include in that information the bids made by the Mare Island Navy Yard and the Bremerton Navy Yard on the last ships that were laid down, and tell how many thousand dollars cheaper those two yards bid on the cruisers than any of the private shipbuilding concerns?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman reply first to my question?

Mr. FRENCH. I am not able to answer the question, because it is impossible of being answered.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact that the appropriation has been increased by $1,795,000 on account of the so-called Dallinger amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. I think in large part that item of appropriation is increased on account of the Dallinger amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The Dallinger amendment having been agreed upon by the House and Senate, it will cause an additional expenditure of approximately $1,795,000, will it not?

Mr. FRENCH. The items to which the gentleman refers, carried in the Senate amendment, provided for increasing the facilities of navy yards, and I think in all fairness it should be said that part of that expenditure would have had to be made even had it not been for the Dallinger amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Would it not have required only about $550,000 increased expenditure if it had not been for the Dallinger amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. I think we must have yards enough equipped for the work to afford adequate competition in ship construction. Estimates would have been called for from navy yards and bids called for from private shipbuilding companies. When you require that three of the first five ships must be built—not may, but must be built—in Government navy yards, you force a condition upon Congress that requires it to make appropriations sufficient to bring enough navy yards up to the point where they can handle the work.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Therefore it is the Dallinger amendment that brought about that condition that will cause an additional expenditure of $1,200,000?

Mr. FRENCH. In part; yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact, and does not the gentleman from Idaho know, that the Dallinger amendment cost $1,200,000?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not think it involves that much at this time. We know not what the future may hold in store. But the 3-year time limit, plus the Dallinger amendment, made it necessary if we are to have regard for economical construction to expand the facilities of the navy yards. I have no doubt that had the amendment not been adopted it would have been necessary to have provided some of the yards with equipment and facilities and ways so that they could have stood as effective competitors with private shipbuilding companies.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact that three of the yards to-day are enough to bring about the necessary competition, and it is only necessary to have an expenditure of $500,000 to meet the requirements. And is it not a fact that the Dallinger amendment has caused the Senate to raise the estimates for the conditioning of these three yards to $2,225,000, and that this amount was reduced to $1,795,000 in conference?

Mr. FRENCH. I will give the gentleman the figures on the different yards, because they will answer the question as nearly as it can be answered. At the present time there are three cruisers being built at Government navy yards, New York, Mare Island, and Bremerton on Puget Sound. If you were to call for estimates to-day from the navy yards upon cruiser construction for 1930, the following yards would be able to offer bids, provided they could have the amount of money necessary to condition them, as I shall indicate: Boston could offer a bid for one ship if you expended $225,000 in conditioning the yard; New York could offer bids for two ships if you were to expend $150,000; Mare Island could offer bids for one ship if you were to expend $275,000; and Bremerton could offer bids for one ship if you spent $125,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. What about Philadelphia?

Mr. FRENCH. Philadelphia would not be in position to offer a bid unless you expended some money, but if you expended $500,000, that yard could offer a bid for one ship. In other words——

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman state to the House how much would be spent for final equipment?

Mr. FRENCH. If we are to put the yards in condition to do the work it would be incumbent upon us to allow somewhere near the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. How much money would that be?

Mr. FRENCH. I should say $775,000 all told for the following yards, Boston, New York, Mare Island, and Bremerton.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Then the view of the gentleman from Idaho is in accord with that of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER]?

Mr. FRENCH. No; I think not. In order to enable the yards I have indicated to offer bids at all in the way I have indicated we would need to appropriate this year $775,000.

If you did not require so many ships to be built in Government navy yards we would not need to put so many of them into condition to offer bids.

In the second group, following up my answer to the questions of the gentleman from Georgia, I shall first refer to Philadelphia. If $1,000,000 were expended Philadelphia could offer bids for two cruisers in one year from now, and if $500,000 were expended that yard could offer bids for one. Norfolk, with an expenditure of $500,000, could offer bids for one. Bremerton could offer bids, upon the expenditure I have already indicated, for one in 1929 and one in 1930. In this second group I have indicated amounts for yard improvements aggregating a possible $1,500,000, of which total your conference committee agreed upon the sum of $1,000,000, thinking that if next winter it would appear that we shall need further yards, or it looked wise to provide further opportunity for bidding in 1930 we could increase the amount by $500,000 at that time.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a matter of fact that the Navy Department was in position to have sharp competition without the Dallinger amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; with a much smaller expenditure of money. With the requirement that three of the first group of five cruisers be built in navy yards and that they be commenced within a year necessarily we felt it incumbent upon us to recommend the appopriation of these additional moneys to put the yards into shape to offer estimates.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The House having approved the Dallinger amendment you are merely carrying out the provisions of the Dallinger amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. That is what we have undertaken to do.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact that if the Navy Department and the Government had carried out the authority and instructions of the act of 1916 and kept the navy yards up to their full efficiency, as have all the other great powers, there would not be any need of any additional money on account of the Dallinger amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. If we had done that we would have already spent untold millions on the navy yards of the United States.

Mr. DALLINGER. But the act of 1916 authorized and directed the Secretary of the Navy to do that very thing, did it not?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, the law must be administered with regard for economies, and if we had done what the gentleman has suggested it would have cost the Government up to the present time millions of dollars for the upkeep of navy yards of the United States which have been saved to the Public Treasury.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. May I ask what provision is made for the Boston Navy Yard?

Mr. FRENCH. For the Boston Navy Yard for 1930 we are carrying $225,000. That is the amount we are carrying contingent upon the cruiser and aircraft program and is in addition to the amount carried in the bill as we explained to the House some two weeks ago.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I observe that the gentleman made the statement that it would require $125,000 to put the Puget Sound Navy Yard into the competitive class for the building of one of these cruisers.

Mr. FRENCH. That is the estimate of the department, and we have used their figures.

Mr. MILLER. From what department did you get that information?

Mr. FRENCH. The Navy Department, through the responsible officers.

Mr. MILLER. Did any bureau of the Navy Department recommend any such sum?

Mr. FRENCH. We had before us the Chief of Construction and Repair, Admiral Beuret, and we also had before us Admiral Yarnell, the Chief of Engineering, and in the presence of those two gentlemen the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair indicated the figure to which I have referred.

Mr. MILLER. Did they indicate what it was for? Did they give any items in their estimates?

Mr. FRENCH. Does the gentleman mean that they went into detail?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. It is for the general bringing up of the yard into condition so that it could make estimates, with the hope or belief that the work could be carried forward most efficiently. It is for the bringing up of the facilities of the yard generally.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is aware that they are building a cruiser there now?

Mr. FRENCH. That is right.

Mr. MILLER. And there is additional room in the construction dock for another cruiser of the same size, so that there will be no expense whatever in that regard.

Mr. FRENCH. But the department believes that for most efficient work in this yard it will be necessary to expend $125,000.

Mr. MILLER. If you will permit us to bid on those cruisers, that can be done without a dollar of additional expenditure, and we will go ahead. Now, another thing: Has the gentleman observed that of the six cruisers now under construction, the two built in the navy yards were $2,500,000 less than the lowest private bid?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, the gentleman refers to estimates, but he fails to tell the House that which I told the House during general debate, that these estimates from the different navy yards are just estimates; the yards are not required to live up to them, and the Congress is repeatedly called upon to revise the appropriation sums and to give additional amounts from year to year in order to carry to completion ships begun upon the basis of estimates in navy yards.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; and that does not apply alone to navy yards but also to private yards where we have recommended appropriations over and over again increasing the amount originally appropriated.

Mr. FRENCH. Under the cost-plus contract, that I hope we have abandoned and which grew out of the World War, what the gentleman says is true; but, as a matter of fact, under our present system no such condition as that will obtain. On the other hand, it is likely to obtain in Government navy yards in view of the legislation we have enacted requiring construction of ships in navy yards.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman be good enough to put in his remarks the bids of the private yards and the Government yards, for the information of the Congress, on the last bids which were received on the cruisers?

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman may make such speech as he cares to make. I have said that any such statements as that are not worth considering by the House at this time for the reason that the contractor is held responsible under his bond for his bid while the navy yard is not.

Mr. SWING. Let me make this statement in connection with that remark: The Mare Island Navy Yard, according to records of the Government, has completed every contract it has taken for construction within the past eight years within its cost estimate.

Mr. FRENCH. And that yard has done measurably better than other yards of the country, and I take it we shall not be able to place all naval-construction work in the navy yard at Mare Island.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield right on that point?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman says that the navy yard is not held to its estimates.

Mr. FRENCH. True.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But, as a matter of fact, the gentleman's experience on the Committee on Naval Affairs when that committee was making the appropriations and his experience on the Committee on Appropriations now will indicate that on every contract that has been given for a battleship or a cruiser to private yards the contractor has come in for an increased amount of money after the contract has been awarded.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FRENCH. That would be impossible on the same type of work except with respect to some of the cost-plus contracts that were made. We have gotten away from the cost-plus contracts. We have sometimes made changes in the structure of the ship itself that have entailed expenditures in excess of original plans.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly.

Mr. FRENCH. And in doing that we have incurred expense, but it is just the expense that you as a private citizen would incur if you had awarded a contract for the building of a home and then changed the plans during the time construction was going on.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that, as a matter of fact, when a private yard finds itself in difficulty on account of underestimating, changes are made so as to get around the estimate or the bid?

Mr. FRENCH. No.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Before the gentleman yields the floor will he answer one further question? Has the gentleman any knowledge of any navy yard ever having built a ship within the original amount authorized by Congress?

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman's question is a very comprehensive one, and I do not want to answer it offhand. The record is at the department.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not the fact with respect to every ship built at a navy yard in recent years that it has been necessary for the Congress to make additional appropriations to finish the ship?

Mr. FRENCH. Generally speaking, that is correct.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for just a short question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman also observe that there never has been a vessel built in a United States navy yard where an increased appropriation has been necessary unless the plans for that ship have been changed?

Mr. FRENCH. No; that is not correct; that is, to the full extent of the increase in cost. In other words, change in plans may have been responsible for part of the increase, but a great deal of the increase has been on account of the fact that the navy yard did not submit the accurate estimates it should have submitted at the time the estimates were made.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Page 10 of the bill, in line 23, strike out "$4,697,931" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,750,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "Exclusive, however, of pay, allowances, or other expenses on account of members of any class of the Naval Reserve incident to their being given flight training unless, as a condition precedent, they shall have been found by such agency as the Secretary of the Navy may designate qualified to perform combat service as pilots of naval aircraft, $4,740,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: Page 25, line 16, after the word "expended," insert the following: "(13): Provided, That appropriations contained in this act on account of 'Increase of the Navy,' except the amount of $500,000 made available toward the construction of the second five light cruisers authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929, shall be immediately available, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, for the employment of such clerks, draftsmen, and technical employees as may be required at navy yards, in field-inspection offices, and in the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, for the preparation of plans and the work of inspecting and constructing vessels building, such employees to be in addition to those otherwise provided for."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amendment No. 13: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "Provided, That of the appropriations contained in this act under the head of 'Increase of the Navy,' there shall be available immediately such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the engagement of technical services, including the purchase of plans, and the employment of additional clerks, draftsmen, and technical employees in the Navy Department and in the field owing to the construction authorized by the act of February 13, 1929."

The motion of Mr. FRENCH was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

(15) Improving and equipping navy yards for construction of ships: Toward providing and reconditioning building ways and providing additional equipment and facilities at navy yards and ordnance establishments necessary for the construction and equipment of ships, $570,000, to be immediately available, and in addition the Secretary of the Navy, upon approval by the President, is authorized to enter into obligations for this purpose, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $1,725,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$1,725,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,225,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

(17); and that no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, requirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as altering or repealing the proviso contained in section 1 of the act to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels approved February 13, 1929, which provides that the first and each succeeding alternate cruiser upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States except such material or parts as are not customarily manufactured in such Government plants.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Idaho yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. In regard to Senate amendment No. 8, providing for the docking facilities for the two airplane carriers, Lexington and Saratoga, in the Government yards on the Pacific coast. This, as I understand, was recommended strenuously by the Navy Department, approved by the Budget, approved by everybody, that there should be docking facilities at the navy yard to accommodate all vessels of war. I am simply pleading in behalf of the Pacific Battleship Fleet that there be a Government yard on the Pacific coast with docking facilities to dock our own vessels on that coast.

Mr. FRENCH. I explained the attitude of the committee at the time the bill was under general debate some 10 days ago. The particular item to which the gentleman refers was put on in the Senate and struck out in conference. The conference report has been approved by the Senate and just approved by the House. Therefore no further consideration can be given it until some other time.

Mr. MILLER. I understand it has passed in this bill but I hope the gentleman's committee has not sealed the fate of the Pacific Navy Yard.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman ascribes too much power to our committee. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Idaho to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert a statement made by the Baptist Young Peoples' Union as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the story of the achievements of the Baptist Young People's Union of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, Huntington, W. Va., by Franklin L. Burdette and Paul L. Webb.

I have a personal knowledge of the good service that is being rendered by this organization. All of the statements contained in the report of Mr. Burdette and Mr. Webb I know to my personal knowledge are true, and, in fact, this is a very modest statement with reference to the splendid work that they are doing.

The statement is as follows:

THE BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION OF AMERICA AND ITS RELATION TO PROGRESS

THE STORY OF THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION OF THE FIFTH AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH, HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

By Franklin L. Burdette and Paul L. Webb

The future of a community and of a nation can usually be forecast through the activities and training of the younger generations. The greatest empire can not retain its position in the eyes of the world if it is not constantly producing new minds embodying the ideals and principles of the fatherland. The very foundations of any nation must be laid upon the growth of youth. Every youthful mind contains the embryo of a great leader; every youthful thinker is a potential savior of his race.

Upon the development of these human resources, then, depends the future of our own country, the greatest republic that God has seen fit to establish upon the earth. It is the sacred trust of the family, the church, and the state to foster every adequate method for the proper training of those tender lives in whom lie the hopes of future greatness and expansion. It has been conceded that heredity is a great factor in determining the habits and thought of every child. In many ways the force of this heredity is uncontrollable, but there are many influences which tend to modify and perfect the character which is the birthright of every citizen of this land. Environment is a factor which in large measure polishes the rough edges of a seemingly crude character, or, unfortunate as it may be, nicks the smooth surface of the most refined nature. This latter factor may be directed in such a manner that every youth whose faltering footsteps are bent toward an ultimate disaster may become an upright citizen, a wise counselor, and a capable officeholder.

Since the creation of the human race the family has been the molder of the environment into which children are introduced. The family was the first divine institution, and it remains to-day the primary social institution of every race, civilized or barbarian. As the centuries pass, however, and the environment of the human race becomes more complicated, many of the activities which have lain only in the hands of the family are now intrusted to other agencies. Herein lies the possibility of a broader development and also the possibility of a national catastrophe. If the youthful mind can be brought into contact with clean, moral surroundings on a larger scale than in the family, this Nation has indeed a hopeful outlook upon the future. But if that same youthful mind should be placed in associations which are less elevating and inspiring than those of the family, the nations of the earth are doomed to hopeless chaos.

As the influence of the family upon the training of youth tends to decrease, the influence of the church tends to increase. In times past men have thought of the church as a place in which to worship God in the most solemn and ritualistic manner. In those days the church was not expected to participate in the training of youth for better citizenship. Its sole purpose was that of instilling an awesome dread of the divine God, a God of vengeance, into the untutored brain of youth. To-day the church is conceived as an institution for the dissemination of those great truths which have made this mighty Nation the land of the free and the home of the brave. The church has emerged from the enveloping folds of puritanic restrictions into the sunshine of truth. It is now prepared to proclaim a new God—a God of love and of mercy.

In this regeneration of the church young people have gained a glorious opportunity for a true development. By organization and by increasing interest in the affairs of the world young people have made themselves a more potent influence than at any other time in the history of mankind. It is the purpose of this article to relate the simple yet wonderful story of an organization which is typical of the efforts and achievements of young people throughout the length and breadth of this land.

Early in 1886 the young people in a small church organized themselves into a society for the purpose of teaching and practicing the great truths and religious principles for which this country was settled and for which millions of unsung heroes have laid down their lives. That church was the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, of Huntington, W. Va. To-day that church is the greatest Baptist church in the State in membership, buildings, and equipment equal to any. That young people's society, which later became one of the organizations composing the great Baptist Young People's Union of America, was the beginning of a great influence in the lives of thousands of young people. To-day that society is one of the best-known organizations of the Baptist Young People's Union in the United States.

The zealous heartbeat of that organization has never ceased to throb. Early in its history the Baptist Young People's Union of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church was courageous enough to oppose the sale of intoxicating liquor. At that time the liquor traffic was in its prime, saloons were wide open throughout the city, and the sale of alcoholic beverages was almost considered a reputable profession. Pioneering for the betterment of society has been characteristic of the Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue. The leaders and members of the organization have kept as the sacred keystone of their teaching the undertaking of such tasks. They have believed firmly that the city of Huntington and the State of West Virginia would be better places for American youth and American citizenship if such principles were woven into the statutory fabric of this Nation.

One of the great problems of any church is its finance. Too frequently young people are not permitted to participate in the affairs which pertain to the church budget. They are perfunctorily asked to subscribe to current expenses and missions by older members of the church who are unable to approach young people on a level of equality and understanding. The inherent enthusiasm of youth is dampened by such methods, and the result is far from satisfactory. When the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church was a small organization struggling for financial independence and for adequate equipment, the young people took the initiative in creating an atmosphere of fervent enthusiasm by which it was possible to raise sufficient funds for several needed improvements. One evening the young people invited the entire congregation to attend a meeting at which the topic "Our Church" was discussed. At this meeting many members of the church obtained a new insight into the character and ability of young people. Following the eager example of these young financiers, the congregation raised enough money to erect a larger and more beautiful edifice.

Faded and musty records reveal that the Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue did not confine itself to the financial affairs of the local church. On one occasion the Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue contributed money that inaugurated a movement for the founding of an institution that is now housed in a building worth nearly half a million dollars. This institution, with its magnificent building, is a constant source of pride to the citizens of Huntington. The sum contributed by the Fifth Avenue Baptist Young People's Union might be called small to-day, but it was enormous in the days when a church budget was no larger than the subscription of one wealthy member to-day.

Young people are often charged with spending money for purposes which bring no definite results and have no particular object. Young people are criticized for extravagant social entertainments. However true this may be of youth undirected and uncontrolled, it is not true of youth taught the principles of true thrift by conscientious leaders of organizations which have the welfare of humanity as a real aim.

The Baptist Young People's Union of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, functioning as it did, served as a fit place to train future lawmakers, future industrial leaders, and future commercial heads. From its assemblies they came trained to preside, trained to think accurately and reason logically, and trained to meet other people in every walk of life.

The present mayor of Huntington, the city treasurer, and other officials of the city were once active young people of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church. The judge of the circuit court in this section of the State was on more than one occasion president of the Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue. The owner of a manufacturing industry doing a half million dollar business in Huntington annually, the owner of a commercial establishment with a vast volume of sales, and bank officials who control much of the financial life of the tri-State region of West Virginia, Ohio, and Kentucky were once members of this Baptist Young People's Union.

It would be impossible to estimate the size of the vast multitude of men and women who have gone forth from the Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue into places of prominence and responsibility in the professional world—lawyers, physicians, dentists, surgeons, and a mighty concourse engaged in other occupations who are faithfully carrying on their tasks, large and small, in the world's work.

Many of those who were once active in the affairs of the young people of Fifth Avenue have gone to other parts of the Nation, whence reports of university leaders, corporation presidents, and prominent business heads slowly trickle in. Those who have remained behind are practicing in the church and in the larger field of human contacts those principles of business, of commerce, and of helpfulness which were taught by the Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue.

The Baptist Young People's Union is not, however, in any sense an organization for training business men, commercial heads, and leaders of other professional enterprises. The primary and fundamental purpose of every Baptist Young People's Union is training in Christian leadership for the betterment of the community. The more perfectly this objective is realized the more influential is the organization in the business and professional affairs of the world. As young men and young women are convinced of the truth of the Golden Rule, in practice as well as in theory, business ethics necessarily become cleaner and more upright. This great purpose of the Baptist Young People's Union was never forgotten at Fifth Avenue, and the great harvest in better human lives has proved the value of the conception which led to such results.

The Baptist Young People's Union has produced pastors of churches, professors in seminaries, religious leaders who now hold high positions in the denomination, teachers in the public schools, and founders of rescue missions. This splendid group of men and women have given the best part of their lives to the advancement of those principles which they learned from the Baptist Young People's Union. Many of these young people have attained prominence in new fields of activity, fields that modern thought is enlarging.

The Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue contributed trained leaders to one great enterprise which is international in its aspect. Missionaries were sent to foreign fields to become pioneers in opening up China to commerce, Africa to civilized trade, and many other nations to friendly relations with the rest of the world. The religious teachings of the Baptist Young People's Union so molded these individuals that they realized that their services could be more effectively dedicated to broader fields than Huntington and West Virginia. To-day they are extending the scope and influence of the principles that are theirs. Who can say how potent this influence will become in elevating the moral and social life of the world?

From the hazy uncertainties of yesterday and the vague hopes of to-morrow we build the realities of the present. To-day we behold a vast vortex of seething, whirling humanity which to-morrow will produce greater thoughts, mightier people, and a better civilization. Who can doubt that the young people of to-day will surpass those of yesterday? Who can doubt that the resources of the Baptist Young People's Union of Fifth Avenue, in numbers, in training, in knowledge, and in enthusiasm are greater than in 1886, 43 years ago?

What great advances will be made to-morrow we hesitate to say. The boys and girls of to-day, as all youth, were born equal; but in this age of advancement and progress every child within this land must keep up a pace the like of which the world has never known. Should there be a single hour of hesitancy, a single day of doubt, another will climb into a position higher on the ladder of success.

One statement we can make with confidence, for we believe in the youth of America, and we know that they are capable and willing successors to those who went before. As the world is filled with new executives, leaders, authors, philosophers, and scholars, America will ever be a shining example of the glory of freedom of speech, thought, and religion; and the young people of Fifth Avenue will continue to bear their share of the glad burden of the world, a burden of love and of labor.

SURVEY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a copy of the report of the Survey of the Government of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I present for the RECORD the report of the subcommittee which has been making a survey of the government of the District of Columbia. This report should dispel any thought that we have been devoting our time to the unearthing of scandals in the District government.
